Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Can he not make up those conditions in those subjects?

Mr. McCRACKEN. No; not at all.
Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Chairman, I want to say to the gentleman that I have a young man in the same position; although he served through his fourth class and was in his third, he failed in three of his studies. It is within the power of the academic board to put him back in a lower class. In this case they refused, but I have the privilege of appointing him again to take the examinations held in April, which I am going to do. Fortunately he is not 20 years of age, but I want to say to the gentleman that none of these boys were discharged. one was given the privilege of resigning, which they did.

Mr. McCRACKEN. Let me explain right there that I asked in regard to this so-called resignation and find that it is a forced resignation.

Mr. BROWNING. That is true.

Mr. BUTLER. That is true.
Mr. BROWNING. But they were not discharged. In the Military Academy they are discharged outright.
Mr. McCRACKEN. It amounts to the same thing.

Mr. BROWNING. Oh, no.

Mr. BUTLER. I am sorry the gentleman did not know of the remedy which the gentleman from New Jersey suggested. That boy might have been put back in the next class and his graduation postponed a year longer, which often occurs.

Mr. McCRACKEN. But he has passed the age of 20 years. Mr. BUTLER. That would make no difference, because he was admitted to the Academy when he was 19. There is no time limit set for graduation; it is for admission. The boy was already admitted there, and I am sorry that the gentleman finds himself in an awkward situation. If he consulted the Secretary of the Navy, there might yet be a remedy.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chair, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCRACKEN. Yes.

Mr. FESS. I was about to suggest that my candidate met with the same result, but I am not ready to state that it was not his fault. He was appointed after a competitive examination that I held, and he made very high marks upon the entrance. I thought he had an assured career, but in the work at the Academy he fell below the requirements. I am rather of the opinion that the rigidity over at the Academy is not to be charged against the teachers as any particular prejudice against the students. I do not believe that exists. I think that our boys simply do not get into the rigid methods of study that they require over there.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Idaho has expired.

Mr. McCRACKEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate upon the paragraph and all amendments thereto close in five minutes, two minutes to be granted to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY], one minute to the gentheman from Ohio [Mr. Fess], and two minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Emerson].

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has already recognized the gentleman from Idaho for five minutes. The gentleman will proceed, and at the conclusion of that time the Chair will put the request of the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I understood the gentleman from Idaho to make the statement that they were employing foreign teachers over there. Is it a fact that they employ foreigners to teach in the Naval Academy?

Mr. McCRACKEN. I am advised that there are instructors teaching foreign languages in the Naval Academy who have been in this country only a very short time. I do not know as to their citizenship. But these boys who are sent here from the farm and all parts of the country to this school come back and tell us they do not get any help there, and that is one reason also why they fall down on their examinations, and if that be true, it is time that somebody was making an investigation of the Naval Academy, especially of the gentlemen who constitute the faculty of that institution.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. McCRACKEN. Yes.

Mr. FESS. I think there is some foundation for what the gentleman says in regard to the foreign teacher teaching the foreign language. The rigid methods of both France and Germany in the schoolrooms are not what we use in this country, and our boys are not used to getting down and boning as they do over there. I think it is more difficult to meet the requirements of a teacher from France, for example, teaching French, or a teacher from Germany teaching German, but the fault is not altogether with the teacher. It is because our boys do not meet the requirements, and I think our friend will admit that he never knew a pupil to fail when it was not the teacher's fault.

Mr. McCRACKEN. I grant that is the case many times. Mr. PADGETT. I want to say to the gentleman from Idaho that the passing mark at the Naval Academy is only 621 per cent out of 100, which is a very low passing mark; so I think there is some unjust criticism of these teachers when you take into consideration that 62½ per cent of 100 is the passing mark, which is certainly not a severe standard.

Mr. McCRACKEN. I would like to say to the gentleman from Tennessee that there were 600 boys at the Naval Academy last year, and of that number more than 60 have resigned, which is tantamount to dismissal.

Mr. PADGETT. Sixty of the whole school; that takes in the whole school?

Mr. BROWNING. That is right, because my young man is in the third class

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman speaks of that as unusual. At the University of Virginia, while I was a student there, 89 men applied for a law degree and 30 got it. was an unusually large class, and I think the average of the college will show that there are more severe examinations and a harder test than at either Annapolis or West Point,

Mr. PADGETT. It is a hard standard, and a higher passing

Mr. STAFFORD. Does not the gentleman realize it is abcolutely necessary to have the midshipmen comply with the requirements of the professorial force rather than have the midshipmen determine their own standard of scholarship?

Mr. McCRACKEN. I will grant that; but I want to say that these boys do not get the help from the teachers at the Naval Academy, who are paid by the Government, which they ought to

Mr. STAFFORD. Boys are boys while attending either college or the Naval Academy, and they themselves know that if they do not apply themselves as assiduously as they should in order to make their lessons they will fail. Boys who want to make their lessons pass.

Mr. McCRACKEN. The gentleman has simply assumed that. Mr. STAFFORD. I know that from my experience in college, and I do not think there is any different status as far as the boys at the Naval Academy are concerned.

Mr. McCRACKEN. Would the gentleman from Wisconsin be in favor of giving a boy a chance to make up his deficiency? Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, I do not think a boy should be thrown out just because of one deficiency. I do not think he is thrown out if he merely fails in one study, but if he is deficient in more than one it is assumed he has not the mental capacity to meet the requirements of the test when in active service.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I went to school from the time I was a small boy until I graduated at college at the age of 19. [Applause.] Oh, I doubt very much whether when I was graduated at the age of 19 I could have passed the present requirements for admission to the Naval Academy. I know I could not unless I probably crammed for that purpose. Now, I have been a student all my life in school, and after graduating at college I took a course in a law school and was graduated at a law school. Now it would require three or four years at a law school, and if I had been going to a medical school as conducted now it would have required four years; and yet what do we require? We admit a boy at the Naval Academy at the age of 16, I believe, and it makes considerable difference in his windup whether he goes in at the age of 16 or at the age of 20. It make a difference whether he retires as a rear admiral if he lives. We expect a boy at Annapolis to learn all that a man is expected to learn at an ordinary classical college and various other colleges and universities, and in addition to that to become the most perfectly drilled man on earth. No other men drill like the most perfectly drilled man on earth. No other men drill like the boys at Annapolis and West Point; at least I never have seen any; certainly they are not in the Army or the Navy outside of those graduates. Then we expect them to know something of seamanship, something of gunnery, something of navigation, something of international law, something of a great many other things, and the human mind is not sufficient to grasp all of those thing at the age of 20, no matter how much study one can put in, and the result is that lots of boys who go to Annapolis, who would make just as fine officers as anybody who was ever graduated, get plucked on their way through. I never had that unfortunate occurrence come to any of my appointees, I believe, but I have had a good deal of difficulty getting boys into Annapolis and they have managed to stay when they got in; that is my recollection, although I am not so sure about that. If a man is going to study medicine, he will go through high school. He will not leave high school by the time he is 16. He will go through college, and he will not leave college now by the time he is 20, and then he will go through a medical school, and he will not leave that before he is 25, and then he will have to go out and be an interne in a hospital for two years, and after that he has got to go out and hang his shingle out and do a lot of work for nothing before he really commences his real professional work, and yet we suppose that a second lieutenant in the Navy is competent to man a vessel, and often he is required to do so; to know how to keep the country out of international difficulty and how to navigate a vessel. No wonder we have had a lot of naval vessels on the rocks.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate upon the paragraph and all amendments thereto close in five minutes as I indicated.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that all debate on the pending paragraph and amendments thereto close in five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. EMERSON] is recognized for two minutes.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Chairman, I rise for the purpose of asking the chairman of this committee a question. He made a statement a few minutes ago that we had three midshipmen

Mr. PADGETT. I did not say you had them there, but I said that you could appoint them.

Mr. EMERSON. I have not got three there yet.
Mr. PADGETT. Perhaps your predecessor had the places filled.

Mr. EMERSON. I am not supposed to have had any predecessor.

Mr. PADGETT. You had not?

Mr. EMERSON. No; it is a new district.

I do not understand that. There has not Mr. PADGETT. been any apportionments since 1910, when your State was redistricted; but your appointment came from the Congressman at large, I presume.

Mr. EMERSON. I do not know. Maybe he did not appoint from my district.

Mr. PADGETT. Whomever you succeeded had the places filled. There are three appointments for each Senator and for each congressional district.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Did we not create a new cadet during this present Congress?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Did not the gentleman from Ohio get that appointment? A new cadet was authorized for each Member at this present Congress.

Mr. EMERSON. I have not got even that.
Mr. PADGETT. There was an additional one created in the last session for each Member.

Mr. EMERSON. I have not had an appointee even under

Mr. PADGETT. The gentleman is entitled to it. Mr. EMERSON. I did not get it. I have called at the department and I have not gotten it.

Mr. KELLEY. My impression is, and it may be an explana-tion in this case, that if there was an appointment at large by some Member from your State in that district, that that would count from your district.

Mr. BUTLER. No; it would come from the State at large. Your Republican colleagues might have gotten Mr. SABATH.

away with the appointment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] is recognized for two minutes.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I have had some experience in the appointment of these cadets at Annapolis and have had several boys graduate from there, but I want to say that there is one thing about the Naval Academy I do not understand. Perhaps it is imaginary, but I know from experience that I have never named the son of an officer that he was not admitted, and always they were permitted to graduate. I believe that there is some foundation for the charge that is frequently made, that the sons of naval officers receive additional help at that institution that permits him to graduate. do not know whether that is true or not, but I do know that I have never had a boy fail who was an officer's son, and I have appointed some of them. When it comes to West Point, perhaps I have been unfortunate. It may be I am unfortunate in the young men that I have in my district, but I have been a Member of this body for almost 14 years and I have never yet been able to get a boy in West Point that they did not find something the matter with him, usually a physical defect.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, can I have one minute, that may raise my voice in this experience meeting?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I would like to say to the gentle-man from Washington that if he would have his boys come to Florida and stay a while, I think we would give them a physical make-up that would enable them to get through.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. If you did, I think you would do something with the efficiency of the Naval Academy rather than the boys.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, since I have been a Representative in this House I presume I have named 12 boys to Annapolis, and have never had one fail after admission. I have appointed them directly, with but very few exceptions. They are prepared in advance. I have never heard one of them say that they were suspicious that the son of an officer had better treatment and better advantage than the son of a civilian. And the boys I have named, with one exception, have all come from civil life—have been the sons of men in civil life.

Mr. PADGETT. Will the gentlemen yield for a moment

there?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.
Mr. PADGETT. Is it not a fact that at the present time the head man of their teams down there-the president of the class—is from the enlisted force?

Yes; he comes from the enlisted force. Mr. BUTLER

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Department of seamanship: Two coxswains, at $480 each; 3 seamen, at $420 each; in all, $2,220.

Mr. EAGLE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. EAGLE. If any of the gentlemen of this House have ever had any gratification, any satisfaction, in the matter of appointing cadets to West Point and to Annapolis, I congratu-I have had nothing but disappointment from beginlate him. ning to end.

When the matter arose of my selecting young gentlemen to our Naval and Military Academies, I concluded to give the civil-service plan a fair and impartial trial in my district.

I have had 19 young gentlemen, first and last, write me requesting that I designate them either to West Point or to Annapolis. I had 178 persons write me separate and distinct letters saying favorable things concerning one or the other of those 19 applicants. I wanted for once to rise to the stature of a disinterested statesman, and accordingly I announced that not for political or personal considerations but purely upon the merit of applicants such appointments would be made. two vacancies at West Point and three at Annapolis. candidates must be so many years old, weigh so many pounds, have flawless eyes, fine intelligence, a good education, and good morals; and hence I announced a civil-service examination to determine qualifications, and so I got the Civil Service Commission to hold the examination recently. I am not complaining about its work; I am talking about how the civil-service plan has worked in this matter.

Here is what happened: The civil service held such examination in my city of Houston, at the post office, beginning at 10 o'clock in the morning on January 10 of this year. Three months before that time, in order that everybody might have information concerning the examination, I had copies of instructions made on the multigraph, setting out the requirements of the Navy Department for admission to Annapolis and of the War Department for admission to West Point. Having done that-and it filled an entire page-I mailed a copy to each newspaper in my district, a copy to each of those 19 young gentlemen, and a copy to each of those 178 persons who had written to me extolling the virtues of those 19 young gentlemen; and with the notice thus duly given, the time fairly stated, and the place duly set, when the commission properly constituted sat to pass upon the qualifications of all the applicants in my district, only two young gentlemen came to take the examination, and one of them made 60 and the other 75 per cent. [Laughter.]

Now, what should I do about it? I do not know.
Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Appoint them! [Laughter.]
Mr. EAGLE. Appoint whom? Appoint the two? The three did not even apply, and were evidently not willing to stand the necessary examination. And now I am having many letters from some of those young gentlemen and their friends urging had a man graduate at the Military Academy. Never have I their selection, notwithstanding they were not willing to undergo an examination to test their fitness. It would seem that the public and our constituents will not let us divest ourselves of the plague of patronage even when we earnestly try to divest ourselves of it,

What are you going to do about it? We can not have an efficient army corps and we can not have an efficient naval corps based on my preference when I do not know, or based on the preference of Senators and Representatives who do not know, the physical, educational, moral, and mental qualifications of applicants or candidates. You can not decide it sensibly at random. It is a pure guess.

Now, when I tried to be a disinterested statesman and a civilservice reformer, and not a politician, to appoint on merit alone, that is the result. I do not know what to do about it. If any of you gentlemen have solved the problem, I would be thankful to you. [Laughter.]

Seriously, it is a painful service we are called upon to perform—to dispense patronage of any kind. No matter whom we select we are criticized, if not even abused. Even where we do not seek the responsibility it is forced upon us. If we select our enemies, our friends accuse us of ingratitude. If we select our friends, our enemies accuse us of intolerance and clannishness. And when we invite the civil service to aid us—by testing applicants in order to enable us to select the best qualified—we are accused of cowardice in trying to evade responsibility. And when notice is given and expense is incurred, even then the applicants do not come forward to stand the examination. But afterwards they and their friends write us to please designate them because of friendship.

In all other matters and at all other times I have decided each contest coming before me with the best lights before me—undergoing the toil and observing the courtesies and entailing the consequences. Having now fairly tried out both plans, I have found such to be the only sensible course to pursue. But I could wish for no other blessing in public life quite equal to that of being relieved entirely from patronage. It kills time, makes enemies, belittles endeavor, and injures our opportunities to give to the public service the best of energy and talent we possess, but it is inevitable, because it is the people's way of conducting their own Government. [Applause.]

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the paragraph and amendments thereto close in six minutes, one-half to be used by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Fess] and one-half to be used by the gentleman from Rhode Island.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that all debate on the paragraph and amendments thereto close in six minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Fess] is recognized.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I have no fault to find with the Naval Academy, although I have heard a great deal of criticism of it. I am inclined to think that the failure of our applicants is due more to themselves than to the authorities of the academy.

But I am interested in knowing how a man like the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Butler] can in 20 years make appointments and never miss them by having every applicant succeed.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. I take the chance of criticism by selecting the boy. That boy is usually selected by me two years in advance. When he is prepared and admitted he never fails, and I think five or six of my boys have been graduated near the head of their class.

Mr. FESS. How do you select them?

Mr. BUTLER. By my personal knowledge. I select boys that I know—rich or poor, it matters not to me, so that the boy can stand up—and have the boy's parents and neighbors, in a sense, in part responsible for his success.

Mr. FESS. I am much obliged to my friend. My colleague here from Illinois [Mr. Madden] says he has not had a failure, and there are others who say they have not.

Now, I have only one ambition in reference to Annapolis and West Point, and that is to get good sailors and good soldiers. I have tried to select them by competitive examination, believing this to be the best way to insure the best choice, yet this year what would be called the "star" applicant whom I recommended is out, I suppose, by a forced resignation, which is a great disappointment to me. As I just remarked, I have no fault to find with the authorities over there, understand. I suppose my method of procedure is at fault.

pose my method of procedure is at fault.

Mr. BUTLER. I think it is not a good one. I think the gentleman's knowledge of the candidate would be much more useful to the candidate when that knowledge is more than what he could get through a competitive examination.

Mr. FESS. There is another question I would like to propound to some one who can answer me. One of the candidates that I was very anxious might have a chance—because I happened to know his parents, and they are not wealthy, and this is a very promising as well as deserving young man—was also in the examination, and was also recommended for Annapolis, He failed to enter; that is, he failed on the entrance examination. Then I took it up to see whether I could get him a retrial, and I was denied it, but was told that there was a certain board that I should apply to. The Bureau of Navigation notified me that he was not included in the list recommended for another examination. I applied to the academic board and was politely informed that the case was carefully considered, after which the board decided to deny him permission to appear to take another examination.

Mr. BUTLER. I fear I may have misled my friend— The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield? Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. The gentleman could reappoint him. I may have misled the gentleman. Within the last two or three years I have endeavored to assist by appointing directly from among boys whom I have known well in my district, hoping we could help them reach the mark. It is true they could not take the first examination on every occasion, but the boys who succeeded in entering the academy have done very well and in no case failed.

Mr. FESS. My familiarity with young men as students leads me to know how often the first examination does not establish the ability of the applicant. It appears, to say the least, a singular decision for any academic board to deny flatly the solicitation on behalf of a young man's desire to prove his worth, of the appointing authority, who doubtless knows more about the young man's qualifications than a single examination will show. While as a man who has spent his life in college circles I give no credence to attacks upon our constituted Government institutions, I admit such treatment does subject the authorities to suspicion.

The gentleman will understand that both these boys to whom I refer took the examination held at my own college and passed. I made both recommendations upon a competitive examination.

Mr. BUTLER. I understand. Mr. FESS. Now, Mr. Chairman, there is one question upon which I would like to have the attention of the House for a minute. There is a matter that has been presented to the educators of the country that I think the House ought to consider. I do not refer to the exact items discussed in the Senate yesterday, but to one other phase of similar character. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] referred a moment ago to the crowded curriculum of our schools. We establish grades for the high school. Then we set up certain standards for entrance to We require four years' work in the high school to make it of first grade. Then we fix a certain number of units-15, to be specific—in order to qualify for college entrance. A few years ago, by the munificence of Mr. Carnegie, there was organized in the country what is called the Carnegie Foundation. Among other things it has attempted is a standardization of colleges, in which it has published what it calls the standard requirement for college entrance, as well as the requirement of a college degree. Most of the colleges have adopted its recommendations. These requirements are not confined to scholarship, but extend to financial rating. I happen to have been at the head of an institution which, while it meets the requirements of both entrance and graduation, does not fall within the requirements of that foundation in all respects. The Carnegie Foundation fixes the requirements for a standard college, as I have just suggested, not alone upon educational qualifications but in addition upon a minimum number of professors who must not only be on the faculty but must confine their teaching in the -that is, they must be free from teaching in the academy. In addition to that the size of the endowment that the college possesses is a third condition of standardization. A college, no matter what character of scholarship it represents, if it does not meet these two financial items-(1) number of teachers, (2) size of endowment—its rank will be unclassified.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. I ask unanimous consent that notwithstanding the limit—

The CHAIRMAN. The time has been fixed by the committee itself.

Mr. STAFFORD. I ask unanimous consent that, notwithstanding the limit, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Fess] may be permitted to proceed for five minutes.

Mr. FESS. I should like two minutes more.

Mr. PADGETT. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended for two minutes. The gentleman says that will be sufficient.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Ohio may proceed for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FESS. I thank the membership of the House, because I want to get this matter before the body. I repeat that this unofficial mentor names three elements that enter into the requirements to make up what is denominated a standard One is qualification in scholarship for entrance, which is equivalent to graduation from a first-grade high school of four years' work, and then graduation after four years in college. But, in addition to scholarship, there must be a certain number of salaried professors, and the Carnegie Foundation even suggests minimum salaries upon the ground that a small salary can not command the ability demanded by a standard college.

Mr. PADGETT. There is nothing of that kind which applies to the Naval Academy or to West Point.

Mr. FESS. No; nothing whatever. I have no reference to either Annapolis or West Point. I simply call the country's attention to a tendency in education.

Mr. PADGETT. I have had several young men enter Annapolis right from our high school.

Mr. FESS. Yes. Another qualification required by the Carnegie Foundation is that there must be an endowment, the minimum of which is fixed; and if the college does not come up to that financial standing, no matter what the character of work, it can not be regarded as a first-rank college, and its diploma amounts to nothing beyond that of an unclassified institution. While the Carnegie Foundation is not official, yet it is rapidly fixing our standards of education, since I may say, unfortunately, the colleges of the country have adopted its standard as their standard; and when the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] suggested that a professional career demands four years in the high school, and then four years in a college, before one begins his special work for his profession. If you want to enter a law school, that means four years after the four years at college, or if you want to enter a medical school, it is four years after the four years in college. While I do not find fault with these rigid requirements, I do question the wisdom of specific tendencies. It means that some of the most worthy educational institutions in America that are builded, not on money but upon the sacrifices of men who are willing to teach at a smaller salary than that which is arbitrarily fixed, are absolutely ex-cluded from the standard rank of colleges, and the diploma granted to a student will not mean anything, because the student carrying that diploma can not enter a first-grade medical school or first-grade law school that requires four years in a standard college as a prerequisite for entrance upon technical or special training. I believe in a standard, but it must not be a financial one, but educational. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, the real purpose of this rating is to destroy the There is a well-defined conviction that there are small college. too many colleges in the country. This method of elimination has been adopted. The colleges of a State or section capable of meeting the financial requirements associate themselves as the college association, excluding all institutions which do not meet the standard.

The requirements of the professional schools, such as medicine and law, will limit entrance to those either matriculated in or graduates of one of the associated colleges. This discounts at once the diploma of any institution not included in the association, no matter how high the character of scholarship,

It consequently deals a deadly blow to the prosperity of the institution, since no ambitious student desires to attend an institution whose diploma is not a sure credential for any profession.

This brutalizing tendency in education which attempts to fix a money standard is both undemocratic and un-American. It substitutes a base standard for real scholarship. It augments the increasing expenses of education, and naturally crowds our institutions with heedless youth who are sent to college, and excludes the purposeful who would go to college were its standards other than the size of the pocketbook. It is this tendency that causes many a mother's heart to bleed when she learns that her son's chief college achievement is the modern college habits he knew nothing about until he learned them in his fraternity.

Whatever this country is to be, her citizens should avoid making her higher institutions a club or an association whose member's credentials are the size of his wallet.

Every tendency that would crush out the native talent by exclusion on a financial basis should be avoided, not only in an individual but in our institutional life. The small college doing a high-grade work, though its endowment does not reach a fixed

The Clerk read as follows:

Department of marine engineering and naval construction: One master machinist, $1,900, and 1 assistant, $1,400; 1 pattern maker, $1,400; 1 boller maker, 1 blacksmith, 3 machinists, 1 molder, and 1 minimum, though its professors are not upon a professional salary basis, should not only be allowed to live but should be valued for what it is-the cradle of real scholarship to-day, as it has ever been in the past.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Mr. Chairman, I merely want to have read in my time a telegram from a Rhode Island institution breathing patriotism.

The CHAIRMAN. It will be read in the gentleman's time. The Clerk read as follows:

BOSTON, MASS., February 9, 1917.

Congressman George F. O'SHAUNESSY, Washington, D. C.:

In case of need the facilities of our factory at Cranston, R. I., will be at the Government's service.

J. R. LEESON, President Universal Winding Co.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Mr. Chairman, while I am on my feet and asking the indulgence of the committee, and hoping that my time will be extended just for a few minutes, I wish to sympathize with my distinguished friend from Texas [Mr. EAGLE], who has had so much difficulty in the selection of young men for Annapolis and West Point. I think the discussion under this bill is very timely, for the reason that the selection of proper men for Annapolis and West Point lies at the foundation of our preparedness program. [Applause.] Although I confess to a very resolute adherence to civil-service ideas and principles, going so far yesterday as to uphold the President in his recommendation that postmasters in first, second, and third class offices be selected under civil-service rules

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. I ask unanimous consent that my time be extended four minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee has fixed the limit.
Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. They just indulged another Member, and I am asking the same privilege.

Mr. PADGETT. To show no preference, I will ask that the gentleman have four minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Rhode Island be allowed to proceed for four minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. I voted for the President's recommendation, believing that these men should come from the ranks of the employees, and that an outlet for ambition, energy, and efficiency should be given to the employees who have given their lives to that service. Still in choosing men for Annapolis and West Point I feel that I will have to differ from my own views on the civil service, so far as that branch of the governmental service is concerned. I believe it absolutely necessary that in appointing cadets or midshipmen we should have a personal interview with the men who are going to serve their Government in those capacities for the purpose of that test which only a faceto-face meeting can disclose. In my opinion you can not make a soldier out of a bookworm. A civil-service examination opening up these places to those who may be mentally qualified and perhaps physically so is not the supreme test.

I believe that the foundation of the application should be a vigorous, resolute, hardy manhood. [Applause.] First of all, a man, and, secondly, education. I want a man who, when he is called upon, will not think of books, but will think of his country; a man who, when he is called upon, will have no regard for sacrifice, but will be willing to stand any test, no matter how supreme, no matter how severe. It has been a pleasure to me to appoint young men to Annapolis and West Point after I have interviewed them myself, and when I have had a resolute, hearty handclasp from a fellow who looked me plumb in the eye, I have said, "By the eternal God, there is a man that will make a good soldier or a good sailor." [Applause.] Back of all qualifications there should be manhood, and I would respectfully commend my theory and my practice to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Eagle]. And when I speak of men being physically qualified I do not refer to mere bulk, which must not be confounded with prowess. Deep down in the young man's heart must be a wholesome love of country and a willingness to serve. I trust that this subject will receive greater attention at the hands of Congress. I feel very much concerned when I hear of a man going to these institutions and failing after six months, after a rigorous examination to which they are subjected, and I fully believe that a thorough investigation at the time of their entrance by the Congressman who has the privilege of sending them there will remove a great many of these difficulties and add to the service of the Army and Navy of the United States. [Applause.]

coppersmith, at $1,280 each; 1 pattern maker and 1 blacksmith, at $1,080 each; 1 instructor in mechanical drawing, $2,000; machinists and other employees, $9,515.20; in all, $27,335.20.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Some estimates were made a few moments ago as to the cost of maintenance of a cadet at Annapolis. I would like to have the chairman of the committee tell me the cost of maintenance of one enlisted man.

Mr. PADGETT. For an enlisted man in the Navy, I think the ration the past year was 39 cents.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I do not want the actual cost of maintaining the Navy, but the cost to the country of each enlisted man in the Navy.

Mr. PADGETT. I have not taken that matter up.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I assume that it would be at least the cost of one soldier in the Army.

I would think so. Mr. PADGETT.

Mr. LONGWORTH. It is estimated that one enlisted man The chairman of the committee costs at least $1,200 a year. says that it costs about $4,000 a year to maintain a cadet at Annapolis. Gentlemen raise their hands in holy horror at the tremendous waste of money in giving a young man an education so that he will be competent to command a battleship, and yet eventually he will command a thousand men whose cost of maintenance is $1,200 a year each. Will any man on this floor say that a man educated at Annapolis competent to command a battleship is not worth at least four times what an enlisted man is?

Mr. SEARS. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes.

Mr. SEARS. Does the gentleman think that the Government ought to pay that difference while he is obtaining that knowl-

Mr. LONGWORTH. How could be eventually have the knowledge unless be obtains it at Annapolis? The value of an education at West Point or Annapolis can not be estimated in dollars and cents.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, I want to say a few words in reference to this matter of Annapolis and West Point appoint-We have had a discussion on Annapolis and West Point examinations annually ever since I have been in Congress, and I desire to advocate again briefly the method I have used with some success; that is, the Rhodes scholarship method as nearly as it can be applied. I hold a competitive examination, or rather two examinations, a mental and physical examination, take the two sets of marks and add them together and then divide them by Then take into consideration participation in school athletics, and the character and manhood of the boys the same as they do for the Rhodes scholarships. That is the only standard way to pick out an all-around boy that I know of. It requires a district, of course, in which you can get a number of candidates. It does not work very well if you have only two or three candidates, but if you can get a dozen candidates for examination, so that you can have some chance of getting an eligible list from your mental examination on the regular Annapolis or West Point requirements, conducted by the civil service—I think that is best, though some of my examinations have been conducted very well by local school authorities—and then have a physical examination on a competitive basis of the boys who stand highest the result is going to be that you will get a pretty good all-around boy. And I want to add that such a test usually appeals to the boys themselves and attracts more candidates than you can get for a competitive examination confined to the mental side,

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PLATT. Yes. Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I want to say that there was an examination held in my district several years ago of that kind, and the boy eventually graduated at the head of his class.

Mr. PLATT. I am glad to hear that, and I think it a natural outcome. Competitive examinations of course do not do everything, but they generally give you a boy that can pass the entrance examination at Annapolis, and with a fair chance of standing well afterwards.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does not the gentleman realize that there is something more, as was pointed out by the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. O'SHAUNESSY], and that is, is not the supreme test whether the boy has the metal besides necessary educational qualifications to render him eventually able to handle a battleship?

Mr. PLATT. Yes; and that is why we count the boy's physical examination and his record in athletics and his capacity for leadership

Mr. STAFFORD. Mere physique does not determine whether a man has the metal to qualify him for leadership. I have seen a big bully who had plenty of physique who was a coward. I

Mr. PLATT. The combination of mental capacity and physique ought to show the right qualification.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I would like to inquire of the gentleman whether, when a young man enters the Naval Academy, the whole test now is not book knowledge and his ability to pass the examination?

Mr. PLATT. No; there is a vast amount of physical training, and a good many boys break down under the physical training both at West Point and Annapolis. After the boy gets in he has to have the capacity to study, but the great trouble is that our grammar schools and high schools are not thorough. They do not ground the boys thoroughly in the things that they ought to be grounded in. Boys fail largely in the grammarschool subjects. I have had a boy pass an examination with almost 100 in algebra and geometry and fail in history, which he ought to have been able to read up on in two so as to pass. The boy I have in mind did so well in mathematics in a competitive examination that I made him an alternate. I told him of his weakness in history, and suggested that he had plenty of time to read and master enough to pass the examination, but he could not do it. It was simply because he had not been trained to study and could not concentrate himself. He could not do what every boy who has had a good highschool education ought to be able to do.

Mr. McCRACKEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PLATT. Yes.
Mr. McCRACKEN. Does not the gentleman feel that he is reflecting on the teachers of the high schools in the country when he says that the boys have not been trained to study?

Mr. PLATT. I am reflecting on the high schools and the private schools, too. I have had boys from both kinds of schools, and they have not been trained thoroughly in either. The idea of the usual school is to pass as many boys and girls as possible to higher grades, so as to give the school a good statistical record. That is the way the schools work all over this country. They are rarely thorough.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last Mr. SABATH. two words.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate upon this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that debate upon the pending paragraph and all amendments thereto close in two minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I object. I have the floor. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has not the floor. The Chair recognized the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. SABATH. But I moved to strike out the last two words before the gentleman secured the floor, and the Chair recog-

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I asked the gentleman whether two minutes would satisfy him.

Mr. SABATH. I replied that I would not use more than two or three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee prefers a request for unanimous consent that all debate close

Mr. PADGETT. In three minutes; that the gentleman from Illinois have two minutes and the gentleman from Michigan

[Mr. SMITH] have one minute.

The CHAIRMAN. That debate close in three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I ask recognition for the purose of asking a question of the chairman of the committee. The statement has been made by some gentleman upon the floor this afternoon that the sons of officers, as a rule, succeed in passing the examinations before boys who have been appointed who are not relatives of officers. I myself have suspected that, because whenever I appoint the son of an officer he always passes, but whenever I appoint some one else who is not connected with the military or naval service he has his own troubles. For that reason I would like to ask the chairman if he could give the House information as to the percentage of boys who are now in the Naval Academy who are the sons or relatives of officers?

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I can not; and I can not give the gentleman that information, because what I have heard here this evening is about all I have ever heard upon this subject. I want to say to the gentleman that perhaps it might be accounted for by this fact: If an officer has a son in the academy and that officer is there at the academy, he would have the boy in his home and would be likely to give him instructions. I do not know, though, that there is any foundation for these rumors. I have had young men enter the academy from the high schools without preparation and I have had other young men who took special preparation who failed. I have never seen any evidences of favoritism. They have treated me just as they have others. When my boy failed they kept him out, just as they have kept others out.

Mr. SABATH. Then it is the opinion of the gentleman that these examinations are honestly conducted and without any preference being given?

Mr. PADGETT. As far as I know, they are absolutely square and honest.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois

has expired.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I wish to have read in my time a telegram from Dr. J. H. Kellogg, one of the foremost scientists of the country and the head of a very great sanitarium, which telegram I send to the desk.

The Clerk read the telegram, as follows:

BATTLE CREEK, MICH., February 5, 1917.

Hon. J. M. C. Smith, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

America ought to set an example to the whole world by finding means for settling the controversy with Germany without war. The war will ultimately be settled by economic rather than military forces, America is big enough to be patient and pioneer the way to better

The Clerk read as follows:

Commissary department: One chief cook, $1,200; 8 cooks, at $600 each, and 12 assistants, at $360 each; 1 steward, $1,200, and 1 assistant, $1,080; 1 head waiter, $840, and 3 assistants, at $600 each; 4 pantrymen, at $420 each; 1 chief baker, at $1,200; 5 bakers, $600 each; 2 assistants, at $540 each, and 3 assistants, $480; 1 head butcher, at $300; 2 assistant butchers, at $720 each, and 1 butcher's helper, at $480; 4 baker helpers, at $300 each; 65 waiters, at $20 per month each, and 65 waiters, at $16 per month each, $29,280; 4 coffeemen, at $300 each; 4 dish pantrymen, at $300 each, 4 firemen, at $300 each; 4 utility men, at $300 each; 2 linemen, at $300 each; 2 seamstresses, at $420 each; 4 clerks, at $360 each; in all, $64,620.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I have some amendments which I desire to offer for the purpose of making some clerical corrections.

Page 46, line 18, strike out the figures "$29.280" and insert the figures "$28,080"; page 46, line 22, strike out the figures "$64,620" and insert "$63,420"; and page 46, line 26, strike out the figures "$381,173.20" and insert "$379,973.20."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will inform the gentleman that the paragraph to which the last amendment is offered has not yet been read.

Mr. PADGETT. That is correct. I will ask for a vote upon the other two amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendments offcred by the gentleman from Tennessee to the paragraph ending on line 22, page 46.

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to. Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking a question, not in the way of criticism but for information. Is there any regulation or rule or law which pertains to men in the active service of the Navy who engage or associate themselves with others who are engaged in commercial enterprises for profit?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes. There is a statute which was passed some years ago that prohibits retired officers of the Navy and Marine Corps, though not of the Army, from engaging in certain occupations and businesses in civil life that sell material to the Government.

Mr. HICKS. The question I have is with reference to an officer upon the active service.

Mr. PADGETT. A man upon the active service can not en-

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, this situation has been brought to my attention. I do not want to mention the name of any officer because it is possible that there are others who are in the same position, and it is possible that neither he nor they are violating any regulations. I know of an officer in the active service of the Navy who has lent his name to an invention he has made to a commercial enterprise. This commercial enter-prise advertises the fact that he is a captain in the United States Navy, and that if the persons who are buying supplies desire special information this captain will supply it.

The question arose in my mind as to whether that was fair to the Government who is paying the man for his full service or fair to the competitor of that commercial concern, because the competitors do not have the same advantage in having a United States naval man at their head or as a consulting expert. It may be that it is best for the Government to allow this dual service so that the incentive for profit may stimulate the offi-cers to perfect inventions from which the Government as well as private concerns will profit. Personally I question the expediency of such a practice.

Mr. PADGETT. I do not know what the invention is and do not know about it, but the law prohibits a retired officer and I also understand active officers from engaging in business in that way

Mr. HICKS. I took this up with the Navy Department and I could not get any definite information, but I did get this much, that they do not find any law which prohibits an officer in the active service of the Navy from lending his name to or associating himself with a private commercial enterprise.

Mr. BUTLER. It may be done, but it is against the will of the department, and it is certainly against the intention of Congress and I would be in favor of taking him off the active list if he does it

Mr. PADGETT. He may have some patent and the concern uses his patent or invention.

Mr. HICKS. They do use his name in advertising it.

Mr. TALBOTT. Is it such an invention as the Government uses?

Mr. HICKS. No; it is used by small boat manufacturers. Mr. TALBOTT. The gentleman knows the law is that any invention that an officer makes, either of the Army or the Navy or anyone in the Government service, belongs to the Government?

Mr. HICKS. Yes.

Mr. TALBOTT. But if it is an invention that is something that is not used by the Government, while it is not good taste, I do not think there is any law in reference to it.

Mr. HICKS. The gentleman does not think there is any law to prevent it?

Mr. TALBOTT. No; but it may not be good taste.

Mr. HICKS. Should not there be such a law?
Mr. TALBOTT. I will take that up later on.
Mr. BUTLER. Has the gentleman presented the case to the Secretary of the Navy?

Mr. HICKS. Yes; to the Judge Advocate General of the

Mr. BUTLER. And the Secretary has made the reply that there was no law to prevent it?

Mr. HICKS. The Judge Advocate did not state it very clearly. He said that so far as he knew there was no law to prevent it.

Mr. BUTLER. Well, I will make it my business to look into the matter and see if we can not have a law.

Mr. LINDBERGH. Mr. Chairman, I have the honor to represent a district filled with peace-loving, loyal, patriotic people. Practically all of them are opposed to war, but if war comes, whether our Nation is right or wrong, they will all support the Government with all their power. Having in mind possibilities, the loyal and patriotic citizens of the village of Aitkin, far north in the district, comes to the front with a telegram promising aid, which telegram I will insert as a part of my remarks.

The people of Aitkin have not taken this step to encourage war, but to stand back of the Nation in everything that may be necessary. In that district, at least, everybody knows that the war conditions are the result of the uneconomic law that governs trade and commerce—the privilege that has been given to a few in this world to make industrial slaves of the rest of us. With one proper act of Congress the world could be changedconquered by the force of the collective demand of all mankind-when the way is pointed out that would make it sure that the industrious and intelligent in all the fields of useful work can command success for themselves by their industry instead of having it serve to make a few of the specially favored successful. That would result in a peace-loving people every where. Let one nation act wisely-really wiselybe forced to follow with even more speed than the unwise acts have been followed by one nation after another. There need be no war to establish and enforce our rights on the high seas. If we adopt the economic law for our own Government we shall conquer the world, not by drenching it in blood, not by vain glory that will be looked upon by succeeding generations as the last colossal act of American barbarism if it should come—no, not in the blood of the brave will we conquer insanity, but we can do so in the common sense of a new nation-wide intelligence applied to an adjustment of business to meet the needs and demands of the people generally instead of as now to satisfy the speculators and make them lord of all our actions, even to the extent of forcing us into war.

The telegram is as follows:

AITKIN, MINN., February 7, 1917.

Hon. C. A. Lindbergh, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

Place of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

Place at disposal of the War Department Red River Lumber Co.'s sawmill plant, consisting of five factory buildings, over 2,000-horsepower engines, and equipment located on ideal site with ample trackage and yards. Plant now idle. Ready for Government's immediate use.

ATRIN COMMERCIAL CLUB, ED MCCONVILLE,

Chairman Committee.

Mr. MILLER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. In reference to the discussion had a few moments ago in regard to the fact that some midshipmen were dismissed on account of failure, my belief is that the age limit for admission is too low. My recollection is one can not be admitted over 20 years of age, and I think that is a great mistake. Most of the applicants who go to the Naval Academy go from high schools, and at 20 years of age they have not got the education or the maturity to enable them to stand the course that they have to take at the academy. I recommended applicants by a competitive examination before they went before the board, but a number of them failed, and I think it would be wiser to raise the limit of age from 20 to 22 years, and I think the chairman, if he would think over the matter, will

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, in reference to that I want to say that the naval officers for several years have appeared before the committee urging that the age be reduced from 16 to 20 to 15 to 18 and Members of Congress have come to me personally insisting that the best age that we could get them was just as young as possible, and the committee has refrained from taking either one of those. In England, I understand, they take them at 12 years of age instead of 16, as we do here. So that we are standing on the 16 to 20, and you ask here the higher age, and the department is wanting it put at from 15 to The English have them admitted at 12 years of age.

Mr. MILLER of Pennsylvania. I think in England they get a longer course or else the course is not so hard as in the United States Naval Academy, because they could not possibly stand a course here at 12 years of age. Very few can stand it at 20 years, and last year—I am not sure whether it was the Naval Academy or the Military Academy-80 persons in the academy were dismissed because of failing to pass the examinations. They have not the maturity of age to enable them to stand the

Mr. PADGETT. It is not the age question, but if the gentleman will go down to the academy he will find it is the boy does not apply himself.

Mr. MILLER of Pennsylvania. Oh, no.

Mr. PADGETT. The great bulk of them, the younger boys themselves who enter at 16 years, a larger per cent of them graduate than those who enter at 20 years of age.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. FESS. If the pupil in the high school will be regular he will finish his fourth year and will graduate from the high school at 18, and that gives him two years leeway after finishing in the best high schools in the country, so I rather agree with the chairman that the age limit is not too low.

Mr. PADGETT. No; the age limit is very satisfactory.

Mr. MILLER of Pennsylvania. It simply gives the boys who have parents who have the means to send them to advanced schools an advantage over the boy the son of parents of moderate means, and I am opposed to it. Our rural high schools are becoming more efficient year by year, and I am in favor of giving the graduate of the rural high schools an equal chance with the city boy.

The Clerk read as follows:

Department of Buildings and Grounds: 1 messenger to superintendent, $600; 45 building attendants, at $400 each, $18,000; in all,

In all, civil establishment, $381,173.20.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report it.

Page 46, line 26, amend by striking out "$381,173.20" and insert "$379.978.20."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, I fear my original statement may be misunderstood. In that I gave you the expenditures for "Pay of professors and others at the Naval Academy." give you the total of the expenditures at the academy for this year, which is $824,729.20, as compared with $703,946.92 for last year. I desire also to call the committee's attention to the fact that on page 30 of the present bill under the head of "Bureau of Medicine and Surgery," in which is included the Naval Academy, together with other places, there is an appropriation in the sum of $1,121,740 for medical supplies, and so forth. I also find under the heading "Contingent, Bureau of Medicine and Surgery," on pages 30 and 31, in which is included the Naval Academy together with other places, an appropriation of $291,080 for purchase of one motor-propelled vehicle for official use only, and so forth, and for naval medical supply depots, sick quarters at Naval Academy, and so forth. I do not know how much of the above amounts go to the Naval Academy.

My colleague from Ohio [Mr. Longworth] stated that because a soldier in line received $1,200 it was unjust to criticize a boy who received for his services in the shape of education and supplies and maintenance, $4,000. I think the comparison is hardly fair, because the boy at college is securing for himself an education and is preparing himself for a life position at a salary commensurate with the services he is to render, while the poor fellow in line, who is willing to die for his country, can never hope to get more than the $1,200, and has no educational ad-

Mr. PADGETT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SEARS. I will.

Mr. PADGETT. A great proportion of that $4,000 that the gentleman refers to is the interest, the maintenance, and overhead charges in keeping up the plant there. We have $14,000,000 invested in that plant, and in making up that we count the interest on that, the repairs to building, and the salaries of officers, and all that,

Mr. SEARS. If this Government of ours, when it can borrow money at 2 per cent, is paying this enormous amount because of the interest, something should be done to stop it, and we can not do it by increasing these appropriations.

I have no complaint to make about the young men I have sent to Annapolis. They have been true to the trust I have imposed in them and they are making good. Along that line I have no complaint. Nor would I object to the payment of any salary to any professor commensurate with the services he returns, but the House seems to have gotten away from the original point.

Mr. SNYDER. A moment ago you stated that the enlisted man was ready to die for his country. Do you expect that the young man you appointed to West Point would not be ready to die for his country?

Mr. SEARS. I certainly would expect him to die for his country if the same became necessary. The point I make is that you are paying the young man in the Army $1,200 per year for life for his services and it is costing the taxpayers about $4,500 per year to educate a boy at Annapolis. I do not believe it should cost so much. However, we have gotten away from the original proposition under discussion. I trust what I have said will not be taken in a spirit of criticism, and I have brought the various matters mentioned in my remarks to the attention of the House in order that we might discuss them and that we might discover really what is being done. I can not hope for results this year, and I have taken up the time of the House solely with the hope that some reforms may be accomplished. The question under discussion was not how a young man should get into the academy or how he should get out of the academy, but I contended then and I contend now, Mr. Chairman, that because of omission or neglect on our part or through oversight the Naval Academy at Annapolis is costing the people of this country more in proportion per man, 1,200 students, than any other college in the United States; and as one of the Representatives of the people I felt it was my duty to bring it to your attention and let you deal with the matter as you saw fit.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in order that I may save time by not again addressing the committee on the question, I want at this time to say that in the paragraph just read about 62 additional men will be employed next year. I do not know whether they will be employed after the quoto is increased to 1,700 or whether they will be employed under the quoto of 1,200.

Mr. PADGETT. I will say to the gentleman that the estimate for next year is that there will not be less than 1,500, an increase of 300, at least, over the present number in the academv.

Mr. SEARS. Well, then, with that increase they certainly ought to have butchers, chief butchers, assistant butchers, and so forth. But, Mr. Chairman, that was not really the point I was objecting to. As I said, I believe it is costing too much, and something should be done to correct it. I certainly believe retired naval officers should be used, as far as possible, as instructors at the academy, and I can not bring myself to believe they would object to such service.

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. Mr. Chairman-

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 15 minutes, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Davis] to have 5 minutes, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Towner] 5 minutes, and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Stafford] 5 minutes

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 15 minutes, 5 minutes to be occupied by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Davis], 5 minutes by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Towners], and 5 minutes by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Stafford]. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, just before the gentlemen begin I would like to make a request. A great many gentlemen are asking that we expedite this bill. I am trying to do so. At the same time I, too, do not want to seem unfair. I will ask the membership of the House to please cooperate with me, if they can, and let us cut out some of this debate.

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I have been mum during the discussion of this measure until the present. I am not in favor of going wild over a great system of Army and Navy expenditures in line of preparedness. But I am in favor of having a most efficient and competent set of men educated to direct our military and naval forces; and the education is technical and expert, special, and should be thorough. And I am one of those that believe a fine investment is made even if you double the cost of the ordinary college in turning out from our war colleges a man who is able to take charge of a division of the Army in any part of the battle line that we may have anywhere on earth. I am one of those who believe that the money is well expended that will make not only a good fighter in our Navy, but a man who can understand the hydrography of the earth wherever his ship may be and be ready to direct his forces safely and accurately anywhere, and make a seadog, so to speak, of the boy, prepared to live a life of active service in the defense of his country anywhere his ship may be. And I am not bothered about the special extra cost. I want the knowledge complete and thorough. I would be glad to leave off a few great ships and have the remainder in charge of thorough and competent men. [Applause.]

Mr. SEARS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Towner] is recognized

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call attention to what I consider to be a grave defect in this bill. The bill as originally drawn provides for hundreds and millions of dollars for ships and ammunition. We have had amendments brought in here because of the emergency that will add millions more. But there is no provision in this bill and there is no emergency amendment offered to provide for an increase in the personnel of the Navy. To my mind that is the gravest defect now existing in the Navy. It is the gravest defect now existing in this

We have a deficiency already in the personnel of the Navy in the enlisted men of more than 20,000. We can not send out our commissioned ships. Of what avail will it be to us to expend additional hundreds of millions of dollars for more ships and more ammunition and more material if we do not do something to increase the personnel of the Navy? Gentlemen say here that they are making earnest endeavor to recruit the Navy, but they also say that they can not, under existing conditions, recruit the Navy even to fill the ships now in commission. Then we must do something in order to accomplish this result. We can expend hundreds of millions of dollars for more ships, but we are unable to spend a few thousand dollars to increase the pay of the men in the Navy in order to secure the necessary enlistment. I want to read from the hearings when the Secretary of the Navy was before the committee. Mr. Kelley asked:

I wondered if you had worked out any plan whereby we might hope to get men faster than we have been getting them during the past six months.

The answer of the Secretary was:

Yes; we have worked out plans. We have increased the number of recruiting stations. I am asking for an appropriation of $50,000 for automobiles for the use of recruiting officials to be sent into the country

Fifty thousand dollars for automobiles, but not one cent of increase in pay for the men who are to be enlisted in this service! [Applause.] And he goes on and says——
Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. TOWNER. I regret I can not.

Mr. BAILEY. Just for a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. Yes; but I suggest to the gentleman to make very short

Mr. BAILEY. Is it not true that the pay of the men in the Navy to-day is greater, all things considered, than that of the ordinary workman?

Mr. TOWNER. Oh, no; but I have not the time to discuss it. But, whatever it is, what futility is it for us to build ships and pay hundreds of millions of dollars for them and make no provision for manning them? We ought not to build the ships unless we are willing to pay what is necessary to get the men to man the ships, and it makes no difference what the amount required is our ships will be useless unless we have the men to man them. Comparatively, the pay of the men in the Navy is but a small item in the large amounts that are provided for here.

Mr. Kelley said further to the Secretary:

This is rather an emergency time—I think everybody recognizes that—in the history of the world. Do you not think we ought to get the men now?

The Secretary said:

Certainly: we ought to get the men.

And Mr. Kelley asked:

And take all the measures necessary?

And the Secretary said:

We have already taken the steps necessary to increase recruiting, and we are already getting results.

It is fair to say that the Secretary agreed to the proposition that the pay of the men ought to be increased if we desire to get more recruits for the Navy.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes more to the gentleman from Iowa.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa is recognized for five minutes more.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield before he starts in?

Mr. TOWNER. Yes. Mr. EMERSON. Yesterday the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] proposed an amendment to increase the pay of the sailors.

Mr. TOWNER. Yes; and it should have been adopted. confess, Mr. Chairman, that I do not know what ought to be done, what inducements ought to be offered, whether it should be in the term of service or in some other form. But I do know, and I think every Member of this House knows, that we must do something in order to man the ships that are to compose our Navy.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. TOWNER. Yes; certainly; I will be glad to yield to the chairman.

Mr. PADGETT. In the last session of Congress we authorized the increase of the enlisted personnel from 51,500 to a possible limit of more than 88,000. We provided a reorganization of the personnel, and we have stated time and time again that we have given them greater advantages. We have provided for many benefits to them that they did not have before. We shortened the term of enlistment, and put it down either in that bill or in the one just before, allowing one year's enlistment. It was in that bill, I believe. You could get as low as one year's enlistment, and then allow them to extend if they wanted to.

Now, all of that was provided in August last, looking after the personnel, and as soon as that begins to spread out and get into communication with the public, and they are knowing it, we are getting increased enlistments; and I think the thing to do is to try out in a reasonable way what we did on the 29th of August last, less than six months ago.

Mr. TOWNER. I will ask the chairman of the committee why he did not act on the recommendation of the Secretary of the Navy and increase the pay of these men?

Mr. PADGETT. Simply because we did not think it was necessary, in view of what we had done in the bill of August 29, 1916, less than six months before.

Mr. TOWNER. Now you have a deficiency of 20,000 men to man the ships now in commission, and you are not doing one single thing in this emergency to secure the men, and yet you are asking for millions of dollars to procure additional ships and ammunition.

Mr. PADGETT. Because we think we had done what was adequate only a few months before in the bill of August 29, 1916.

Mr. TOWNER. But we did not have the emergency then that we have now. You are offering amendment after amendment now to prepare for emergencies. Why not offer amendments to meet this emergency?

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Iowa yield me a moment to ask the gentleman from Tennessee a question?

Mr. TOWNER. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GARDNER. May I ask it in the gentleman's time?

Mr. TOWNER. Certainly.
Mr. GARDNER. The gentleman from Tennessee says that when we passed the law last year the enlisted men of the Navy were 51,500.

Mr. PADGETT. No; I said that was the authorized enlistment.

Mr. GARDNER. They were enlisted up to that amount? Mr. PADGETT. They were a little over, and we had a provision enacted legalizing the three or four hundred enlistments over that number that had taken place.

Mr. GARDNER. And now on the 1st of February I find the number is up to 53,456.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes. Mr. GARDNER. As As against 52,000 in August, in spite of all your inducements.

And during the month of January we added Mr. PADGETT. a net gain of 1,344.

Mr. GARDNER. Yes. And is not January always the chief enlistment month of the year?

Mr. PADGETT. Not always. It is one of the good months, Mr. GARDNER. That is when the snowbirds all come in.

Mr. GARDNER. That is when the snowbirds all come in. Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to use the rest of my time. I hope that even in this bill the committee will do something to increase the pay of the enlisted men. At least that ought to be tried in this emergency. I find on page 794 of the hearings that Lieut. Commander McCandless says that the base pay of seamen of the first class is $35 down, with $24 a month; of second class, $30 down, with $19; of seamen of the third class, $22 down, with $16 a month; that for messmen it is $60 down, with $16 a month. In other words, for the class of seamen that we most need the pay is now $16 a month. It occurs to me, gentlemen, that it would be not only wise but a frugal policy as well, an economical policy as well, if we should raise the pay of these seamen to at least decent wages in order that we may secure them in numbers sufficient to fill the Navy. Sixteen dollars a month will not tempt many desirable young men to join the Navy, even in times of emergency; and we should have them now. It takes a year to train a recruit how to handle a gun on board ship. What folly it will be to be compelled, in case of secure men in such times as these.

Mr. PADGETT. The figures that the gentleman read were the base pay that was provided by statute years ago. There was a subsequent statute that added 10 per cent to that, so you should add 10 per cent to those figures.

emergency, to tie our battleships to our wharves until we can train men to handle them; $16 a month is too small a wage to

Mr. TOWNER. One dollar and sixty cents a month?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

The Clerk read as follows:

Current and miscellaneous expenses, Naval Academy: Text and reference books for use of instructors; stationery, blank books and forms, models, maps, and periodicals; apparatus and materials for instruction in physical training and athletics; expenses of lectures and entertainments not exceeding $1,000, including pay and expenses of lecturer; chemicals, philosophical apparatus and instruments, stores, machinery, tools, fittings, apparatus, and materials for instruction purposes, $41,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I rise to obtain some information as to the policy pursued by the committee in increasing the salaries of the personnel at the Naval Academy. In the prior paragraphs there has been quite a general increase of salaries, in some instances ranging as high as $300, most of them only a reasonable increase of $100. Did the committee have any general policy in making these increases?

Mr. PADGETT. No horizontal increase or anything of that kind. We took up each case and dealt with it with reference to the character of men required, the character of the service to be performed, the duties of the office, and the general standard of requirements

Mr. STAFFORD. In all these instances were these increases recommended by the department?

Mr. PADGETT. They were recommended by the management of the academy and approved by the department.

Mr. STAFFORD. Are there any instances where the committee declined to follow the recommendation of the department for increases?

Mr. PADGETT. I do not recall any.

Mr. STAFFORD. So the committee virtually adopted the recommendation of the department in every instance?

Mr. PADGETT. Virtually. I believe where the department had recommended an odd figure we may have made it an even

Mr. STAFFORD. The committee, following the recommendation of the department, did not go very far into each case, as to whether it was based on merit or not.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; we did. Mr. STAFFORD. I assume they took the word of the department, and followed it without much further investigation.

Mr. PADGETT. We had some of the officers of the Naval Academy before the committee—the superintendent and some of the other officers-and we inquired of them as to the character of the service to be performed, and so forth.

Mr. STAFFORD. Was there any instance where the committee declined to follow the recommendation of the department so far as increases of salary are concerned?

Mr. PADGETT. I do not recall any.
Mr. STAFFORD. It was the policy of the committee to accept the recommendations of the department so far as increases were concerned.

Mr. PADGETT. If we approved it at all. We may not have given some that the department recommended, but where we gave them we usually followed the recommendation of the department.

Mr. STAFFORD. The committee is rather acquiescent, in so far as increases of salary are concerned.

Mr. PADGETT. In the Naval Academy, and in the reorganization under the bill of last year, the whole thing is under reorganization, and we followed the recommendations of the department where they accorded with the administration of the academy

Mr. STAFFORD. I may be in error, but I do not recall any instance where the committee has made such general increases in salaries as in the personnel of the Naval Academy.

Mr. PADGETT. No; we have not for years, because the bill of last August authorized a complete reorganization. year we gave the Secretary a lump-sum appropriation, $175,000, and this year it is being apportioned.

Mr. STAFFORD. For these specially enumerated officials who are carried in this bill?

Mr. PADGETT. Professors and instructors, and so forth. Mr. STAFFORD. Under the discretion granted to the Secretary what is the pay as finally fixed compared to the pay in other educational institutions?

Mr. PADGETT. He has not consummated his arrangements yet, and we have not got his report. The thing is undergoing reorganization now. He got his authority on the 29th of August and the school year began in September, and he has not had time to put into effect the reorganization. It is being worked out in the department.

Mr. STAFFORD. As I understand, in some instances naval officers who have been engaged in professorial work have been discontinued and civilian professors substituted in their stead?

Mr. PADGETT. That is contemplated as to some of them. Whether it has actually been done or not in the present session I am not prepared to say, because there had to be a very large increase in the number of professors and instructors in the aggregate, and they have been trying to get them, but there are certain matters, for instance, foreign languages and literature and things of that kind—

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. STAFFORD. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes. Is there objection? There was no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. With the information that the gentleman has gleaned after many years of service on the committee, can he inform the House whether there have been any instances where teachers in the Naval Academy have left to go to other institutions because of a difference in compensation between that of the academy and the private institutions? Mr. PADGETT. Teachers at the Naval Academy have insisted very strongly that they were underpaid. A few years ago it was recommended by the prior Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Meyer, that the civilian instructors be dispensed with alto-gether and that their places be supplemented with naval offi-cers. We never had such a propaganda come to the committee as we had then, with the insistence that they should be They had the presidents of the various universities send us letters-I remember receiving several of them-urging the importance and insisting on having civilian instructors remain in the academy. They showed a very great anxiety and an intense interest to remain in the academy, notwithstanding prior to that time they had been urging that they were underpaid.

Mr. STAFFORD. They manifested as great an interest as public officials do to retain office?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.
Mr. STAFFORD. They liked their berths very well?
Mr. PADGETT. Yes.
Mr. STAFFORD. But there have been no instances of leaving the Naval Academy because of disparagement in pay?

Mr. PADGETT. There may have been individual instances, but there has been no hegira.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Certainly.
Mr. SHERWOOD. Does not the gentleman think that in case of war or an emergency we could get all the volunteers for the Navy we needed?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes: I think so, with the authorization we have had and the 10,000 from the naval service and the reserve we are building up in a satisfactory way, and from the 30,000 or 35,000 ex-enlisted men who are in civil life.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Is it not a fact that the young men do not enlist now in great numbers because they do not like to be perpetual soldiers?

Mr. PADGETT. The Navy has been having satisfactory en-listments until the abnormal conditions arose in manufacturing, and even now, since we amended the act last August giving additional advantages and preferences, it is coming up again, year ago we had a waiting list for enlistments in the Navy.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

In all, Naval Academy, exclusive of public works, $824,729.20.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment to correct a total.

The Clerk read as follows:

Clerical error; page 48, line 20, strike out the figures "$824,729.20" and insert "$833,529.20."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. In the present bill a great many increases in salaries have been made. I have no objection to these increases, because I like to be consistent. As I have stated several times, I believe in paying a man what he is worth. I have always made that fight, even when I asked for an increase in salary for myself. I voted for the District increase. I voted for the 5 and 10 per cent increase every time it came before the House. The House let all the others go through, and this has gone through, and meets with my approval.

But I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that when it came to the Post Office bill which related to the boys back home receiving less than $1,000 and less than $1,800 a year we were unable to secure for them any increase. to be absolutely frank, and state that I voted for the other increases because I believed they were entitled to it, and because I thought those back home would receive the increase they were also entitled to. The high cost of living at home is just as much as the high cost of living in Washington, if the amounts which I have to pay for supplies are any criterion to go by. I hope the House will see its way clear to allow the postal employees throughout the country receiving less than $1,000 a year the same increase in their salaries as allowed other employees, in order that they may meet the present high cost of living.

I want to say in this connection that if more talk had been indulged in in an effort to reduce the high cost of living rather than indulging in talk to secure raises in salaries there would have been better results throughout the country. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

MARINE CORPS.

Pay, Marine Corps: Pay of officers, active and reserve list: For pay and allowances prescribed by law for all officers on the active and reserve list, including clerks for assistant paymasters, nine, $1,690.666.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I believe this item carries the pay of all the officers in the Marine Corps.

Yes; except on the retired ist. Mr. PADGETT. Mr. MANN. All on the active and reserve list.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. MANN. How are the officers in the Marine Corps appointed in the first instance?

Mr. PADGETT. By passing the examination, and under the law the Secretary of the Navy may assign cadets from the Naval Academy or from the Military Academy. Then they are taken from civil life, and those in civil life must pass an examination. If they pass satisfactorily, they are nominated by the President and confirmed by the Senate. They are appointed for a probationary period of two years before the commission becomes permanent.

Mr. MANN. How do they become eligible for examination? Mr. PADGETT. The Secretary has advertised generally and anybody that makes application can take the examination.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, one of the most remarkable things I have ever seen or heard of in connection with such matters, under the gentleman's statement, is the list of officers or citizens named for a probationary period of two years by the President of the United States. On January 10 last, the President sent in the nomination of 10 citizens to be second lieutenants in the Marine Corps for the probationary period of two years. Among those names I find the following: Louis W. Whaley, of South Carolina. John M. Arthur, of South Carolina. James F. Jeffords, of South Carolina. Thomas P. Cheatham, of South Carolina.

William C. James, of South Carolina. Of course, they make only 5 out of the 10. It may be that they are more enterprising in seeking these advertised-for examinations

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. MANN. Not yet. I would like to use a little of my own time first.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. MANN. No. I will give the gentlemen information, if they do not have it; and if they do have it, let them keep quiet until I get through.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, on February 6 the President sent in the names of 22 citizens for the same position of second lieutenants for a probationary period. Among those names find the following:

Charles P. Gilchrist, of South Carolina. Karl I. Buse, of South Carolina. John R. Martin, of South Carolina. Samuel A. Woods, jr., of South Carolina. David H. Owen, of South Carolina. James K. Bolton, of South Carolina. James T. Moore, of South Carolina. William C. Byrd, of South Carolina. George B. Reynolds, of South Carolina.

There were altogether 32 names in the two lists. Thirteen of those come from South Carolina and 6 from Virginia. Three come from all of the Northern States. Of course, I am assuming that it is because the citizens of South Carolina are either more enterprising in answering these advertisements or else they are more capable in passing the examinations.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit?

Mr. MANN. It is such a peculiar circumstance that I think it is perfectly proper to call attention to it. Of course when I see the distinguished gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. RAGSDALE] now standing in the center aisle just in front of me, I can understand how they can pass a better examination than the citizens from any place else in this country.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. You for an application of the pass of the pass

Mr. MANN. Yes; for an explanation or an apology, either

Mr. PADGETT. I should have stated that under the provisions of the law the graduates of military schools of a certain type and character are entitled to and are considered for the appointment, and upon inquiry I was told that most of those, or many of them, were graduates of these schools.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, in the first place, there is no such law; and, in the second place, it is ridiculous for any gentle-man, either by way of explanation or apology, to say that when you come to take the schools of the country, South Carolina, as to a competitive examination, would have a percentage of 13 out of 32.

Mr. PADGETT. Under the law the Secretary made regulations recognizing certain schools.

Mr. MANN. Oh, yes; he makes regulations that take care of South Carolina.

Mr. PADGETT. But all of these men were not graduates of South Carolina schools. They were graduates of schools of other States of the Union.

Mr. MANN. 'The gentleman is seeking now to convey to the House the impression that if you scatter South Carolina students all over the country, no one else has an even chance to compete with them; that they can not come up to them. Mr. Chairman, I admit that South Carolina is a great State and that its people are the smartest in the United States, if not in the whole world. I make that admission, and will not require proof from any of the gentlemen from South Carolina; and yet it hardly seems quite the proper method of selecting officers for the Marine Corps or any other branch of the Government service to fix it so that South Carolina and Virginia, between them, get 19 appointments out of 32.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] is so obsessed with the idea that South Carolina is going to get something that even in the case of filling these appointments, where the men have accepted commissions and have gone to the front in Santo Domingo, where they are now doing duty as marines, he can not even stop chiding my State for sending these men to the front. South Carolina may not be as large a State as Illinois, but if you will go to the border, where the soldiers are on duty, you will find that the number and the service of those from South Carolina will compare very favorably with the soldiers from the State of Illinois. I want to say to the gentleman respecting the appointments, in so far as the Citadel is concerned, that men from the North recognize it as one of the honor schools of this Government, one of the honor military schools of the country, and when I learned that these appointments were to be made under regulations I wrote to the commandant of that school and asked him to give me the names of all of the graduates who were permitted to compete for it. I wrote a number of letters, and the commandant wrote them letters, and it is because of that fact that they came here under the regulations and stood the examination. If, forsooth, there are more men from that small State of South Carolina than from the State of Illinois in this trying hour of our country's need who apply to go to the front to fight her battles and protect her flag, it seems to me, if I were the gentleman representing that State, I would not want to call attention to it. The positions they have sought, and to which they have been appointed, are not sinecures. They are not swivel-chair positions, not places where they can hang around Washington and wear parade uniforms, but these men have had to go and serve where neither the gentleman nor myself have ever served, in places of danger, to protect the flag, and they have to go wherever the Marine Corps is ordered to go. But surely, when these young men are willing to devote their lives to their country's needs and go out and give this service, it ill becomes so great a man as the gentleman from Illinois to stand on this floor and chide this Government for accepting their services, or my little State for offering them, in this hour of the country's need.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I sometimes have regretted that the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. RAGSDALE] himself had not been admitted to the Marine Corps, so that he would not be a Member of the House.

Mr. RAGSDALE. I am quite sure the gentleman would like to lose just a few more from the Democratic side, because he will be badly in need of them before he is Speaker.

We have got enough.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I want to be satisfied about I am not crediting citizens of one State with having more patriotism than those of another, but it will be interesting to me to know how all these young men from these two States reached the Marine Corps. I understood the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs to say it was by reason of some naval regulation. If these young men from these two States, after taking a competent examination, had gotten a better average than the young men from other States, I have not any criticism, but if the school from which they were graduated was selected as one from which its graduates were not required to take an examination, then I do take the exception, and ask the chairman to answer the question and put the inquiry at rest. There is a great deal of criticism and unfavorable comment upon the large proportion of appointments from these two States of the Union. Nineteen out of thirty-two appointments to the Marine Corps have been selected-

Mr. PADGETT. I understand that the Secretary has a list of schools in a number of States, and has placed them upon the same basis, and he takes the graduates from any and all of these schools and puts them on the same basis, where they have a certificate of graduation from that school of a certain standard; and if they pass that examination, and then they have their physical examination, they are entitled to be nominated. That applies to any school in any State that has the requirements of the standard prescribed for this character of military training.

Mr. BUTLER. Does the gentleman know the character of the schools? Can he tell us one of these schools?

Mr. PADGETT. I do not. I do not know where the schools are. I do not know where the schools are located; I do not know where these men graduate. I just understood that they were graduates of a military school that was on the list which met the standards or requirement or recognition, just as West Point has a list of a number of schools over the country where they accept their certificate in lieu of the examination that is required.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, of course the Secretary of the Navy will be pleased to give us this regulation, but I do know of a number of young men from the State of Pennsylvania who have been studying here one year and were compelled to take a hard competitive examination before they received a commission in the Marine Corps.

Mr. PADGETT. I know of a number from Tennessee who did

; some passed and some failed.

Mr. BUTLER. It is open to criticism and it is open to unfavorable comment that 19 young men out of two States of the Union should be selected to fill 32 places and without examination and without competition.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.
Mr. FESS. I do not just this minute recall, but will the gentleman tell me the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs in another body?

Mr. BUTLER. I can not at this minute recall. [Laughter.] Mr. GARDNER. Will the gentleman yield for an interruption?
Mr. BUTLER. I am told that we are required to say "in another body" instead of "the Senate of the United States."

Mr. GARDNER. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. BUTLER. Yes.

Mr. GARDNER. The gentleman from Tennessee points out the fact that young men are admitted to the academy at West Point without examination, an academy where they are to be taught and from which they must graduate before they become second lieutenants. Is not that very different from admitting young men as second lieutenants direct without examination?

Mr. PADGETT. If they meet the standard which is involved in the examination to be held at that time, and if they do accept the standard, that is equivalent to the requirements of their examination.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have a minute or two

Mr. PADGETT. And I want to say it is a probational appointment for two years

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for two or three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BUTLER. I have made no criticism of the administration of this department, but I am suspicious that the method by which these men are selected is not fair toward other applicants, and, for one, I propose to find out how it has been done.

I do not believe it is just to ambitious young Americans generally to designate an institution and then provide that if one graduates from that institution he shall be admitted to this corps. I am unwilling that this Government should be an advertising agent for any school. I am unwilling that it shall hold out any premium, prize, or reward to a young man to induce him to attend a certain institution that he may have an appointment in the United States service without examination or competition. I believe that all of the young men in the United States who desire to go into military life should have the same opportunity, and that they should not be met in their attempt by exempted graduates of certain institutions in the United States and those institutions designated by any one man.

ates and thou.
Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Chairman, will
Mr. CALLAWAY. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. BUTLER. Yes.
The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CALLAWAY]?

Mr. BUTLER. I yield to the gentleman from Texas. Mr. CALLAWAY. Is it not a fact that we have a Is it not a fact that we have a number of schools throughout the United States where we detail officers as teachers?
Mr. BUTLER. We have many of them.

Mr. CALLAWAY. And where they are supposed to get the same instruction as at West Point?

Mr. BUTLER. I did not hear the gentleman distinctly, and so my colleagues inform me that my answer was not responsive. Military education would not be developed at these institutions like at West Point. The country is filled with institutions. I think there must be 60 or 80 such where young men are taught military duties, and they should have a fair chance with other voung men.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Do they not have a fair chance?
Mr. BUTLER. I do not know whether they do or not. It does not seem so to me. The gentleman from Texas knows as well as I do that other educational institutions in the United

Mr. CALLAWAY. Why all this discussion without any further facts than just saying here that a few more come from one State than another.

Mr. BUTLER. Three appointments, as the gentleman from Illinois said, out of 32. Three from the Northern States.

Mr. CALLAWAY. How many stood the examination?
Mr. BUTLER. I do not know; but there were 32 appointed.
Of the 32, as I understand now, 19 were appointed without examination.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

The argument of the gentleman from Tennessee is entirely unsound. He says that these young men were required to show a definite standard before they could be commissioned second lieutenants in the Marine Corps. By whom was the standard judged? By the teachers at this school in Charleston, S. C., known as The Citadel, or by the teachers at some other school. That standard was not reviewed by anybody in the employ of the United States. The Navy Department took the judgment of those teachers in those schools, and yet unquestionably they must be prejudiced judges.

The gentleman compares this exemption from examination with the exemption from examination accorded to certain candidates for West Point who can present a graduation certificate from certain chosen schools. The cases are not parallel. It is a fact, I am sorry to say, that boys are admitted to West Point on the certificate of certain schools at which they prepared. But before those boys can be commissioned in the Army Uncle Sam does not depend on the word of any schoolmasters on earth except his own schoolmasters. There is the distinction between the two cases. In one case young men without any examination are given commissions in Uncle Sam's Marine Corps on the say-so of their own private schoolmasters. In the other case they are admitted to West Point to study for a commission in Uncle Sam's Army on the say-so of their own private schoolmasters, but they do not get any commission until Uncle Sam has found they are qualified to receive it.

Now, another thing. There has been some talk to the effect that these young men from these southern schools are perhaps better prepared than boys from northern schools. Mr. Chairman, we have what is known as the apportionment law in the civil service. The reason for the enactment of that apportionment law is that candidates from the Southern States for the Federal civil service do not get as high passing marks as candidates from the Northern States. The argument which the Civil Service Commission makes in defense of that apportionment law rests on the assertion that the South has not the facilities for adequate schooling, but that in other qualities these southern applicants are superior to the applicants from the Northern States. Never before have I heard anyone contend that in a competitive examination candidates from the Southern States could come within striking distance of candidates from the Northern States. It is not the fault of the South. I realize that this lack of educational facilities was one of the inevitable results of the Civil War. It was the result of their poverty and of the problems that confronted them. This apparent discrimination in favor of South Carolina and Virginia, whether the result of adroit rules or the result of the tipping of the early wink to favored schools, needs investigation.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of line 25 insert the following proviso:
"Provided, That no part of any appropriation herein shall be used to pay any officer on the active list of the Navy or Marine Corps who shall engage in any private business, either actively or as a consulting expert, or permit any person, firm, or corporation or association to use his name in the conduct of its business."

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. HICKS. Will the gentleman reserve the point of order? Mr. PADGETT. Yes; I will reserve it. Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, did the gentleman reserve the point of order?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, my purpose in offering the amendment was on account of the statement I made here a few moments ago in regard to men on the active list in the Navy and Marine Corps engaging in active business in the management of concerns or as consulting experts. And it seems to me that if the Government of the United States pays these men in the active service a full wage the Government should have the entire service of those men in the affairs of the Government, and that those services should not be utilized by any commercial enterprise for the sake of profit.

Mr. PADGETT. I agree with the gentleman as to the general

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. HICKS. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.
Mr. MANN. The language of the amendment, as I understood it, applies probably only to the appropriation for the pay of officers in the Marine Corps.

Mr. PADGETT. No; it says "officers of the Navy and of the Marine Corps."

Mr. MANN. Yes; but it is offered as an amendment, apparently, to a provision which covers only the pay of officers of the Marine Corps.

of the Marine Corps.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANN. And hence would not have any effect, if it went into the law, if it applied only to that appropriation, on the pay of the officers of the Navy. But from the way it was read, apparently, it strikes me that it would cover officers on the verticed list. the retired list.

Mr. HICKS. No; officers on the active list.

Very well. Mr. MANN.

Mr. HICKS. I realize, Mr. Chairman, that it does not cover exactly what I intended, and that is why I asked permission of the Chairman to allow a return to the right part of the bill where it could be offered properly, and the chairman thought it best not to agree that it should be done Therefore I have offered it here.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HICKS. Yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. I suggest that the gentleman is not in as bad a position as he thinks. At the end of the bill a limitation can be placed upon all the expenditures in the bill, which would certainly apply to those relating to pay.

Mr. PADGETT. The limitation sought here is broader than the legislation to which it is sought to be affixed, and the objection to it is that it is legislation that ought to be considered and matured carefully by the House. We do not know what the legislation ought to be or what the conflicts might be. I insist that this limitation is offered on legislation respecting the Marine Corps, while the limitation is intended to apply to the Navy as well as to the Marne Corps.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to strike out of the amendment the words "and of the Navy," so that it will apply only to officers of the Marine Corps.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the proposed modification.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike from the amendment the words "and of the Navy."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?
Mr. BUTLER. Reserving the right to object, there is no criticism of the Marine Corps. Why, then, try it on the Marine Corps? Why will not the chairman allow us to offer an amendment at the right place?
Mr. PADGETT. We cought to make the right place?

Mr. PADGETT. We ought to understand it thoroughly. If we understood it and could understand whether it conflicts or not, it might not be objectionable; but offered in this way, without investigation, I do not think it is a good plan of legislation.

Mr. STAFFORD. The bill probably will not be finished tonight. Would the gentleman have any objection to considering it to-morrow?

Mr. PADGETT. If I can see it and ascertain what the substance of it is, and see that it is well grounded, I would not have any objection to well-considered and well-digested legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the Chair understand that the gentleman from Tennessee makes a point of order?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; at the present time.
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Tennessee on the point of order.

Mr. PADGETT. I think that, so far as striking out the words "and of the Navy" is concerned—and that is the state it is in now, is it not?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that the committee agreed that the words as applied to the Navy should be stricken out, which makes it applicable only to the Marine Corps.

Mr. PADGETT. Well, it is useless to put that in. There is no complaint with reference to the Marine Corps. I ask the gentleman from New York to withdraw it so that we can see whether or not something can be prepared that has some merit

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I think that is perfectly fair. Mr. HICKS. With that understanding, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment.

The gentleman from New York asks unani-The CHAIRMAN. mous consent to withdraw his amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Pay of enlisted men, active and reserve list: Pay and allowances of noncommissioned officers, musicians, and privates, as prescribed by law, and for the expenses of clerks of the United States Marine Corps traveling under orders, and including additional compensation for enlisted men of the Marine Corps regularly detailed as gun captains, gun pointers, mess sergeants, cooks, messmen, signalmen, or holding good-conduct medals, pins, or bars, including interest on deposits by enlisted men, post-exchange debts of deserters, under such rules as the Secretary of the Navy may prescribe, and the authorized travel allowance of discharged enlisted men and for prizes for excellence in gunnery exercise and target practice and for pay of enlisted men designated as Navy mall clerks and assistant Navy mail clerks, both affoat and ashore:

Provided, That the provisions of the act of May 27, 1908 (35 Stats., 417, 418), as amended by the act of August 24, 1912 (37 Stats., 560), are hereby extended to authorize the designation of enlisted men of the Navy or Marine Corps as Navy mail clerks and assistant Navy mail clerks with expeditionary forces on shore. In all, $4,800,532.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman. I reserve a point of order

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin reserves a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, it was my privilege, as a member of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, to draft the provision of the law authorizing naval mail clerks and assistant mail clerks, so as to enable the enlisted men on our battleships to have the privilege of a better mail service. I wish now to inquire of the gentleman from Tennessee what modification of that law is carried in the paragraph under consideration?

Mr. PADGETT. It does not modify the law that now exists. This simply makes it apply to the Marine Corps. It already applies to the Navy, but does not apply to the Marine Corps. The Marine Corps is the service that does the expeditionary work, as in Haiti and Santo Domingo and Nicaragua, where they go out in advance work. This is simply giving the same privilege to the Marine Corps that is now provided by law for the Navy

Mr. STAFFORD. It is not the purpose to have an extra man or seaman on each battleship to take care of the mail of the marines on that battleship?

Mr. PADGETT. Not at all. It is simply to allow a man to be designated to perform that duty, one of the enlisted men, so that he may have an official status. It does not involve any pay, or additional men, or anything of that kind.

Mr. STAFFORD. Under the original law, I beg to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that there was extra compensation provided for those who performed the work of mail clerks and assistant mail clerks.

Mr. PADGETT. I do not remember as to that.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, yes. We granted them a small additional compensation. We thought it no more than right, in case they performed this responsible work of distributing the mail, and registering mail, and, I believe, issuing money orders, that they should be compensated for that service, in the main not to exceed $600, if my memory serves me aright.

Mr. PADGETT. This simply extends to the Marine Corps the same privileges as are now extended to the Navy.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is for that service on land in connection with expeditionary forces, and not in connection with their service on the vessels?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois reserves a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman explain how this mail service is handled? Under this method are the naval forces of the United States permitted to drop a letter into the mail box on board a ship or here on land or anywhere in the world, and then it is transmitted here and a 2-cent stamp is put upon it or a 2-cent stamp put upon it over there? Under this method are members of the naval forces of the United States permitted to drop letters in a mail box on board ship or on land anywhere in the world, and then is the letter transmitted here and a 2-cent stamp put on it, or is a 2-cent stamp put on it over

Mr. PADGETT. The mail would be under the general postal laws and subject to the requirements of the postal laws. is simply to allow a man to act in the capacity of a mail clerk. It does not affect the law or the postage.

Mr. MANN. I think the gentleman is mistaken about that.

Mr. PADGETT. No. That is what I understand that to be. Mr. MANN. Supposing a man in the naval service mails a letter in Shanghai, what postage does he pay?

Mr. PADGETT. As I understand it, he pays the same postage that anybody else would pay under the law regulating

Mr. MANN. What is that? Mr. PADGETT. I do not know. Mr. STAFFORD. Two cents, if Two cents, if it is deposited in the United States post office at Shanghal.

Mr. PADGETT. The gentleman from Tennessee said he would pay the same as anyone else. What is that? The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Stafford] is posted.
Mr. STAFFORD. What is the gentleman's question?

What is the postage from Shanghai to the MANN. United States?

Mr. STAFFORD. Two cents. Mr. MANN. To everybody?

Mr. STAFFORD. It is; and the same from or to the Philippines. The United States has a branch postal station at Shanghai, and the rate of postage is the same, if my memory serves me right.

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. If the gentleman will yield, I have received a number of letters from my son, who is superintendent of agriculture in the Philippines, and the postage was always 4 cents on his letters. I do not know what the rate is.

Mr. STAFFORD. That is because the gentleman's son is very considerate and writes him long letters which weigh more than an ounce.

Mr. MANN. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers on amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. GARDNER: On page 50, line 8, strike out "$4,800,532" and insert "$5,700,532."

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, that amendment would not accomplish anything-

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, I should like recognition. The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognized the gentleman from Tennessee because he anticipated that the gentleman was going to make a point of order. If not, the gentleman from Massachusetts, who offers the amendment, is entitled to recognition. Mr. GARDNER. No point of order lies against this amendment, Mr. Chairman. A point of order would lie if I were to offer a clause which in terms would raise the pay of the men of the Marine Corps. However, that clause will be inserted in the Senate if this amendment increasing the amount of money available for Marine Corps pay is adopted. The amendment which I now offer increases the amount of money available for Marine Corps pay just enough to enable the Navy paymaster to give the enlisted men $5 per month more each. However, to give the enisted men $5 per month more each. However, this amendment will not be adopted. Yesterday you voted down a similar amendment which I proposed for increasing the pay of enlisted men of the Navy $5 per month per man. This amendment is proposed only for the purpose of emphasizing my view that men of the Marine Corps, as well as men in the Navy, ought to have their pay raised $5 per month per man. The gentleman need not reply, because I expect the amendment to be voted down, and I offer it merely for the sake of uniformity.

Mr. PADGETT. I simply want to state that the pay of the Marine Corps is fixed in the Army appropriation bill. The law provides that they shall receive the same pay as is provided by the Army bill, and to appropriate this additional amount would not accomplish anything.

Mr. GARDNER. The gentleman realizes that if it were not for the point of order which might be raised everything which we desire could be accomplished in this bill. It makes no dif-ference what the law says at present. If the gentleman raises no point of order and the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union choose to so vote, we can make the pay of members of the Marine Corps $100 per month per man, irrespective of the present law.

Mr. PADGETT. Certainly; but there is no necessity for it, because in August we authorized an increase in the Marine Corps of 5,000 men, and I understand they have gotten something like half of them already, since the 1st of September.

Mr. GARDNER. That is perfectly true. The increased pay is not needed in the Marine Corps, as it is in the Navy, in order to secure men. We can get men to go into the Marine Corps, because it is the favorite branch of the service. That is no reason why Uncle Sam should take advantage of men's necessities and underpay them.

Mr. TOWNER. Is it not a fact that the pay of the Navy has been fixed not by statute but by departmental orders, the only exception to that being the increase that was made by statute last year, when 10 per cent was added to the pay which

Mr. PADGETT. That 10 per cent was added in 1908.
Mr. TOWNER. I mean 1908.
Mr. GARDNER. It was added in 1908, and the pay now is $17.60 a month by statute, though the gentleman is correct as to the origin of the legislation.

Mr. TOWNER. It is not fixed by statute even at $17.60.
Mr. GARDNER. It was increased by statute 10 per cent over what it was at the time the statute was passed; that is, $16 per month.

Mr. TOWNER. And that was fixed by departmental order.
Mr. GARDNER. Yes.
The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] has referred to certain appointments in the Marine Corps from the States of Virginia and South Carolina. At the time that his state-ment was made I had no information on the subject, so I undertook to call the Secretary of the Navy's office. I found that the Secretary was absent; but in conversation with Gen. Barnett, the commandant of the Marine Corps, I have secured some information, which will be supplemented in a few minutes by a written statement from Gen. Barnett, and which I ask permission to place in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. OLIVER. Gen. Barnett states over the phone that last year he called this matter to the attention of the Secretary, and that the Secretary called the different bureaus together to consider the suggestion which he—Gen. Barnett—made, and as a result of such conference 12 or more distinguished schools, widely scattered, were written to for a list of graduates answering certain requirements.

Gen. Barnett conducted the correspondence, and informs me that from some of the schools no responses were received. The names submitted by the presidents of these different schools were carefully considered, and from such lists the selections were made. He assures me there was absolutely no discrimination, and that every name submitted was considered; and, so far as he knows, no complaints have been registered, either as to the method of selection or the young men selected.

Mr. TREADWAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLIVER. I will. Mr. TREADWAY. Will the gentleman inform us whether any inquiry was made as to the nature of the examination given at these schools?

My understanding is that there was a full Mr. OLIVER. inquiry made by Gen. Barnett, and that a certain standard was fixed which all applying for admission were required to meet.

Mr. TREADWAY. May I ask whether the examination papers as conducted at the school reached the Marine Corps here for its official recognition?

Mr. OLIVER. I understand that the graduation certificates were sent and also the grades made by such graduates.

Mr. MANN. May I inquire of the gentleman who gave him this information?

Mr. OLIVER. Gen. Barnett himself. He is just back from Haiti, and informs me that he is now preparing a written statement to be sent me on the subject.

Mr. MANN. It does not change the queerness of the situ-

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Will the gentleman from Alabama also put in the names of the 12 colleges? I am interested in that.

Mr. OLIVER. I will. In reply to the remark of the gentleman from Illinois, I think all who are familiar with Gen. Mr. OLIVER. Barnett are glad to testify to his splendid efficiency as an officer and his high character as a man, and I am sure that any statement which he may make in reference to this matter will have the respectful and thoughtful consideration of every Member of the House.

It will be noted in the statement supplied by Gen. Barnett, and which I will here set out, that the University of Illinois was written to and no reply received. Gen. Barnett informs me, however, that he hopes when this splendld institution is written to again a number of its graduates will be submitted for consideration. The statement from Gen. Barnett is as follows:

HEADQUARTERS UNITED STATES MARINE CORPS,
COMMANDANT'S OFFICE,
Washington, February 9, 1917.

Headquarters United States Marine Corps,

Washington, February 3, 1917.

My Dear Mr. Oliver: In connection with your telephonic communication with me this date, requesting information as to how young men designated as second lieutenants, graduates of certain colleges, were appointed, I have to state as follows:

When the naval appropriation bill passed on August 29 last I took the question of filling the vacancies (255 in number) up with the Secretary of the Navy. This matter was brought up at a council meeting with the Secretary and fully discussed. I proposed at this meeting that I be authorized to fill certain vacancies in the Marine Corps by the appointment of graduates of the military colleges designated by the President in general orders each year as "distinguished colleges." After a full discussion of this matter, the Secretary and the whole council decided that, as only a very few graduates of the Naval Academy could be spared, it would be a good thing to fill a reasonable number of the vacancies by the appointment of graduates of these distinguished military colleges. The Secretary of the Navy then authorized me to communicate with the presidents of these colleges and to designate not to exceed 60 of the graduates recommended by the presidents of the colleges. From many of the colleges we received no recommendations whatever, having heard that a great many of their graduates had gone into the Army.

Each graduate authorized to appear for physical examination was required to present his graduating diploma together with a letter of recommendation from the president of the institution, and also numerous letters as to moral character and general standing in the community from which he came. Most of the applications came from the Virginia Military Institute, Lexington, Va.; the Citadel, Charleston, S. C.; some from St. John's College, Annapolis, Md.; and some from Norwich University, Northfield, Vt. I am appending herewith a complete list of the colleges from which recommendations to make; in fact, the majo on duty at said institutions. As I stated to you, I would gladly have taken a great many more of the graduates than I was able to get, because, as stated above, I only secured 39 in toto from these institutions.

Before presenting this question to the Secretary of the Navy, I had heard so much of the good qualities of the Virginia Military Institute that I visited that institution last June and spent several days in going over their curriculum and witnessing drills of all kinds and talking with the superintendent and officers on duty there and with many of the cadets. In fact, this visit was the deciding factor which led me to make the proposition to the Secretary of the Navy. In selecting any graduates from one of these institutions the State he came from was never considered. Since these young men were designated we have held examinations all over the United States, at which any young man who made application or made known his desire to appear before the board was allowed to appear, and out of the total number examined (86 in all) only 29 successfully passed for entry into the Marine Corps from civil life. In this connection, I sent over 1,400 letters to young men all over the country who had in any manner requested information as to how he might get a commission in the Marine Corps. This 1,400 included the names of all young men recommended for appointment from any source.

Of the young men who have already been commissioned from these designated military schools, they have been ordered to duty at once in Haiti and Santo Domingo, and a late inspection of the Marine Corps posts in these countries developed the fact that these young men are doing unusually well and their commanding officers speak in the highest terms of them. Candidates from civil life, without such preliminary training at a military school, have to be sent to our school at Norfolk for 18 months before they can be assigned any military duty. Therefore, it may be seen that appointments from these designated colleges give far better returns to t

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words for the purpose of getting the floor. Mr. Chairman, without entering into the merits of the controversy raised on this point, I think in justice to the South Carolina Military Institute I should say a word, while the House is on this subject, concerning that institution.

Last year it was my privilege to be in Charleston and to see the students at the institute, and to inspect what is known as the Citadel, the South Carolina Military Institute. Inasmuch as a question like this has come up on the floor, one who knows about the institution should take the time to say a word in its behalf. · I do not take the floor to argue the merits or demerits of the proposition raised here on either side. I think too much sectionalism is raised, anyhow. This institution, I may say, is known as the West Point of the South. There are men attending that school from a great number of States. It is the same with the Military Institute in Virginia.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. I will.

Mr. BUTLER. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Did I understand the gentleman to say that this institution of which he now speaks has a great many students from different States of the Union?

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. I will say that the students are not confined to the State of South Carolina.

Mr. BUTLER. They may not be confined to the State of South Carolina; but do students from other States go to this institution?

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. I know they do, but I can not go into the details.

Mr. BUTLER. It seems queer that a boy from your State and a boy from my State could not compete with the boys from South

Mr. MANN. If our boys can not stand it with the South

Carolinians, they ought not to go.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. There were two hundred and fifty-odd students at that institution. Lieut. Garey, of the Regular Army, is detailed there as instructor.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. How long is the course?

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Four years, the same as in any other college. Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not want to get mixed up in the merits of the proposition raised here. My purpose in taking the floor was to say that in my opinion—and I think it will be borne out by the people who know on both sides as well as the Committee on Military Affairs—that the men who graduate from the South Carolina Military Institute are fitted in every way to enter this branch of the service on the same terms as other men who are educated without going to either the Naval or the Military Academy.

I never saw a finer set of men than at the institute at Charleston. The same applies to the Virginia Military Institute, the Culver Institute in Indiana, the Pennsylvania Institute at Chester, Pa., and the rest of the list that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER] referred to, and which I asked him to put in his remarks, and which I think will clear up a good deal of the misconception on this point as to sectionalism. I thought that I ought to mention this South Carolina Institute inasmuch as I have been there and seen what a splendid institution they have and the splendid men educated there. [Applause.] I yield back the balance of my time.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay and allowances prescribed by law of enlisted men on the retired list: For 9 sergeants major, 1 drum major, 23 gunnery sergeants, 37 quartermaster sergeants, 43 first sergeants, 66 sergeants, 21 corporals, 20 first-class musicians, 1 drummer, and 24 privates, and for those who may be retired during the fiscal year, $175,986.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. This item carries $175,986 for pay of enlisted men and enlisted officers on the retired list. The previous Rem carries $198,000 and odd for pay of officers on the retired list. So far as the gentleman knows, has there been any computation made of how many of these officers might be used in active service in case we should get into trouble where we needed trained officers? In other words, many men on the retired list may be retired because of such age that they can not go back and do active service, really, and many men on the retired list have been injured so that they can not do it, but there are many men upon the retired list who would make very useful officers in the active service, at least temporarily, when we need trained men.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, in case of war or emergency yes; and the Secretary stated, and the Chief of the Bureau of Navigation stated that they had a list, that they had sent to from the register.

every retired officer a designation of a specific duty and a specific assignment that was required of him if an emergency arose or if war was declared, and that every one of these retired officers has in his possession instructions which, of course, are confidential, as to what designation and what assignment he would have, the moment he was notified of the necessity of his service, and he would go directly and report for that duty.

Mr. MANN. I do not see how it could do any injury to make a statement as to the number of these officers who might be used in active service. I asked whether the gentleman had any such computation.

Mr. PADGETT. No; I have not the number. I have what is declared to be the status of the matter, that they have all of these officers assigned and that they have their instructions where to go. I can not give the gentleman the number.

Mr. MANN. We have complaint all of the time that they have not enough officers in the Navy, and we are requested to increase the number of officers. Why do we not know, so far as this emergency is concerned, how many we will have?

Mr. PADGETT. The statement was made here this afternoon. The list of retired officers is published in the Navy

Register

Mr. MANN. I know, but many of them can not possibly go to

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.
Mr. SHERLEY. I just want to say to the gentleman that my understanding is that every retired officer has been asked to indicate to the Navy Department what work he considers himself fit and able to do. I am informed that they have accordingly made statements to the Navy Department. As to what work they have been designated for in the event of need, I do not know

Mr. MANN. Does not the gentleman from Kentucky think that the House, or at least the Committee on Naval Affairs, might properly be informed as to the number of men who could be put into real active service in case of emergency?

Mr. SHERLEY. I am not questioning that. It so happened that a rear admiral of the Navy came to me the other day touching another retired officer. He himself is much too old to be able to do any active work, and he spoke of a request of that kind having been made and of the work he thought this particular officer could do with very great benefit to the country. That is the way I came to know of the inquiry being made of them.

Mr. MANN. The wonder to me is that this information is not given to us.

Mr. PADGETT. I do not know the number, I can not tell how many out of the 900 could be assigned to active duty.

Mr. MANN. I doubt very much whether the Navy knows; but if they do we ought to know.

Mr. PADGETT. I presume the Navy does know, and I shall try to find out and give the gentleman the information in the morning

The Clerk read as follows:

Pay of civil force: In the office of the major general commandant: One chief clerk, at $2,000; 1 clerk, at $1,800; 1 messenger, at $971.28.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I desire to ask the chairman of the committee how many officers we have actively engaged in the Navy at this time. He said there were 900 upon the retired list.

Mr. PADGETT. There are something over 4,000 at the present time, I think. It was something over 3,900, counting the It was something over 3,900, counting the line and the staff, last year, and that, if I remember correctly, was prior to the graduation of the class at Annapolis last year, and I think there were something like 150 or 160 in that graduating class

Mr. CALLAWAY. Can the chairman give the exact number on the retired list?

Mr. PADGETT. It is published in the register, if the gentleman will look at it.

Mr. CALLAWAY. I want it in the Record.
Mr. PADGETT. I can not give the gentleman that. Somebody stated here this afternoon there were about 900. I have not looked it up myself.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to know how many of these 900 are admirals and how many admirals we have actually got engaged in active service.

Mr. PADGETT. Counting the extra numbers, there are somewhere between 25 and 30.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Actually engaged in actual service?
Mr. PADGETT. Counting the extra numbers.
Mr. CALLAWAY. How many on the retired list?
Mr. PADGETT. I do not know. The gentleman can get that

Mr. CALLAWAY. Will the chairman please put in his statement in reply to this question how many rear admirals are on

Mr. PADGETT. If the gentleman will just turn to the Navy Mr. CALLAWAY. I would rather have it from the chairman.
Mr. PADGETT. The gentleman can get it.
Mr. CALLAWAY. If I put it in, somebody may question it,

Mr. CALLAWAY. If I put it in, somebody may question it, but if the chairman puts it in nobody will question it.

Mr. PADGETT. I will try to look it up and put it in.

Mr. CALLAWAY. In connection with this statement.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit me to answer the question I have the list here and it says 145 rear admirals on the retired list. This is from January 1, 1916.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. How many on the active list? Mr. PADGETT. Between 25 and 30. This is not the last Navy Register, though.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the pro forms amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection. The Clerk read as follows:

In the office of the paymaster: One chief clerk, at $2,000; one clerk, at $1,500; one clerk, at $1,200.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, I intended to make an inquiry about the paragraph preceding the one which has just been read. is one of several items for pay of the civil force in the office of the major general commandant-one chief clerk at $2,000, and so forth.

Mr. PADGETT. What page is the gentleman reading from?

Mr. MANN. At the bottom of page 50 and the top of page 51 I looked around the Chamber when this item was read and wondered I did not see some member of the Committee on Appropriations make a point of order on it and claim jurisdiction. Are not these employees engaged in the office of the commandant general here in Washington?

Mr. PADGETT. They are in the office here in Washington, and they have always been carried in this bill.

Mr. MANN. The paymaster is in Washington?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANN. The adjutant and inspector is in Washington? Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANN. The quartermaster is in Washington? Mr. PADGETT. These are all here in the department, but some of these are—

Mr. MANN. The Committee on Appropriations has been very energetic lately insisting upon jurisdiction over items of this character so that I am surprised they do not take charge of it However, it was my sympathies to these men which caused me to make this inquiry. If these employees were cared for on the legislative bill, those who draw salaries under $1,800 a year would probably get an increase, certainly would get an increase if the salaries were under $1,000. There might be some at that rate. I think there is one carried in this bill, but as it is they will get no increase of salary at all. This will be one time when the clerks will want to be carried in the legislative bill. Heretofore they have wanted to stay in this bill, and they have stayed in this bill, and the result will be they will have to be a little more economical the next fiscal year than the other clerks under similar circumstances.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I was called out of the Hall a moment ago and just as I entered the Hall I understood the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Padgett] and other gentlemen were discussing the proposition as to how many officers were on the retired list who the Navy Department could call to the colors.

Now, I want to ask the gentleman this question: Whether or not the law now requires the Secretary of the Navy to have men who are on the retired list and yet able to do considerable work to be examined from time to time and be assigned to duty?

Mr. PADGETT. No, sir.

Mr. COX. Now, what earthly objections could there be to such laws as that?

Mr. PADGETT. The law provides that men upon the retired list can be called into active duty and receive active pay in the case of emergency or in war. They are all subject to call. In times of any emergency, upon their application, the Secretary of the Navy may assign them to duty and they receive the pay not exceeding that of a lieutenant commander, unless it is their own retired pay. If their own retired pay exceeds that of a lieutenant commander, they receive their own retired pay.

Mr. COX. Now, if the gentleman will yield further. Evidently there is some necessity, for the gentleman from Virginia in the last year's Army reorganization bill reported in the bill this provision, except in the Army bill it applied to Army officers on the retired list, and this, if enacted into a law, would apply to officers of the Navy on the retired list:

That the Secretary of the Navy shall make a list of all officers who have been placed on the retired list for disability and shall cause such officers to be examined at such intervals as may be advisable, and such officers as shall be found to have recovered from such disability or to be able to perform service of value to the Government sufficient to warrant such action shall be assigned to such duty as the Secretary of the Navy may approve.

Now, will the gentleman explain what earthly objection there would or could be to incorporating a provision like that in

Mr. PADGETT. I do not think there is any necessity for it.

It is getting along very well.

Mr. COX. I do not know whether it is getting along very We are appropriating money here well or not.

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. COX. I can not yield now.

In response to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Callaway], who made the inquiry a moment ago, I have gone to the Navy Yearbook, and I want to put some figures in the Record here. There are men on the retired list of the Navy Department captains, average age 55, 16; commanders, with an average of 50, 19; commanders, with an average age of 45, 25; lieutenant commanders, with an average age of 45, 27; lieutenants commanders, with an average age of 45, 27; lieutenants, 27; lieutenants (junior grade), 22; ensigns, 27; passed assistant surgeons, 12; assistant surgeons, 6; paymasters, 8; passed assistant paymasters, 1; naval constructor, 1; assistant naval constructor, 1; ass structor, 1; or a total of 202.

Now, of those higher grade officers, their average age is 45. Then, in the Marine Corps there is 1 lieutenant colonel, whose age is 50, on the retired list. There are 4 majors, with an average age of 45, on the retired list; 17 captains; 10 first lieutenants; age age of 45, on the retired list, it captains, 10 instructionals, and 3 second lieutenants; or a total of 35. Noncommissioned officers, who are retired with rank of a commissioned officer, chief, 8; boatswain, 10; chief gunner, 4; gunner, 12; or a total of 34.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield for a question? Why is it that a person of 45 years of age is put on the retired list?

Mr. COX. You can search me. I do not know why. I can point out to the gentleman here in the city of Washington a man on the retired list, a graduate at Annapolis, who is now drawing $3,000 a year in the active practice of medicine, and there is another man, a graduate of Annapolis, who is now drawing $3,000, retired pay, and at the same time drawing a salary from the Government of about $1,400 a year in the United States Subtreasury at Philadelphia. If I had time I could enumerate case after case like that.

And yet, with an appropriation bill here amounting to nearly $500,000,000, building ships on top of ships, if we are short of anything in the world, it is of officers; and what objection the Navy Department can have to incorporating an amendment such as the one carried on the last Army reorganization bill, that would compel the Secretary of the Navy to examine these officers on the retired list and where they are able to do some work compel them to quit private employment and serve their country after the country has educated them is beyond my compre-

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired

Mr. TALBOTT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. TALBOTT. These people are not placed on the retired list until after they are examined.

Mr. COX. Yes; and they get well mighty quick after being placed on the retired list. They are able to do a good day's work in private employment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the debate on the paragraph and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the debate on the paragraph and all amendments thereto close in five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin objects.

Mr. STAFFORD. I do not like to have that compliment paid to me when I rise to address the committee.

Mr. PADGETT. I did not want to slight the gentleman. I simply want to get through with this bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. I want to reply to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] as to the need of having these departmental clerks included in this appropriation bill. I realize, and everybody else realizes, that it is in consonance with good legislative practice to have all the clerks in the departments here in Washington included in one bill. It is the only method that can be pursued in order to deal fairly and equitably with all concerned. I think it would be even better in the interest of good parliamentary procedure and for legislative convenience if the clerks in the Agricultural Department were brought within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations and included in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

Last year it was brought to our attention during the consideration of the Army appropriation bill that there were some departmental clerks in connection with the office of the Chief of Staff that are utilized here in Washington.

Mr. PADGETT. These are of the same character.

Mr. STAFFORD. There was some understanding that they should be included in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill. We attempted that this year, not with a desire to appropriate to ourselves legislation that applies to another committee, but with the sole purpose of having one rule applicable to all the clerks in the department. But when we did that this year the Committee on Military Affairs strongly resented our policy and came into the House and objected to their inclusion, and, on a fine technical parliamentary point, they were eliminated from the bill.

would like to inquire of the chairman of the Naval Committee whether there is any need of having these clerks connected with the departmental offices here in Washington included in the naval appropriation bill?

Mr. PADGETT. I will say to the gentleman— Mr. STAFFORD. I may say to my friend the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] before the gentleman replies, that we did not attempt to have these clerks stricken out of this bill this year because we realized that the department would be without any clerks at all if we did. The legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill is already in conference. could not provide for them otherwise.

But I wish to direct an inquiry of the chairman now as to whether, in the formation of next year's bill, it would not be better for legislative purposes to have the clerks provided for in these four paragraphs included in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill?

Mr. PADGETT. I think not. I think they ought to be under the control of the Naval Committee and in the naval bill, because they perform naval service, and they are under the jurisdiction of the Navy Department, and right in the offices performing largely naval service.

Mr. STAFFORD. Wherein are they more under the naval officers than the clerks carried in the legislative, executive, and judicial bill connected with the Bureau of Navigation and the Bureau of Construction and the Bureau of Yards and Docks?

Mr. MANN. Or in the office of the Secretary of the Navy? Mr. STAFFORD. Or the office of the Secretary of the Navy? All the activities of the Navy other than this one, are included, so far as the departmental clerks are concerned, in the legislative, executive, and judicial bill.

Mr. PADGETT. They have always been appropriated for in this bill, time out of mind.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is that the only argument the gentleman can advance in favor of their retention in this bill? not advance any other one, I will be tempted to call attention to the subject when the next legislative bill is considered for the sake of consistency and harmony to have these clerks carried in that bill.

Mr. PADGETT. I suppose in that event you would meet the same difficulty that you met on the Army bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, we might meet more. The Navy is much more potent with the big guns than the Army is with its little guns. But that, nevertheless, would be as good an argument in favor of the retention of these clerks in the naval appropriation bill as the members of the Committee on Military Affairs advanced in connection with the retention of those clerks connected with the office of the Chief of Staff.

Mr. PADGETT. I think we have all the arguments they had. Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman may have something up his sleeve that he is withholding, but I am tempted to call the bluff, and ask to have them included in the next legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In the office of the quartermaster: One chief clerk, at $2,000: 1 clerk, at $1,800; 1 clerk, at $1,500; 2 clerks, at $1,400 each; 2 clerks, at $1,200 each; 1 draftsman, at $2,200.

Mr. MANN. I reserve a point of order on the paragraph. What is the occasion for increasing the salary of this draftsman from $1,800 to $2,200? That seems an odd increase.

Mr. PADGETT. The reason he was increased was because he was offered that amount in another employment, and the department said he was a very valuable man, and they did not want to give him up.

Mr. MANN. He will probably be offered $2,500 or $3,000 next year, because private employers will pay, for particular men, more than the Government can pay, because the Government must pay more or less on a dead level between men.

Yes; but that is one of the services in the Mr. PADGETT. department where they are continually on a stress to keep up their necessary number of men.

Mr. MANN. What occasion do they have for a draftsman at all in the office of the quartermaster under ordinary circum-

Mr. PADGETT. They need one over there to do their drafting for their barracks and other work. Mr. MANN. Have they not learned yet how to construct barracks without making new plans for them?

Mr. PADGETT. They need the man there, and this man was offered $2,200, and they want to keep him.

Mr. MANN. Undoubtedly he is a competent man, but have they not discovered yet how to construct ordinary barracks without requiring new plans each time they put up a little

Mr. PADGETT. They do not always put them up just alike.

Mr. MANN. Why do they not?

Mr. PADGETT. Simply because the necessities are different. Mr. MANN. I can imagine, of course, that in Nicaragua they may require a building slightly different from a building up in Alaska, but I should think by this time they would have all These are not elaborate buildings, or they ought not to be, unless they are constructed for the benefit of a few officers, and I doubt even then whether they ought to be very elaborate.

Mr. PADGETT. The barracks are for the accommodation of the men, and they are built for the accommodation of 500 marines.

The barracks accommodate both men and officers. Mr. PADGETT. I know, but they are the barracks we build for the enlisted men, with a capacity to accommodate 500 men, and that is what we have been providing.

Mr. MANN. Certainly by this time they must have discovered types of buildings, and they must have plans and specifications for them. Of course, I know that to be the case anyhow, or they could not get along with only one draftsman.

Mr. PADGETT. This is the only draftsman they have in the

This is the only draftsman they have in the Marine Corps, and they certainly need one. He is a very valuable man.

Mr. MANN. I think they need that many for ornament, so withdraw the point of order.

Mr. STAFFORD. I renew the point of order. Do I understand that the committee advanced this man's salary $400, to the maximum that he could obtain in private employment, and that was the only reason for advancing this salary more than any other advancement carried in this bill?

Mr. PADGETT. It was stated to us that he was worth it, that he was a very valuable man, and that he had been offered

$2,200, and the Marine Corps did not want to lose him.

Mr. STAFFORD. I will inform the gentleman that it has been testified many times before the legislative subcommittee, as a warrant for an increase, that men have been offered fourfold and fivefold the amount of their Government salaries by private employers, yet we did not feel warranted in granting the in-crease. Mr. Chairman, this is rather an inordinate increase. I would not object to a reasonable increase of a couple of hundred dollars, but to advance a man's salary from $1,800 to $2,200 just merely because some private employer thinks he is of value, is not warranted, I think, under the present conditions of the Treasury.

Mr. PADGETT. There is a very great demand for draftsmen. Mr. KELLEY. The offer this man had was from the Bureau of Yards and Docks, another department of the Government.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think that only strengthens my position.

I think the Bureau of Yards and Docks has more need for draftsmen of this capacity than the Marine Corps. Therefore I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin makes the point of order against the figures "$2,200," and the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. PADGETT. Did the gentleman say that he would not object to $2,000?

Mr. STAFFORD. Upon the information furnished by the gentleman from Michigan that this man is really needed in another branch of the service, I will insist on having it $1,800.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by inserting the figures "$1,800."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 51, line 9, insert the figures "$1,800."

The amendment was agreed to. The Clerk read as follows:

In the office of the assistant quartermaster, Philadelphia, Pa.: One chief clerk, at $1,800; one messenger, at $840.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in order to ask the chairman a question. Why do you allow a messenger at $840 for Philadelphia and not one at San Francisco?

Mr. PADGETT. I do not know just the work that is required there. This is not a new item. At Philadelphia they have a larger establishment, and they manufacture outfits under the Marine Corps

Mr. SEARS. At San Francisco they have a chief clerk with no messenger, but at Philadelphia they have a chief clerk with

Mr. PADGETT. They do not need one at San Francisco. Mr. SEARS. The chief clerk at Philadelphia has a messenger, and the chief clerk at San Francisco has not, and they both have the same pay.

Mr. PADGETT. The work at San Francisco is not of so

Mr. SEARS. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In all, pay, Marine Corps, $7,133,002.78.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, there is a reduction of $400 in that total. The Clerk has heretofore been given authority to change the totals.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that the Clerk has been given authority by the committee to correct the totals.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Provisions, Marine Corps: For noncommissioned officers, musicians, and privates serving ashore; subsistence and lodging of enlisted men when traveling on duty, or cash in lieu thereof; commutation of rations to enlisted men regularly detailed as clerks and messengers; payments of board and lodging of applicants for enlistment while held under observation, recruits, recruiting parties, and enlisted men where it is impracticable to otherwise furnish subsistence, or in lieu of board, commutation of rations to recruiting parties; transportation of provisions, and the employment of necessary labor connected therewith; ice machines and their maintenance where required for the health and comfort of the troops and for cold storage; ice for offices and preservation of rations, $1,676,000. Hereafter no law shall be construed to entitle enlisted men on shore duty to any rations or commutation therefor other than such as are now or may hereafter be allowed enlisted men in the Army: Provided, That when it is impracticable or the expense is found greater to supply marines serving on shore duty in the island possessions and on foreign stations with the Army ration, such marines may be allowed the Navy ration or commutation therefor.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman. I reserve a point of order. This

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order. This paragraph carries an appropriation for food or provisions, commutation of rations, and so forth. Is the gentleman from Tennessee able to tell the House the various places outside of the United States where the Marine Corps is now in service?

Mr. PADGETT. At Haiti, San Domingo, Nicaragua, some in the Philippines, some in Guam, some in Hawaii, some in Alaska, and a few in China.

Mr. MANN. Any other foreign countries that the gentleman now recalls?

Mr. PADGETT. I do not recall any at this minute.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman recall how many are in Nicaragua or Haiti or San Domingo?

Mr. PADGETT. Quite a number in Haiti and San Domingo, but not so many in Nicaragua.

Mr. MANN. Any enlisted men in Haiti or San Domingo? Mr. PADGETT, Quite a number. Mr. MANN. We gave authority for the officers to recruit a local force there.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; but there are quite a number of en-listed men there in addition to those provided in the legislation that the gentleman refers to, to form a constabulary.

Mr. MANN. If I may judge from current reports, the Marine Corps and the officials are doing excellent service?

Mr. PADGETT. It is so reported, and I have noticed in the press that they are rendering magnificent service.

Mr. MANN. As to Nicaragua, I do not feel quite so sure about it.

Mr. PADGETT. I have not much information about that. Mr. MANN. In one South American State they had a revolution the other day. Which one was that?

Mr. PADGETT. I do not recall, they come so often.

Mr. MANN. I think it was in one of the States along next to Nicaragua, probably the result of our course in Nicaragua. We have not sent the marines into Costa Rica to restore the Government there that was thrown out? Not yet, as far as the gentleman knows?

Mr. PADGETT. I have not heard of any.

Mr. MANN. I withdraw the point of order. Does not the gentleman think it is time for the committee to rise?

Mr. PADGETT. I would like to have the Clerk read a few more pages, down to the increase of the Navy.

Mr. MANN. We can easily finish the bill to-morrow.

Mr. PADGETT. We want to finish the bill and then pass the pension appropriation bill to-morrow.

Mr. MANN. I think it will be hardly possible to do that.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

The following Members were given leave to extend their remarks in the RECORD: Mr. SEARS, Mr. TAGUE, Mr. FESS, and Mr. MORIN.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Page of North Carolina, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 20632, the naval appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. Gallivan, by unanimous consent, was given leave of absence for four days, on account of attending the obsequies of a friend.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE ALLEGHENY RIVER, CATTARAUGUS COUNTY, N. Y.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, yesterday we passed House bill 19298, a bridge bill, where an identical Senate bill (S. 7537) had previously passed the Senate. I ask unanimous consent to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which we passed the House bill, and then I will ask the House to agree to a resolution to recall the bill from the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill H. R. 19298 was passed. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. And I ask to have the resolution passed recalling the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution,

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 491.

Resolved, That the Clerk be, and he is hereby, directed to request the Senate to return to the House of Representatives the bill (H. R. 19298) entitled an act authorizing the Western New York & Pennsylvania Railway Co. to reconstruct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Allegheny River in the town of Allegany, county of Cattaraugus, N. Y.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the following titles:

S. 1061. An act to allow additional entries under the enlargedhomestead act;

S. 2222. An act for the relief of the heirs of Antoine Bayard;

S. 5632. An act for the relief of Aquila Nebeker;

S. 5203. An act for the relief of Gardiner L. Eastman;

S. 1553. An act for the relief of Peter Kenney; and

S. 3743. An act to reimburse John Simpson.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION AND BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESI-DENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following joint resolution and bills: H. J. Res. 230. Joint resolution authorizing the National Society United States Daughters of Eighteen Hundred and Twelve to file its historical material in the Smithsonian Institution and to make annual reports to the secretary thereof;

H. R. 1609. An act for the relief of S. L. Burgard;

H. R. 6732. An act for the relief of Joseph A. Jennings;

H. R. 7763. An act for the relief of Stephen J. Simpson;

H. R. 11150. An act for the relief of mail contractors; H. R. 11288. An act for the relief of S. S. Yoder; and

H. R. 11685. An act for the relief of Ivy L. Merrill.

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report upon the bill H. R. 18453, the Indian appropriation bill, for printing under the rules.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 1448).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 18453) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1, 3, 4, 7, 8, 13, 14, 20, 21, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 33, 34, 36, 38, 39, 55,

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 15, 17, 18, 23, 25, 37, 41, 43, 44, 45, 47, 52, 53, 54, 56, 57, 59, 61, 64, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, 72, 75, 77, 78, 79, 81, 83, 86, 89, 91, 94, 97, 98, 99, 101, 102, 104, 105, 107, 108, and 109, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 2: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amendment proposed insert the following: "Provided further, That $5,000 of the above amount shall be used for an investigation and report on the merits of the claim of the Indians of the Warm Springs Reservation in Oregon to additional land arising from alleged erroneous surveys of the north and west boundaries of their reservation as defined in the treaty concluded June 25, 1855 (12 Stats. L., p. 963), and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to make such survey or resurveys as may be necessary to complete said investigation and report"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 5: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amendment proposed insert the following: "Provided, That automobiles or any other vehicles or conveyances used in introducing, or attempting to introduce, intoxicants into the Indian country, where the introduction is prohibited by treaty or Federal statute, whether used by the owner thereof or other person, shall be subject to the seizure, libel, and forfeiture provided in section 2140 of the Revised Statutes of the United States"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 9: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 9, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$1,600,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 10: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amendment proposed insert the following:

"For construction, lease, purchase, repair, and improvement of school and agency buildings, including the purchase of necessary lands and the installation, repair, and improvement of heating, lighting, power, and sewerage and water systems in connection therewith, $400,000: Provided, That of this amount $300 may be expended for the purchase of a perpetual water right and right of way across the lands of private individuals, for the purpose of running a pipe line from a certain spring or springs located near the Sisseton Indian Agency buildings, South Dakota, to said buildings, the purchase of such water right to include sufficient land for the construction of a small cement reservoir near such spring or springs for the purpose of storing the water so acquired: Provided further, That not to exceed $500 of the amount herein appropriated may be used for the acquisition on behalf of the United States, by purchase or otherwise, of land for a site for the Mesquakie Day School, Sac and Fox, Iowa: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to allow employees in the Indian Service who are furnished quarters necessary heat and light for such quarters without charge, such heat and light to be paid for out of the fund chargeable with the cost of heating and lighting other buildings at the same place: And provided further, That the amount so expended for agency purposes shall not be included in the maximum amounts for compensation of employees prescribed by section 1, act of August 24, 1912.

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 11: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 11, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amendment proposed insert the following: "Provided further, That where practicable the transportation and expenses so paid shall be refunded and shall be returned to the appropriation from which paid"; and the Senate agree to the same.

SENATE.

SATURDAY, February 10, 1917.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, our heavenly Father, we would open the duty of this day by invoking Thy blessing upon us, putting ourselves as willing instruments in Thy hands. We pray for the inspiration that comes alone from God, that out of the consideration of the problems that confront us and the possible dangers that surround us we may gain not only wisdom concerning the things of this life, but a deeper, truer, diviner conception of life itself. May we understand the relationship that the work of this day holds to the never-ending life and the relationship which our lives in their activities here hold to that destiny that knows no end. Guide us with God ever before us as our guide and light and defense. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of the legislative day of Thursday, February 8, 1917, when, on request of Mr. Vardaman and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

THE CALLOPHONE.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a request of the International Callophone Corporation that it be permitted to demonstrate the uses of the callophone to the requirements of the United States Senate. The request will be noted in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Rules.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 7486) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

The message also requested the Senate to return to the House of Representatives the bill (H. R. 19298) authorizing the Western New York & Pennsylvania Railway Co. to reconstruct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Allegheny River in the town of Allegany, county of Cattaraugus, N. Y.

The message further announced that the House disagrees to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8229) to establish a national military park at the battle field of Guilford Courthouse, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. DENT, Mr. NICHOLLS of South Carolina, and Mr. KAHN managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 20827) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 70) providing for the printing of 5,000 copies, bound in buckram, for the use of the House of Representatives, of the manuscript prepared by Hon. Merrill Moores, being a digest of the contested election cases in the House of Representatives from 1901 to 1917, etc., in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 65) authorizing the printing of 1,500 copies of the journal of the fifty-first national encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic for the year 1917, as a House document, etc., in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 31) authorizing the printing of 1,000 copies of Moores Digest of International Law, etc., in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has received so many communications for war and for peace that the Chair deems it inadvisable to encumber the RECORD with the communica-tions, and they will all be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations

Mr. SHERMAN. I present one telegram out of a great many I have received on the proposed amendment to the oleomargarine law protesting against it, and also one other of a like kind, which are typical of all I have received. I ask that they be printed in the RECORD but not read.

There being no objection the telegrams ordered to be printed in the RECORD are as follows:

CHICAGO, ILL., February 9, 1917.

We strongly oppose the adoption of the Underwood amendment to the revenue bill taxing oleomargarine 2 cents per pound, if made in the semblance of butter. It will have the effect of increasing the fraudulent sale of yellow oleomargarine and work injury to the butter industry. Would therefore request that you take a firm stand against the passage of the amendment. C. H. WEAVER & Co.

CHICAGO, ILL., February 9, 1917.

Senator Lawrence Y. Sherman, Washington, D. C.:

Calling your attention to the committee agreement to accept a flat tax of 2 cents per pound in lieu of the present tax on oleomargarine. Allowing the privilege of coloring all oleomargarine yellow in semblance of butter as proposed by Senator Underwood is most vigorously pretested by our members. You must realize that only a very small percentage of the present make of oleomargarine, less than 3 per cent in fact, pays the 10 cents tax, and any such change as proposed will work a very great injustice on the dairy interests of the country. THE CHICAGO BUTTER AND EGG BOARD, S. E. DAVIS, President.

Mr. WARREN. I present a memorial of the Legislature of Wyoming, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD.

The memorial was ordered to lie an the table and printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Enrolled joint memorial 1, Senate, Fourteenth Legislature of the State of Wyoming.

Be it resolved by the Senate of the State of Wyoming (the House of Representatives concurring), That-Representatives concurring), That—Whereas hundreds of citizens of this State have taken oil placer claims under the oil placer mining act and have complied with the law in good faith by doing the assessment work required to hold and develop said claims; and Whereas in many cases these lands have been located and held by prospectors who have expended their time and money for many years in trying to hold and develop these oil-placer claims until the conditions and demand for the product would make it possible to operate the same; and Whereas these lands were located and held under the only law that made it possible for the prospector for oil or gas to acquire the same; and

whereas these locations were made in good faith and held by the locators before any withdrawal of said lands was made or even contemplated by the Government; and Whereas there is now before Congress a bill known as the Ferris-Phelan bill, providing for the leasing of all oil and gas lands on the public domain; and Whereas this bill in its present form would destroy and take from the original locators their vested rights or compel them to defend the same in the courts, causing endless litigation with wealthy oil operators who might seek to deprive them of their legitimate rights; and operators who might seek to deprive them of their legitimate rights; and Whereas it appears the said leasing bill as now drawn is in the interest of the large foreign oil companies and against the interests of the original locators and settlers and is flagrantly unfair and unjust to all original claimants in that it ignores their rights and permits the land to be leased to any applicant without considering the interests of the original locators: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Congress of the United States be memorialized to amend said leasing bill to give to all locators who have held the land in good faith and have complied with the oil placer mining law the preferential right to lease the same, on the same terms that may be required from any other applicant; be it further

Resolved, That the bill as now drawn is unjust and unfair and will if passed result in placing all the oil lands of this State in the hands of the large oil companies and operators and jeopardize the rights of the original locators in claims that have in many cases been held and worked by them for years; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this memorial be sent to the Hon. Frank W. Mondell, asking their aid in carrying out the object of this resolution.

J. W. Todd.

President of the Scrate.

W. K. Jones,

Speaker of the House.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I have received two letters,

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I have received two letters, which are typical of many letters I am receiving, the first in reference to the profit tax and the other the tax on mutual life insurance companies. I ask that they be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Finance.

There being no objection, the letters were referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CALUMET, MICH., February 7, 1917.

Senator Charles E. Townsend. Washington, D. C.

Senator Charles E. Townsend.

Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: I am quite aware that the present is not an opportune time to enter a protest against any legitimate manner of raising necessary funds for the Government, regardless of the disposition made of revenues in the past, but the proposed tax on excess profits as applied to corporations is so radically unfair to small stockholders that I feel a protest should be entered in their behalf.

Taking for example the company which I represent, we paid dividends in September to 7.488 stockholders. Of this number 6,693 hold 100 shares of stock or less, having a present market value of $7,600 to $7,800. If the allowance of 8 per cent is based upon the original capital of the company, which is nominal, these small stockholders would be called upon to pay, on the basis of last year's earnings and distribution, about 20 per cent of their income under this new tax. This in addition to 10 per cent already paid under the income-tax law and State taxes. The largest stockholders are able to pay their proportion of any taxes levied by the Government, but the small stockholder is taxed out of proportion.

If the present actual value of the stock of the company is made the basis of the allowance of 8 per cent, the tax would be reduced 50 per cent, but it still would be a heavy burden upon the small stockholder.

The Democratic idea appears to be that stockholders of a corporation are all wealthy. The records of this corporation—and we believe practically all others—show that the small investor outnumbers the large investor eight to one.

The writer believes that a much more equitable way of raising the necessary funds required by the Government would be by increasing tariffs on imports, which distribute the tax among all the inhabitants of the country, or by reducing the exemption under the Income-tax law, bringing the greater body of citizens under this law.

Our stockholders will appreciate very much all efforts you may make to secure the defeat of the bill now before the Senate

CALUMET & ARIZONA MINING CO., Per GORDON R. CAMPBELL, Secretary.

Mr. WEEKS. I present a telegram signed by J. R. Leeson, president of the Universal Winding Co., tendering his factory to the Government in case of need. It is typical of many telegrams of a similar character which I am receiving, and I ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BOSTON, MASS., February 9, 1917.

Hon. J. W. Weeks,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

In case of need the facilities of our factory at Cranston, R. I., will be at the Government's service.

J. R. Leeson.

J. R. LEESON, President Universal Winding Co.

Mr. WEEKS presented petitions of sundry citizens of Holden, of the Municipal Council of Taunton, and of the Municipal Council of Attleboro, in the State of Massachusetts, expressing confidence in the President's action in severing diplomatic relations with the Imperial Government of Germany and pledging support in the present international complications, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Franklin, Mass., praying for national prohibition, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the Massachusetts State Board of Trade, praying for the adoption of certain amendments to the act to regulate commerce so as to confer upon the Interstate Commerce Commission final authority over all rates and regulations affecting interstate commerce, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. PITTMAN. I have received a petition signed by a large number of commercial corporations of Nevada and eastern California, respectfully petitioning the Congress of the United States for the enactment of legislation which will make it unlawful for any common carrier in the transaction of interstate commerce to charge higher rates for a shorter haul than for a longer one on the same line in the same direction, the shorter being included within the longer. I move that the petition be received and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ASHURST. I have a copy of house concurrent memorial No. 2 and house concurrent memorial No. 3 adopted by the House of Representatives and the Third Legislature of the State of Arizona. I ask that they be inserted in the Record.

The memorials were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

House concurrent memorial 2.

To the Congress of the United States:

Your memorialists, the House of Representatives of the Third Legisture of the State of Arizona in regular session assembled, respectlature of the State of Arizona in regular session assembled, respectfully submit:

1. That the liquor traffic is a menace to society, a law breaker, a breeder of crime, a home destroyer, and a corrupter of government.

2. That science has proven beyond question the uselessness of intoxicating liquors as a beverage and the uniform certainty of harm from its use as a beverage.

Now, therefore, it is the sense of this body, the senate concurring, that the manufacture, sale, and traffic in intoxicating liquor is wrong, and your memorialists most earnestly and respectfully petition your honorable body to submit a national constitutional amendment to the voters of the States prohibiting the manufacture of and the traffic in intoxicating liquors.

Resolved, That a copy of this memorial be sent to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, the President of the Senate, and our Representatives in Congress, and that the latter are urged to use every honorable means to secure the relief asked for in this memorial.

Passed the house January 29, 1917, by the following vote: Ayes 35, nays 0, absent 0, excused 0.

A. A. Johns,

A. A. JOHNS,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.
SAM W. PROCTOR,
Chief Clerk.

Attest:
Passed the senate January 31, 1917, by the following vote: Ayes 19, nays 0, absent 0, excused 0.

D. H. CLARIDGE,
President of the Senate.
C. P. HICKS,
Secretary of the Senate.

House concurrent memorial 3.

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Arizona in legislature assembled, being the third regular session, most respectfully petition as follows, that—session, most respectivily petition as follows, that—

Whereas the importance of prompt and accurate record of births, deaths, and communicable diseases is now recognized by all civilized countries as of direct benefit to the Nation; and Whereas the reporting of these births, deaths, and communicable diseases is not required by Federal and State laws, and it being for the general welfare of the public, your memorialists believe that this expense, in so far as postage is involved, should be borne by the public; and

Whereas the education of the people by means of printed matter pertaining to the preservation of health is conducive to the general public welfare: Therefore

We petition the Congress of the United States to authorize the franking of all reports of births, deaths, and communicable diseases to the proper officer, and all printed matter of an educational character issued by the State board of health to the people of the State in which such matter is issued.

Passed the house January 29, 1917, by the following vote: Ayes 35, nays 0, absent 0, excused 0.

A. A. JOHNS, Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Passed the senate January 31, 1917, by the following vote: Ayes 19, nays 0, absent 0, excused 0.

D. H. CLARIDGE, President of the Senate. C. P. HICKS, Secretary of the Senate.

Mr. ASHURST. About four or five days ago I introduced a bill to extend the period of time to the Saginaw Lumber Co., of Arizona, within which to cut certain timber from the national forests. I have received this morning some telegraphic dis-patches from various county officials in the county in which the forest is located. I ask that they be inserted in the RECORD. They are all in the form of petitions urging the passage of the bill.

There being no objection, the telegrams were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senator Henex F. Ashurst.

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

At a meeting of the board of trustees of school district No. I, Coconino County, Ariz, held this day, the following resolution was unanimously adopted:

"Be it resolved, That we most heartly favor the enactment of the bill now pending in Congress granting extension of time for cutting of timber upon Perrin lands, and we respectfully request the Arizona delegation in Congress to aid in its passage."

The clerk of the board is instructed to wire a copy of this resolution to each Member of the Arizona delegation.

G. T. Perrington, President.

Tom L. Reese, Clerk.

FLAGSTAFF, ARIZ., February 9, 1917.

Senator Henry F. Ashurst, United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Owing to impossibility of board meeting, I beg to advise that I think the granting of the requested extension of time for logging the Perrin lands very beneficial to this county and State.

United States Senate, Washington, D. C:

I am satisfied, from my knowledge of local conditions, that the extension of time asked by the Saginaw & Manistee Lumber Co. for logging the Perrin tract would be of great benefit both to the Government and the people of this county and State.

Senator Henry F. Ashurst.

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

At a special meeting of the Williams Chamber of Commerce the following resolution was offered and carried:

"Resolved, That we heartly favor and urge the passage and adoption of a bill introduced in Congress for the extension of time for logging the Perrin tract of timberland until 1950 by Saginaw & Manistee Lumber Co., and we respectfully ask all our Representatives in Washington to aid and urge the passage of this bill, considering it is of utmost importance to this community and of great benefit to the Government; and the president of the meeting is instructed to wire a copy of this resolution to each Member of the Arizona delegation."

WILLIAMS CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,

Heartly indorse, and believe the passage of bill extending time for cutting and logging the lands owned by Saginaw & Manistee Lumber Co. would be of greatest benefit to our community and especially our

E. A. MILLER.

Mr. LODGE. I present certain resolutions of the town of Holden, Mass., resolutions adopted in town meeting, approving the action of the President in regard to our relations with Germany and offering the services of the people of the town; and also resolutions from the city government of the city of Attleboro and the city of Taunton, approving and sustaining the action of the President in regard to Germany and pledging the support of the citizens. I ask that they be printed in the RECORD

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

HOLDEN, MASS., February 5, 1917.

Holden, Mass., February 5, 1917.

We, the citizens of the town of Holden, State of Massachusetts, in town meeting assembled, in view of the present crisis in the affairs of our Nation, while appreciating the efforts of our President to preserve peace, do hereby indorse the action taken by him in upholding the honor and rights of the United States.

As in the past the citizens of this town have been willing and ready to respond to the call of their country in times of imminent danger, so, now, if the President and Congress deem it necessary to take more active measures to defend the rights of our Nation, we have the assurance that the patriotic record of Holden in the past will be continued in the days to come.

Voted, that these resolutions be spread upon the records of the town, and that a copy be forwarded to the President of the United States, the Senators from Massachusetts, and the Representative from the third congressional district.

George C. Johnson,

Mr. TOWNSEND. I have received several letters from industrial and manufacturing concerns in Michigan, offering their plants and facilities for the use of the Government in case of trouble. I have not presented these to the Senate, but I have invariably referred the writers to the President, asking that they be sent there, and that he, the President, would undoubtedly refer them to the proper department.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I desire to make a statement covering a minute or two to the effect that I have a telegram from Gov. Keyes, of New Hampshire, informing me that he has communicated to the President of the United States a suggestion from the Amoskeag Manufacturing Co., of Man-chester, N. H., to the effect that if it becomes necessary for the President to create an army in the present crisis the Amoskeag Manufacturing Co. stands ready at its own expense to recruit and equip a regiment of Infantry.

I thought it was well to have this statement go into the Record, showing the patriotic willingness of that great corporation to come to the rescue of the Government in any great emergency by equipping a regiment to defend our country without any expense to the Government. I may add that the Legislature of New Hampshire has by unanimous vote indorsed the action of the President in severing diplomatic relations with the German Empire.

I present a telegram from Andrew L. Felker, of Concord. N. H., commissioner of agriculture, and also a telegram from the National Dairy Council, of Peterboro, N. H., remonstrating against the proposed reduction of the tax on oleomargarine, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the telegrams were referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Cencord, N. H., February 9, 1917.

Senator J. H. GALLINGER, United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Farmers in New Hampshire protest strongly against passage of Underwood amendment internal-revenue law, seeking removal restrictions on manufacture and sale of oleomargarine. It would be a body blow for dairy industry in the Granite State.

Andrew L. Felker.

Commissioner of Agriculture.

PETERBORO, N. H., February 8, 1917.

Senator Jacob H. Gallinger, Washington, D. C.:

National Dairy Council advise regarding Senator Underwood's amendment to revenue bill reducing tax on oleo and removing restrictions regarding its coloring and substitution for butter; our organization vigorously protests it; is a body blow to farmers, and the dairy interests sincerely hope you will do all possible to prevent passage.

WM. H. CALDWELL.

Mr. GALLINGER. I present a telegram from Charles E. Merritt, general agent of the John Hancock Mutual Life Insurance Co., of Manchester, N. H., and a letter from the president of the Massachusetts Mutual Life Insurance Co., of Springfield, Mass., remonstrating against the proposed tax on life insurance companies, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the telegram and letter were re-ferred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MANCHESTER, N. H., February 8, 1917.

Senator Jacob H. Gallinger, Washington, D. C.:

Washington, D. C.:

I take the liberty of calling your attention to the proposed Federal income tax on life insurance companies and would respectfully ask your cooperation in defeating this measure, for I believe that the tax is wrong in principle and that it is an excessive charge against the thrift of policyholders. Inasmuch as the company I represent is a mutual company, this tax must be paid proportionately by the policyholders, and in my opinion such an act is against the best interests of the State and Nation. When a man by careful saving provides for the future of his family through life insurance he is rendering a service not only to his dependents but also to the State. If ever there was an unfair, arbitrary, and unjust proposition aimed at the poor and their interests, this proposition appears to be the one. I ask your cooperation in defeating this measure in behalf of the policyholders of the John Hancock Mutual Life Insurance Co. and all other life insurance companies doing business in the State of New Hampshire.

CHAS. E. MERRITT,

General Agent.

MASSACHUSETTS MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE Co., Springfield, Mass., February 6, 1917.

Hon. Jacob H. Gallinger, Washington, D. C.

Washington, D. C.

My Dear Senator: In the name of the Massachusetts Mutual Life Insurance Co., and representing over 180,000 policyholders, I desire to protest against the inclusion of mutual life insurance companies within the provisions of the new Federal emergency revenue bill.

Without wearying you with a long letter or repeating arguments with which you are undoubtedly familiar, I desire simply to say that mutual life insurance companies are not in business for profit and that every cent of taxation placed upon them falls eventually upon the individual policyholders, who are their members.

Trusting that the present bill may be amended so that mutual life insurance companies will be exempted from further taxation under it, I remain.

I remain, Very respectfully, yours,

WM. W. McClench, President.

Mr. NELSON. I have here a copy of a resolution of the Legislature of Minnesota, sent to me by telegraph, with reference to the tax on oleomargarine in the revenue bill. The resolution is very short, and I ask that it may be read.

There being no objection, the telegram was read, as follows:

ST. PAUL, MINN., February 9, 1917.

Senator Knute Nelson, Washington, D. C.:

Be it resolved by the house of representatives, That the proposed reduction of taxing oleomargarine from 10 cents to 2 cents per pound, now before the Senate of the United States, is unfair to the dairy and farming interests of this State: Therefore be it Resolved, That we earnestly protest against such reduction; that the House of Representatives of Minnesota hereby instruct the Senators from this State at Congress to oppose such reduction; and be it further ther Resolved, That the chief clerk of the house be instructed to send a copy of this resolution by telegram to the Members of the Senate from this State.

The above resolution was adopted February 7, 1917.

OSCAR ARNESON, Chief Clerk.

Mr. NELSON presented sundry telegrams and letters in the nature of memorials from citizens of Minnesota, remonstrating against the proposed tax on net incomes of corporations in exss of 8 per cent, which were referred to the Committee on

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I ask, out of order, to present resolutions adopted by the chamber of commerce of the city of Atlanta, expressing to the President their earnest desire to cooperate with him and to support any course that it is deemed necessary to take, and their willingness to pay any additional tax that the needs of the Government may require and that Congress may prescribe. I request that the resolutions be printed in the Record.

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolutions of the directors Atlanta Chamber of Commerce, Thursday, February 8, 1917.

Resolutions of the directors Atlanta Chamber of Commerce, Thursday, February 8, 1917.

Whereas the President of the United States, after earnest and long-continued efforts to avoid war, has found it necessary to sever diplomatic relations with Germany and has notified Congress that, while hoping to the last for peace, he will in case of need use the whole power of the United States to protect its sailors and citizens in their lawful pursuits on the high seas; and

Whereas the States and the people of this country are unanimous in support of the President and the Federal Government in carrying out with far-reaching energy the program of national defense which was and is urgently demanded by the business interests of the country, which would be the first to suffer in case of invasion; and

Whereas these measures require a large increase of revenue, which can only be raised by additional taxation in some form, and whereas the Government proposes an income tax in proportion to ability to bear it, which is the accepted basis of sound and wise taxation, and the tax on excess profits is the easiest of all taxes to bear; and

Whereas thousands of the greatest industrial corporations have tendered their property to the Government on its own terms, and the bankers of the United States have offered their services to mobilize the country's financial resources, while 30,000 engineers, responding to the call of the President, have completed, without expense to the Government, a survey of industrial resources, which would have cost millions under ordinary circumstances, and whereas many thousands of young men are enduring hardships and sacrificing promising careers to guard the southern border: Therefore, be it careers to guard the southern border: Therefore, be it

Resolved by the directors of the Atlanta Chamber of Commerce,
That in this great emergency with these inspiring examples before us all selfish considerations should be subordinated to the common good and the people of this country should act as a unit in support of their Government, bearing cheerfully the moderate increase of taxation, without cavil or division as to details, which may be safely intrusted to the wisdom of the President and the Congress.

Resolved further, That we tender the services of the Atlanta Chamber of Commerce to the President of the United States, pledging the energetic use of its organization and its influence in such manner and for such purposes as he may deem best.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I present a joint memorial of the Legislature of Oregon, which I ask may be printed in the Record and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

There being no objection, the joint memorial was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

House joint memorial 6.

Be it resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Oregon (the Senate concurring). That the following memorial to the Congress of the United States petitioning for the submission of an amendment to the Constitution of the United States whereby the President of the United States shall be authorized to disapprove of any items of a bill making appropriations of money be adopted:

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

The Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon hereby requests your honorable body to submit to the legislatures of the several States an amendment to Article I, section 7, of the Constitution of the United States, whereby the President of the United States shall be authorized to disapprove of any items of a bill making appropriations of money; be it further

Resolved, That the foregoing memorial shall be signed by the president of the senate and the speaker of the house of representatives, and certified by the chief clerk of each house, and a certified copy thereof, duly authenticated, shall be transmitted by the secretary of state to the President of the Senate of the United States and the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each Senator and Representative in Congress from the State of Oregon.

Adopted by the house January 29, 1917.

R. N. STANFIELD,

R. N. STANFIELD, Speaker of the House.

Adopted by the senate January 30, 1917.

Gus C. Moser, President of the Senate.

(Indorsed:) House joint memorial 6, by Mr. Eaton. W. F. Drager, chief clerk. Filed January 31, 1917, at 4.10 o'clock p. m. Ben W. Olcott, secretary of state, by S. A. Kozer, deputy.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
STATE OF OREGON,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

I, Ben W. Olcott, secretary of state of the State of Oregon, and custodian of the seal of said State, do hereby certify:

That I have carefully compared the annexed copy of house joint memorial 6 with the original thereof as enacted by the Twenty-ninth Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon and filed in the office of the secretary of state January 31, 1917, and the same is a full, true, and correct transcript therefrom and of the whole thereof.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed hereto the seal of the State of Oregon.

Done at the capitol at Salem, Oreg., this 31st day of January, A. D. 1917. [SEAL.]

BEN W. OLCOTT, Secretary of State. Mr. CHAMBERLAIN presented a petition of sundry citizens of Portland, Oreg., praying for cooperation of neutral nations for respect of international law, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. PHELAN presented a petition of the Fruitvale Board of Trade of Oakland, Cal., praying for the enactment of legislation for the improvement and development of the national parks, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also presented a memorial of Typographical Union No. 46, of Sacramento, Cal., remonstrating against a change in the postal rates on second-class mail matter, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. McLEAN presented a petition of sundry citizens of Stonington, Conn., praying for national prohibition, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. LANE. I present petitions signed by 4,300 citizens of Porto Rico, praying that the so-called Jones bill providing for a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes, being House bill 9533, be not passed unless it is amended in such form as to maintain the civil and political rights as enjoyed to-day by the people of that island, and particularly by the masses that produce the wealth.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The petitions will lie on the table.

LETTER OF HORACE L. BRAND.

Mr. SHERMAN. I present a letter from Horace L. Brand, of Chicago, Ill. Mr. Brand is the editor and publisher and owner of 90 per cent of the publishing company issuing the Illinois Staats Zeitung and allied papers published in the German language. The Staats Zeitung is one of the leading papers of the United States published in the German tongue.

I did not refer to him by name a day or two ago in an address on the resolution indorsing the President's message, but I did refer to him impliedly in saying he had predicted a race war. In this communication he takes proper occasion to say that he did not, and his editorial is not to be so understood. He expresses in this letter complete loyalty to the Government of the United States and is in sympathy with our institutions. Mr. Brand was born in this country of German parents. His views are candid and his good citizenship avowed most com-mendable. I take pleasure in making this correction, because he is a gentleman of culture and refinement and is a person of signal ability in the newspaper world. I take great pleasure in this act of justice to him. I ask that his letter may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Chicago Tribune, Feb. 8, 1917.] MR. BRAND'S POSITION. CHICAGO, February 7.

EDITOR OF THE TRIBUNE:

CHICAGO, February 7.

EDITOR OF THE TRIBUNE:

I beg leave to request that you publish this letter.

I know very well that my views would gain a much wider publicity when published in the Tribune than when published in my own paper.

In the first place, I want to say that I was born and raised in Chicago. It is therefore unnatural and impossible for me to have loyalty for any country except the United States of North America, I am accused of predicting or threatening a race war if war breaks out between the United States and Germany. That is entirely false. I never predicted nor threatened a race war. In fact, it is not my nature to threaten, anyway. Moreover, to make a threat one must have something with which to back it up. I have nothing with which to back up a threat that a race war would break out in the United States. It would have been foolish to have made a threat, consequently I did not make any. Nor did I make a prediction. I expressed the fear that a race war would break out unless the United States exhausted all peaceable means before entering into a war. It seems to me that it is very important to remember that my statement was not unqualified, but was decidedly a qualified statement.

Considering that the United States is a melting pot of many nationalities, does it seem unreasonable to fear that trouble will break out among these many nationalities somewhere in case the United States gets into the European war without provocation having been sufficient to make the millions of citizens believe that all peaceful procedures have proven futile and that therefore the United States was forced into a war?

The above is the thought expressed in my editorial last Sunday.

I firmly believe and I fervently hope that the United States will never declare war upon any nation unless all peaceful means have been tried and proven futile.

Nowhere in my editorial did I mention German-Americans. In fact, the assumption that I was referring particularly to any one group of tried and proven fufile.

Nowhere in my editorial did I mention German-Americans. In fact, the assumption that I was referring particularly to any one group of foreign-born citizens is a misstatement, and any unprejudiced reader of my editorial of last Sunday must concede the truth of this assertion.

My papers have consistently fought for fair play for Germany and the cause of her allies. There are always two sides to every question. In order to arrive at a just decision the American people should know both sides to the European question. The whole truth concerning both groups of belligerents and their tactics should be known by our people, if the historic fairness of America is to be maintained in its decisions.

I am not upholding Germany against the United Staes. I never did so. Nor did my papers ever uphold Germany's cause against the best interests of the United States. Any assertions to that effect are based upon misunderstanding or are willfully false.

As an American-born citizen I certainly would never uphold any country's cause against that of my own country.

But when the discussion is as to whether Germany's cause or Great Britain's cause is the most just and right, then I am permitted to have the opinion that Germany's cause is more to the interest of the United States than is Great Britain's cause. If I am wrong in that contention, then I have, nevertheless, done my country a good service by bringing to public notice the reasons why I think I am right.

I have no deep attachment for any foreign nation. My whole soul is wrapped up in the good of the United States.

The company that publishes the Illinois Staats Zeitung and allied newspapers is an Illinois corporation, of which I own 90 per cent of the stock, and all other stockholders are American citizens, and no money or favors have ever been received by the Illinois Publishing Co. nor by me for paying any of the debts of this company nor for influencing in the slightest degree any of its utterances or its policies. This enterprise is entirely an American enterprise, Each principle championed by my papers is done so because of a firm conviction that the best interests of America are served thereby.

Horace L. Brand, Reports From Committee on Millitary Affairs.

REPORTS FROM COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS.

Mr. MYERS, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 6690) for the relief of Americus A. Gordon, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1027) thereon.

Mr. KIRBY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 5187) granting an honorable discharge to Esau Carson, reported adversely thereon, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 971) for the relief of James Orange, reported adversely thereon, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 7811) for the relief of Robert B. Jennings, reported adversely thereon, and the bill was postponed indefinitely

Mr. FLETCHER. I report from the Committee on Commerce the bill (H. R. 20079) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, and I submit a report (No. 1020) thereon. I desire to give notice that following the passage of the Post Office appropriation bill, I shall call up the bill for consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the cal-

UNIVERSAL MILITARY TRAINING.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. From the Committee on Military Affairs, I report back favorably the bill (S. 1695) to provide for military and naval training of the citizen forces of the United States, and I submit a report (No. 1024) thereon. I ask that the bill may go to the calendar.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I am a member of the subcommittee on Military Affairs, which has had in charge the bill just reported by the chairman. I joined with the chairman in reporting the bill, because there was every reason why it should be upon the calendar if we could agree to place it there before the expiration of the present Congress

I deem it my duty to say, however, that I am not in entire accord either with the general purpose or with the details of the bill. We have listened to a great deal of testimony from representatives of all shades of public opinion upon the subject, and, as the chairman has stated in his report, that testimony is not at all instructive; on the contrary, from my standpoint it is bewildering. It has not been printed. I hope as soon as it is printed and ready for distribution I will find the time to go over it with some care, and I wish to reserve the right, if I then desire to exercise it, to file a minority report.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 14777, the flood-control bill.

Mr. THOMAS. The morning business is not through, and I call for the regular order.

Mr. BRADY. Mr. President-

Mr. THOMAS. Will the Senator from Mississippi yield to me for a moment? The other member of the subcommittee, about which I just spoke, is the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BRADY], and in this connection I think he should be permitted to make a statement.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I yield to the Senator from Idaho. Mr. BRADY. Mr. President, I am a member of the subcommittee that was appointed by the Committee on Military Affairs to hold public hearings relative to the bill that has just been reported by the chairman of the committee. Like the Senator from Colorado there are features of the bill as reported that I can not approve, but on the whole I approve of the purpose and intent of the bill. As soon as we have the hearings of the committee printed and have time to read them carefully, I reserve by commissioners appointed by the President with a view to the right to make a statement to the Senate and explain just what my position is and what changes I feel should be made in the bill and what parts of the bill I approve.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

LANDS IN OREGON.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. From the Committee on Public Lands I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 17055) providing when patents shall issue to the purchaser or heirs on certain lands in the State of Oregon, and I submit a report (No. 1026) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill. It is purely local in character.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and it was read, as follows:

mittee of the Whole, and it was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all persons who have heretofore purchased or may hereafter purchase any of the lands of the Umatilla Indian Reservation in the State of Oregon, and have made or shall make full and final payments therefor in conformity with the acts of Congress of March 3, 1885, and of July 1, 1902, and subsequent acts respecting the sale of said lands, shall be entitled to receive patents therefor upon submitting satisfactory proof to the Secretary of the Interior that the untimbered lands so purchased are not susceptible of cultivation or residence and are exclusively grazing lands, incapable of any profitable use other than for grazing purposes.

SEC. 2. That where a party entitled to claim the benefits of this act dies before securing a patent therefor it shall be competent for the executor or administrator of the estate of such party, or one of the heirs, to make the necessary proofs and payments therefor to complete the same; and the patent in such cases shall be made in favor of the heirs of the deceased purchaser, and the title to said lands shall inure to such heirs as if their names had been especially mentioned.

Mr. TOWNSEND. May I ask the Senator from Oregon how much land could be purchased in that way by any individual?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I forget just how much. It is small, however. It is limited in amount. There is a letter from the Secretary of the Interior which explains the purpose of the bill

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President—

Mr. OVERMAN. Is the morning business over?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is not.

Mr. OVERMAN. I rise to a question of order. The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. OVERMAN. No further business than morning business can be attempted to be done at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If it is the purpose of the Senator from Mississippi to endeavor to move to take up a bill, it 13 not now in order, morning business being not concluded.

PROPOSED RAILBOAD LEGISLATION (S. REPT. 1025).

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I am instructed by the Committee on Interstate Commerce to report to the Senate favorably the bill (S. 8201) providing for the amendment of the mediation and conciliation act authorizing the President to protect the operation of trains in time of peace and to take possession of the common carriers and draft their crews and officials in time of war, and for other purposes.

I have had no time to prepare a written report, and I submit a verbal report at this time.

The Senate will recall that the President has submitted to Congress certain recommendations with reference to the strike situation. One recommendation was that the eight-hour principle should be recognized by law with reference to employees engaged in the operation of trains. That recommendation was enacted into law at the last session, and that law is now being tested in the Supreme Court. To that recommendation the President added certain supplementary recommendations, one with reference to the enlargement of the Interstate Commerce Commission, with a view to enabling that commission to more efficiently discharge its constantly increasing duties, one of those duties necessarily being the consideration of the question of wage increases in connection with rate fixing.

The committee has reported a bill which came over from the House at the last session enlarging the Interstate Commerce Commission from seven to nine, and that bill is on the calendar, and I am instructed by the committee to urge its immediate consideration.

The bill S. 8201, which I have just reported and which I desire to be printed in the RECORD, covers the additional recom-mendation made by the President that in case mediation and conciliation and voluntary arbitration fail under the mediation act there shall be a governmental investigation of the dispute their ascertaining facts and making a report which will be instructive both to the disputants and to the public at large with reference to the merits of the controversy, and will tend to create a sound public opinion based on investigation and ascertainment of facts that will compel a just and peaceful solution of the pending dispute. That recommendation has been met by the bill which I have just reported. It amends the mediation and conciliation act by providing where mediation and conciliation under the act fail, the Board of Mediation, now consisting of three members, shall be enlarged by the addition of two members, one from the representatives of the rallway employees and the other from the representatives of the railway officials, and that the board thus enlarged shall ascerain, report, and publish the facts.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state his parliamentary inquiry.
Mr. JONES.

Is there any bill before the Senate at the present time?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I am making a verbal report upon a bill which I have just been instructed to report from the Interstate Commerce Committee.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator from Nevada if he has likewise made a written report on the bill?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I have not done so. I have not had time to prepare one.

That Board of Mediation and Conciliation thus reinforced by two representatives from the contending disputants is to make an investigation of all the facts and to make a report, which shall be published.

which shall be published.

The committee took up the consideration of the question of the suspension of the power of strike during the period of investigation and report. The power of strike, being the only weapon which labor has thus far had, the only weapon which has been afforded to them by civilized society for the determination of disputes with their employers, the committee concluded not to interfere with their employers, the committee concluded not to interfere with or to suspend the right of strike or lockout during the period of investigation. With that view, I may say, I did not concur, for I believe that during the period of investigation the right of strike should be stayed; but the view of the majority of the committee was to the contrary.

It was the expectation of the committee that the railway disputants would halt their proceedings during the period of investigation and that the report of the investigating body would be influential in securing a sound public opinion, which would affect not only the disputants but the public at large, would affect not only the disputants but the public at large, and thus by its own moral force secure industrial peace.

The committee also took up in this bill the question of the protection by the Federal Government of trains operating in interstate commerce and the prevention of any restraint or hindrance of the operation of such trains. It has put in this bill which is reported a stringent provision making it a misdemeanor, punishable by fine or imprisonment, to hinder or to obstruct in any way the operation of the mails on trains moving interstate commerce. interstate commerce.

. The committee has also taken up the recommendation of the President regarding the commandeering of railways and other transportation facilities in case of war or military necessity.

and has amply covered that phase of the question.

Mr. President, I shall deem it my duty at the earliest moment to press the consideration of these bills. The President regards them as of the highest importance, has made them the subject of two special messages, and is urging that some legislation should be adopted upon this subject before we adjourn.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Certainly. Mr. GALLINGER. If I have understood the Senator from Nevada correctly, these bills do not reflect the views that the President submitted to Congress some time ago, do they?

Mr. NEWLANDS. They do not reflect his views so far as the suspension of the right of strike and lockout during the period of investigation is concerned.

Mr. GALLINGER. And the President laid great stress on that point in his address.

Mr. NEWLANDS. The President did so; and an opportunity will be given, I presume, to vote upon that question. Individually I wish to say that I stand with the President upon that

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President—
The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. NEWLANDS, I do.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I want to raise the point of order that debate longer than five minutes at this hour is not in order. Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I am about to conclude my remarks. I am making a report upon these bills.

I wish to say that I shall regard it as my duty to press the immediate consideration of these bills, action upon which has been urged by the President, and action upon which is demanded by the country

The VICE PRESIDENT. While the Senator was making a report the Chair would have been compelled to have overruled the point of order made by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Vardaman]. The Senator from Nevada is not now reporting the bill. He is just stating what he is going to do. It is not a

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report is not yet made. The bill has not been sent to the desk.

Mr. NEWLANDS. The Vice President certainly did not understand me. I said that I had had no time in which to prepare a written report and that I was presenting a verbal report. I was closing that verbal report by stating that it was my intention to press these bills upon the immediate consideration of the Senate at the earliest possible moment, first, taking up the bill for the increase of the membership of the Interstate Commerce Commission. That is all I have to say upon the subject. I report this bill, and ask its insertion in the RECORD.

The bill is as follows:

bill (S. 8201) to amend an act providing mediation, conciliation, etc., approved July 15, 1913; to authorize the President to protect the operation of trains in time of peace, and to take possession of the common carriers and draft their crews and officials in time of war, and for other purposes.

eration of trains in time of peace, and to take possession of the common carriers and draft their crews and officials in time of war, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act providing for mediation, conciliation, and arbitration in controversies between certain employers and employees," approved July 15, 1913, be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding therefor the following additional section:

"Sec. 12. That whenever a controversy shall arise between any employer and his or its employees which can not be settled through mediation and conciliation or by arbitration, in the manner provided in this act, the President shall be notified by the Board of Mediation and Conciliation. The President shall thereupon add to said board two members, one from representatives of employees and one from representatives of railroad officials, and to the said board as thus temporarily constituted the controversy shall be immediately referred. No person having a direct pecuniary interest in the controversy may be appointed a member of the board. The board shall forthwith proceed to ascertain, so far as possible, all the facts and circumstances of the controversy.

"As soon as may be, and in no event later than three months from the date of the reference of the controversy, the board shall submit to the President a full report of its findings of fact, including its findings as to the cause of the controversy, together with a recommendation for a settlement according to the merits and substantial justice of the case, which report shall be forthwith published.

"A majority of the board shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business and the finding or recommendation of the majority upon any one point shall be deemed that of the board. A minority report may be made and published. Any vacancies in the board shall be filled by the President. The board, or any member or committee of members thereunto authorized, may hold hearings anywhere in the United States, and shall have power to requi

"Whenever practicable the board shall be supplied with suitable quarters in any Federal building located at any place of meeting or deliberation.

"The compensation of the additional members of the board shall be determined by the President. The members of the board and its employees, in addition to their compensation, shall be allowed their actual traveling and other necessary expenses. For these purposes so much as may be necessary of any appropriation made for the Board of Mediation and Conciliation is hereby made available."

SEC. 2. That on and after the approval of this act any person who, alone or in concert with another or others, shall knowingly and willfully by physical force or threats or intimidation, obstruct or retard the passage of the United States mail, or any carriage, horse, driver, or carrier carrying the same, or the orderly conduct or movement in the United States of interstate or foreign commerce, or the orderly make-up or movement or disposition of any train, or the movement or disposition of any train, or the movement or disposition of any train, or the movement or disposition of the United States of interstate or foreign commerce, or who, after having, in concert with another or others, refused to work in his usual employment with or left the service of a common carrier by railroad engaged in the United States in interstate or foreign commerce, shall trespass upon its premises or any of its property for any of the purposes by this section prohibited, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, for every such offense, shall be punishable by a fine of not exceeding $100, or by imprisonment for not exceeding six months, or by both such fine and imprisonment:

Provided, That nothing in this section shall be construed to modify or repeal either section 6 or section 20 of the act entitled "An act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes," approved October 15, 1914.

SEC. 3. That in case of actual or threatened war, insurrection, or invasion, or any emergency requiring the transportation of troops, military equipment, and supplies of the United States, the President of the United States, when, in his judgment, the public safety may require, is hereby authorized to take possession of such part of any and all telephone and telegraph lines in the United States, their offices and appurtenances, and such part of any or all railroad lines in the United States, their rolling stock, offices, shops, buildings, and all their appendages and appurtenances as may be necessary for military purposes, to prescribe rules and regulations for the holding, using, and maintaining of the aforesald railroad, telephone, and telegraph lines, or that portion of the same of which possession may be taken, in the manner most conducive to the safety and welfare of the United States; to draft into the military service of the United States and to place under military control, so far as may be necessary for military purposes, any or all of the officers, agents, and employees of the railroad, telephone, or telegraph companies whose lines are so taken into possession; and said officers, agents, and employees shall be thenceforth considered as members of the Military Establishment of the United States, subject to all the restrictions imposed by the rules and articles of war.

Sec. 4. That the draft of the officers, agents, and employees of the said railroad, telephone, and telegraph lines hall be accomplished upon session; and said officers, agents, and employees shall be thenceforth considered as members of the Military Establishment of the United States, subject to all the restrictions imposed by the rules and articles of war.

Sec. 4. That the draft of the officers, agents, and employees of the said railroad, telephone, and telegraph lines shall be accomplished upon proclamation by the President declaring the occasion therefor, requiring all the officers, agents, or employees of any railroad, telephone, or telegraph company therein named to submit themselves to draft, and directing such persons in the Military Establishment as he may select for the purpose to prepare rosters of the individual officers, agents, or employees so to be drafted. Upon the making of such rosters notice shall be given to each person so enrolled of the place where and the time when he shall appear and enter upon his service.

Sec. 5. That the communication of intelligence over said telephone and telegraph lines and the transportation of troops, equipment, military property, and stores throughout the United States shall be conducted under the control and supervision of such officers as the President may designate; and whenever, in his opinion, the public safety no longer requires the continued possession by the United States of the said railroad, telephone, and telegraph lines the same shall be restored to the possession of the owners thereof, and the officers, agents, and employees drafted into the Military Establishment of the United States shall be discharged from further duty thereunder unless reenlisted in the manner and for purposes otherwise provided by law.

Sec. 6. That the damages suffered or the compensation to which any railroad, telephone, or telegraph company may be entitled by reason of the selure and use of any portion of its lines or property under the authority conferred by this act shall be assessed and determined by the Interstate Commerce Commission is hereby vessed with all the powers which it has now or may at the authori

The VICE PRESIDENT. What the Chair has been trying to call the attention of the Senator from Nevada to, is that he has not sent the bill to the desk.

ADDITIONAL CAPITOL POLICE.

Mr. OVERMAN. From the Committee on Rules I report a joint resolution authorizing the temporary employment of additional policemen for the Capitol Building and Grounds and the Senate and House Office Buildings, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be read. The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 210) authorizing the temporary employment of additional policemen for the Capitol Building and Grounds and the Senate and House Office Buildings, was read the first time by its title, and the second time at length, Resolved, etc., That in order to secure a more complete protection of the Capitol Building and Grounds and the Senate and House Office Buildings, there shall be employed while Congress is in session, and not later than the 15th day of March, 1917, by the Sergeant at Arms of the Senate and the Sergeant at Arms of the House of Representatives, 50 additional policemen, who shall be appointed solely on account of their efficiency and special qualifications.

To enable the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives to pay the necessary expenses of said employment at a rate not to exceed $3 per day, there is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated the sum of $6,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, the same to be immediately available and to be paid upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the Committee on Rules of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS,

Mr. WEEKS submitted an amendment providing that until June 30, 1920, all officers on the active list of the Navy over 62 years of age shall be carried as additional numbers in grade, intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill (H. R. 20632), which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SHEPPARD submitted an amendment authorizing the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint James H. Washburn, without regard to the age limit and the prohibition against issuing commissions to married men, a first lieutenant of Cavalry in the United States Army, intended to be proposed by him to the Army appropriation bill (H. R. 20783), which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CLAPP submitted an amendment providing that hereafter when railway postal clerks are transferred from one assignment to another because of changes in the service their assignment to another because of changes in the service tenses shall not be reduced by reason of such change, intended to be proposed by him to the Post Office appropriation bill (H. R. 19410), which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

BUREAU OF EFFICIENCY.

Mr. FLETCHER. I submit a concurrent resolution and ask that it be read and referred to the Committee on Appropria-

The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 31) authorizing the Bureau of Efficiency to examine the instances of overlapping and duplications in the work of the Federal Government departments and to report thereon with recommendations to Congress was read and referred to the Committee on Appropriations, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Bureau of Efficiency is hereby directed to examine fully, with a view to effecting economics, the instances of overlapping and duplications in the work of the Federal Government departments and report thereon with recommendations to Congress.

GOVERNMENT FOR PORTO RICO.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. 9533) to provide a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes, be made the special order for Monday evening next, at 8 o'clock.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? Mr. CHILTON. I object, Mr. President.

AMENDMENT OF THE RULES.

Mr. FLETCHER. I hereby give notice that when the river and harbor bill H. R. 20079 is being considered in the Senate I shall move to suspend paragraph 3 of Rule XVI, prohibiting proposal of general legislation to any general appropriation bill, in order that I may propose the following amendment to be in-serted as section 14 of the bill, or at the proper place in said bill, as a new section, to wit:

serted as section 14 of the bill, or at the proper place in said bill, as a new section, to wit:

THE ST. JOHN RIVER.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

I inclose herewith a report from the Secretary of State, transmitting, in response to the Senate's resolution of January 22, 1917, a copy of the report of the International Commission pertaining to the St. John River.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, Washington, February 10, 1917.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 20827. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

BATTLE FIELD OF GUILFORD COURTHOUSE.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives, disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8229) to establish a national military park at the battle field of Guilford Courthouse, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and agree to the conference asked for by the House, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the

The motion was agreed to, and the Vice President appointed Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, Mr. HITCHCOCK, and Mr. DU PONT conferees on the part of the Senate.

ALLEGHENY RIVER BRIDGE.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the request of the House of Representatives for the return of the bill (H. R. 19298) authorizing the Western New York & Pennsylvania Railway Co. to reconstruct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Allegheny River in the town of Allegany, County of Cattaraugus, N. Y.

Mr. FLETCHER. I move that the Committee on Commerce be discharged from the further consideration of the bill and that the request of the House of Representatives be complied with.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Committee on Commerce will be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and it will be returned to the House of Representatives in compliance with its request.

SUBMARINE WARFARE.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there further morning business? Mr. SMITH of South Carolina and Mr. RANSDELL addressed

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Carolina. Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Post Office appropriation bill.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I ask that Senate resolution 354 be laid before the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has had to announce three times this morning that until the conclusion of morning business, or until the hour of 1 o'clock has arrived, no motions are in order.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I understood the Chair to Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I understood the Chair to say that morning business had closed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. No; the Chair inquired whether there was any further morning business. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCumbra] has asked that a Senate resolution coming over from a preceding day be laid before the Senate. The Secretary will state the resolution.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 354) submitted by Mr. McCumbra on the 8th instant as follows:

Mr. McCumber on the 8th instant, as follows:

Whereas, on the 3d day of February, 1917, the President of the United States in an address to the Congress informed the country of the severance of diplomatic relations with the Imperial Government of Germany, giving his reasons therefor, and citing certain passages in previous diplomatic notes in support thereof; and Whereas the note of this Government to the Imperial Government of Germany in reference to the sinking of the Sussex declared as follows:

Germany in reference to the sharing of the considerable lows:

"It has become painfully evident to it (this Government) that the position which it took at the very outset is inevitable, namely, the use of submarines for the destruction of an enemy's commerce is, of necessity, because of the very character of the vessels employed and the very methods of attack which their employment, of course, involves, utterly incompatible with the principles of humanity, the long-established and incontrovertible rights of neutrals, and the sacred immunities of noncombatants;" and hereas in the note of this Government to the Imperial Government of Germany in the matter of the sinking of the Lustiania, we declared as follows:

whereas in the note of this Government to the Imperial Government of Germany in the matter of the sinking of the Lusitania, we declared as follows:

"The Government of the United States therefore desires to call the attention of the Imperial Government with the utmost earnestness to the fact that the objection to their present method of attack against the trade of their enemies lies in the practical impossibility of employing submarines in the destruction of commerce without disregarding those rules of fairness, reason, justice, and humanity which all modern opinion regards as imperative. It is practically impossible for the officers of a submarine to visit a merchantman at sea and examine her papers and cargo. It is practically impossible for them to make a prize of her; and if they can not put a prize crew on board of her, they can not sink her without leaving her crew and all on board of her at the mercy of the sea in her small boats. " Manifestly submarines can not be used against merchantmen, as the last few weeks have shown, without an inevitable violation of many sacred principles of justice and humanity;" and Whereas in the same note we again declare:

"American citizens act within their indisputable rights in taking their ships in traveling wherever their legitimate business calls them upon the high seas, and exercise those rights in what should be the well-justified confidence that their lives will not be endangered by acts done in clear violation of universally acknowledged international obligations, and certainly in the confidence that their own Government will sustain them in the exercise of their rights;" and Whereas in the same note this Government further declares as a principle of international law "the rights of American shipmasters or of American citizens bound on lawful errands as passengers on merchant ships of belligerent nationality," and further asserts in said note, "that it must hold the Imperial German Government to a strict accountability for any infringement of those rights, interna

Whereas in his said address before the Congress the President de-

Whereas in his said address before the Congress the President declared:

"If American ships and American lives should in fact be sacrificed by their (Germany's) naval commanders in heedless contravention of the just and reasonable understandings of international law and the obvious dictates of humanity, I shall take the liberty of coming again before the Congress to ask that authority be given me to use any means that may be necessary for the protection of our seamen and our people in the prosecution of their peaceful and legitimate errands on the high seas;" and
Whereas these several declarations leave doubtful and uncertain just what the obligations are which we impose upon the Imperial German Government as a condition for the continuance of peace between these two great countries: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested, if not incompatible with public interest, to direct the Secretary of State to submit to the Senate the view of this Government upon the limitation of the use of submarines (a) as against belligerent merchant vessels carrying American goods not contraband of war; (b) as against such vessels in respect to warning and safety of passengers and crew; (c) in respect to the sinking of American vessels carrying contraband, without notice, where the death of passengers or crew does not result; (d) in respect to American vessels carrying mails to belligerent countries; (e) in respect to any other acts of submarine warfare which this Government holds to be clearly against international law and cause for war, to the end that not only the American people but also any belligerent nation may fully understand what acts of submarine warfare may involve this country in the present world conflict.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I should like to discuss this

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I should like to discuss this matter for 15 or 20 minutes. There have been pouring into the Senate a vast number of memorials on the one hand, especially from my State and other sections, protesting against any war and asking that any question of war shall be submitted to a referendum of the people, and, on the other hand, there have been coming into the Senate numerous offers by corporations and companies to turn over their plants for the benefit of the Government in case of war, to raise regiments, and so forth. It seems to me that all of this is creating a great apprehension on the part of the people and that we ought to have something definite before the country that would allay their fears, or at least give the public some idea as to whether or not we are really in danger of war.

Mr. President, the resolution commending the act of the President in severing diplomatic relations with the Imperial German Government, like the address which it commends, was far-reaching in its possible consequences, and we who voted for it ought to know what we advocated. We should all support the Government in any course which we have directed, but it might be well to know just what that course will be under certain We shall support the President in protecting the contingencies. lives of our citizens and their legitimate rights on the sea. may and should, nevertheless, pause and ask ourselves what those legitimate rights are. Where is the deadline between legitimate submarine warfare and illegitimate warfare? How far can the central powers go in the maintenance of their proposed blockade by submarines and yet avoid war with this

As this is a question between war and peace, between life and death, we ought not to be left in the dark as to what acts are casus belli and what are not. I feel that in discussing this resolution we owe it to the American people that they shall not be left in the dark as to what this country recognizes as legitimate belligerent acts and what we insist are the legitimate rights of neutrals. The public ought to know whether the many scare-head lines to which we shall be treated as long as this great war lasts, when considered in connection with the facts they disclose, will in all probability force us into a declaration of war. Our State Department has not clearly defined what we shall regard as a breach of international law which will justify acts of reprisal on the part of this Government. It has been often asserted on the floor of this Senate that a rule of international law governing the obligations of belligerents during any war can not be changed during that war. Now, one of the rules of international law prior to the beginning of this war was that no merchant vessel, even of a belligerent, could be fired upon without due notice, and then only in case of an attempt to escape after being summoned to surrender; that protection and safety must be accorded passengers and crew, and the vessel taken into port and condemned as a prize. That has been the recognized international law prior to the use of submarines. I have been among those who have denied the proposition that international law could not be modified during a war and asserted that new instrumentalities of warfare, while they could not modify those principles of humanity, such as assuring safety to crew and passengers, might work a modification of certain other requirements. I believe that our administration has now, if not by word, at least by acquiescence, acceded to that view. I wish the State Department would point out to us with a degree of definiteness just exactly what acts of a belligerent will be a direct challenge to war and necessitate the President's coming again before Congress and asking for sufficient force to maintain our rights. As the department has not given it to us, as the President uses only the general terms, "protection of our seamen and our people in the prosecution of their peaceful and legitimate errands on the high seas," we are forced to go back to the previous correspondence on the submarine question to arrive at an understanding of the matter. A brief résumé of some of the leading features of that controversy may guide us to some conclusion as to what are our legitimate rights.

On February 4, 1915, the central powers, by proclamation, declared a war zone around the British Isles and stated:

Every enemy ship found in said war zone will be destroyed without its being always possible to avert the dangers threatening the crew and passengers.

This was a declaration by the central powers that little or no consideration would be given for the safety of crews and passengers on passenger and freight ships,

On February 10, 1915, our Secretary of State, Mr. Bryan, answered the Imperial German Government. This reply has become an historical paper of great importance, great in its assertion of what the President declared to be international law, great in the vigor and strength of the words employed, and important as a standard to determine how far a belligerent might go in interference with the lives, the shipping, or the commerce of noncombatants. This note reads:

commerce of noncombatants. This note reads:

The Government of the United States views those possibilities with such grave concern that it feels it to be its privilege, and indeed its duty in the circumstances, to request the Imperial German Government to consider before action is taken the critical situation in respect of the relations between this country and Germany which might arise were the German naval forces, in carrying out the policy foreshadowed in the admiralty's proclamation, to destroy any merchant vessel of the United States or cause the leath of American citizens.

We advised the German Government to consider well the critical situation that would arise between this country and Germany before she should take action to carry into effect the threat made in her proclamation. We told her to stop and consider the consequences should she dare to destroy a merchant vessel of the United States or cause the death of a single American citizen. Nor did we stop there. We declared:

citizen. Nor did we stop there. We declared:

It is, of course, not necessary to remind the German Government that the sole right of a belligerent in dealing with neutral vessels on the high seas is limited to visit and search, unless a blockade is proclaimed and effectively maintained, which this Government does not understand to be proposed in this case. To declare or exercise a right to attack and destroy any vessel entering a prescribed area of the high seas without first certainly determining its belligerent nationality and the contraband character of its cargo would be an act so unprecedented in naval warfare that this Government is reluctant to believe that the Imperial Government of Germany in this case contemplates it as possible.

Note here, first, that we declare that the right to visit and search'a neutral vessel on the high seas is the sole and only right of a belligerent. We were so astonished at the assumption of the Imperial Government in even suggesting such ruthless destruction of neutral vessels that we gave expression in this vigorous language:

To declare or exercise a right to attack and destroy any vessel entering a prescribed area of the high seas without first certainly determining its belligerent nationality and the contraband character of its cargo would be an act so unprecedented in naval warfare that this Government is reluctant to believe that the Imperial Government of Germany in this case contemplates it as possible.

The note further states:

If the commanders of German vessels of war * * * should de-roy on the high seas an American vessel or the lives of American

That would mean whether upon a belligerent vessel or notit would be difficult for the Government of the United States to view the act in any other light than as an indefensible violation of neutral

And then what?

If such a deplorable situation should arise, the Imperial German Government can readily appreciate that the Government of the United States would be constrained to hold the Imperial German Government to a strict accountability * * * and to take any steps it might deem necessary to take to safeguard American rights and property and to secure to American citizens the full enjoyment of their acknowledged rights on the high seas.

Mr. President, that meant just one thing, and that is that if an American vessel was sunk or an American life lost, whether upon an American vessel or otherwise, the Imperial Government would find herself at war with the United States. I am not now discussing the two sides of the controversy, nor as to whether the attitude of this Government was absolutely right in every detail, because, as I have heretofore pointed out, think in some of our demands we went beyond the clear rights of neutrals. At least we entered into a debatable field in asserting that submarines must conform to every rule heretofore demanded of cruisers or battleships. But this is what the Government of the United States said: It commanded upon pain and penalties of war that the Imperial Government could go no further in the execution of her proclamation than !

the sole right of visit and search, and seizure in case contraband were found. It was a proclamation that the American citizens took no further risk in traveling upon the high seas in any vessel than the risk of having the vessel overhauled and detained in some proper port. Do we still insist on that contention? If so, will we make war to sustain it? If not, where is the danger line?

On March 28, 1915, the Imperial Government sunk the British steamer Falaba. It was sunk without any warning, and a number of lives were destroyed, including that of an American citizen. One would have thought, by the note of February 10, that our fleet would thereupon have been gathered and our armies mobilized. Nothing of the kind, however, happened. About a month later an American steamer, the Gulflight, bearing an American flag, was sent to the bottom of the ocean without warning, and three more American citizens went down to death. And again our "strict accountability" threat was held in abeyance.

On May 7, 1915, the Lusitania, with some 2,500 noncombatants on board, was torpedoed without warning and sunk, and more than 1,000 men, women, and children drowned, 100 of whom were American citizens. No one on earth could justify the sinking of the Lusitania in the manner in which it was done. This was a British ship, a belligerent merchant ship, carrying not only passengers but also goods, as I remember, which were contraband. On the 13th day of May, after six days of deliberation, this Government expressed its view in a new note to the Imperial German Government, and stated:

In view of recent acts of the German authorities in violation of American rights on the high seas, which culminated in the torpedoing and sinking of the British steamship Lusitania on May 7, 1915, by which over 100 American citizens lost their lives, it is clearly wise and desirable that the Government of the United States and the Imperial German Government should come to a clear and full understanding as to the grave situation which has resulted.

That meant that something mighty important was now coming. The note then recited:

The sinking of the steamer Falaba, the attack on April 28 on the American vessel Cushing, the torpedoing of the American vessel Gulf light, and finally the torpedoing and sinking of the Lusitania.

Then the Government, taking notice of the warning given by the German ambassador, said:

This Government has already taken occasion to inform the Imperial Government that it can not admit the adoption of such measures or such a warning of danger to operate as in any degree an abbreviation of the rights of American shipmasters or the rights of American citizens, bound on legal errands, on passenger or merchant ships of belligerent nationality, and that it must hold the Imperial German Government to a strict accountability for any infringement of these rights, intentional or incidental.

Let us note the last paragraph which I have read, that this Government "can not admit the adoption of such measures or such a warning to operate as in any degree an abbreviation of the rights of American shipmasters or the right of American citizens bound on legal errands on passenger or merchant ships of belligerent nationality." This note asserted beyond any question that American citizens had a right to travel upon merchant vessels of belligerent nations, and that it must hold the Imperial German Government to a strict accountability for any infringement of these rights, intentional or incidental."

We may well ask ourselves right here, Is this the standard by which we are to determine whether we shall enter into this war? There ought not to be any possible misunderstanding on this. If that is our contention, if we are to hold that our people have a right to travel upon the merchant vessels of a belligerent power, and if the lives of such citizens are destroyed by another belligerent we shall hold such belligerent to a strict accountability, then, in my opinion, we ought to prepare immediately for war. I doubt, however, from subsequent utterances whether our Government has not abandoned this view. It certainly has not acted in accordance with what it declared it would do.

On the 24th day of March, 1916, the French steamer Sussex, a mere passenger and ferry boat, was sunk. This Government in its note to Germany said:

The commanders of the Imperial Government's undersea vessels have carried on practices of such ruthless destruction which have made it more and more evident, as the months have gone by, that the Imperial Government has found it impracticable to put any such restraints upon them, as it had hoped and promised to put. It (this Government) now owes it to a just regard for its own rights to say to the Imperial Government that that time has now come. It has become painfully evident to it that the position which it took at the very outset is inevitable, namely, the use of submarines for the destruction of an enemy's commerce is of necessity because of the very character of the vessels employed and the very methods of attack which their employment, of course, involves, utterly incompatible with the principles of humanity, the long-established and incontrovertible rights of neutrals, and the sacred immunities of noncombatants. The commanders of the Imperial Government's undersea vessels have Here again our Government asserts, in words whose meaning can not be misconstrued, that the submarine can not be used at all for the destruction of an enemy's commerce because of the character of the vessels employed and the method of attack which their employment involves.

This Government came back again to its first proposition, a proposition which it declared was fundamental, and which, if not acceded to by the Imperial Government, would compel this Government to use force or to declare war. But suddenly the Executive of this Government threw the whole question again into doubt by the use of a phrase which, no matter how high sounding, actually conveyed no definite meaning. These are the words:

If it is still the purpose of the Imperial Government to pursue relentless and indiscriminate warfare against vessels of commerce by the use of submarines, without regard to what the Government of the United States must consider the sacred and indisputable rules of international law and the universally recognized dictates of humanity, the Government of the United States is at last forced to the conclusion that there is but one course it can pursue.

Now, what is this course? In the light of all preceding declarations, in the light of that bold declaration made on the 10th day of February, 1915, that course meant the absolute protection of American rights as declared by the President-the use of force necessary to protect those rights. That course meant But let us see whether its meaning is not immediately modified. The message proceeds:

Unless the Imperial Government should now immediately declare and effect an abandonment of its present methods of submarine warfare against passenger an I freight carrying vessels, the Government of the United States can have no choice but to sever diplomatic relations with the German Empire altogether.

Thus we have the contrast. The note of February 10, 1915, declares that the United States, under such circumstanes, "would feel constrained to take any steps it might deem neces-sary to take to safeguard American lives and property and to secure to American citizens the full enjoyment of their acknowledged rights on the high seas," and the declaration of April 18, 1916, that if you continue your course the Government of the United States will simply sever diplomatic relations; that is, that we will not speak to you again during this war.

It is declared in the Lusitania note of May 13:

It is declared in the Lausitania note of May 13:

The Government of the United States, therefore, desires to call the attention of the Imperial German Government with the utmost earnestness to the fact that the objection to their present method of attack against the trade of their enemies lies in the practical impossibility of employing submarines in the destruction of commerce without disregarding those rules of fairness, reason, justice, and humanity which all modern opinion regards as imperative. It is practically impossible for the officers of a submarine to visit a merchantman at sea and examine her papers and cargo. It is practically impossible for them to make a prize of her; and, if they can not put a prize crew on board of her, they can not sink her without leaving her crew and all on board of her to the mercy of the sea in her small boats. * * * Manifestly submarines can not be used against merchantmen, as the last few weeks have shown, without an inevitable violation of many sacred principles of justice and humanity.

Now, bearing in mind this declaration of international law and

Now, bearing in mind this declaration of international law and rights, will the fact that an American ship, loaded, we will say, with contraband and captured, not taken into port, not submitted to the investigation of a prize court, but sunk without such investigation, be a cause for war?

Suppose, under the same declaration made by us, American goods are on a belligerent vessel and the vessel sunk and the goods destroyed, will this be a cause for war?

We assume, of course, in both instances that neither ship has been fired upon without notice.

We asserted in the Lusitania note-

The rights of American shipmasters or of American citizens bound on lawful errands (to travel) as passengers on merchant vessels of belligerent nationality.

Suppose that under this declaration a belligerent ship is captured and sunk after notice, and American citizens from that ship are taken to Germany or placed in safety anywhere else; by this act they have been deprived of their right to travel to their destination. Would that be a cause for war?

Again in that note we declare:

American citizens act within their indisputable rights in taking their ships and in traveling wherever their legitimate business calls them upon the high seas and exercise those rights in what should be the well-justified confidence that their lives will not be endangered by acts done in clear violation of universally acknowledged obligations, and certainly in the confidence that their own Government will sustain them in the exercise of their rights.

Suppose American citizens on an American ship carrying contraband of war enter the war zone, the area declared blockaded, and the ship is sunk without notice, but without the loss of life of passengers or crew. Will this be a cause for war?

Or, under this declaration, will the fact that an American ship loaded with contraband has been destroyed without notice by a submarine, with the loss of American lives, constitute a clear cause for a declaration of war? Or will we make a distinction between vessels carrying contraband and those carrying none?

Suppose that a belligerent merchant vessel carrying no contraband of war, but carrying United States mails to Liverpool, is sunk, even though notice be given and passengers and crew protected. Would this call for a declaration of war?

When this controversy became acute a year ago I took the position that under international law as it existed prior to the introduction of submarines in warfare, a merchant vessel, whether belligerent or neutral, could not be sunk if she surrendered, that her passengers and crew must be adequately protected and the vessel held as a prize. But I insisted, and on that I was in the minority, that the right to use the sub-marine in warfare carried with it the right to make war upon an enemy's commerce, and that while the rule of humanity, that a defenseless ship should not be fired upon and that the passengers and crew must be fully protected, ought not and would not be modified, the inability of the submarine to take possession of a merchant vessel and carry it into port, would work a modification of the old rule of international law requiring such action. I believe we will now recognize, and have practically recognized, this to be international law. But even if that is now recognized international law, we would still be compelled, if we maintain our demands, to declare war if either an American or a belligerent merchant vessel is sunk if the sinking results in the loss of American lives.

We would not go to war with Germany because of her failure to comply with this rule if neither American lives nor American ships were destroyed. As the matter now stands, I would say Germany can avoid war with the United States, first, by refraining from the destruction of any American ship, either with or without notice, not carrying contraband; second, by refraining from sinking an American ship without notice, even though she may carry contraband; and third, by first assuring herself that there are no Americans on board a belligerent merchant vessel, if such vessel is sunk without notice. But I am not certain that either the State Department or the Executive agrees with this. It ought not to be left in doubt.

If the reports of the Cabinet meeting of yesterday are true, we shall now need a definition of an "overt act." Generally speaking an avert act is an act done in the open, public. In criminal law it is an act done in furtherance of a criminal design. Just how the German Government could do more than it has done to constitute an overt act it is difficult for me to understand. The proclamation of blockade by that Government said in effect that any vessels coming into the war zone would be sunk, and indicated that they would be sunk without notice. Since February 1, 75 vessels have been sunk, and have been sunk without notice. On one, at least, the life of an American citizen was taken, and I believe one was an American ship. And yet we are told by the morning press that this Govern-ment will await an "overt act." Certainly, if we wait for a more definite indication of the purpose of the German Government to adhere to its declaration, there can be, in my judgment, no danger whatever of war.

The morning papers stated:

The President and his advisers last night let it be known that the following course had been decided upon: When the President is satisfied that American lives and American ships—

I want to call special attention to the word "and "-

American lives and American ships have been destroyed on the high seas in violation of the submarine pledges formerly made by Germany, he will lay the matter before Congress. He will not suggest a declaration of war, but will ask authority to use the military and naval forces for the profection of the lives and rights of Americans at sea. He will then proceed to use the military and naval forces for this purpose, leaving the next move to Germany.

I wish to note right here that in giving out this information, if it is correctly given, the words "American lives and American ships" are used, and not the words "American lives or American ships." Does this mean that we have further receded from our position, and that the loss of American lives on a belligerent merchant vessel torpedoed by a submarine will not call for anything sterner than a protest? Does it mean that another Lusitania case will pass unnoticed by this Government? If that is true, then by every principle of justice we ought to notify the American people, and not only notify them but take steps to prevent them from traveling on belligerent merchant vessels.

It is evident that these things must concur: First, the vessels must be American vessels; second, lives of Americans must be sacrificed; and, third, they must be American vessels not carrying contraband. This latter is made apparent by the further statement given out that the President would not suggest a declaration of war, but would ask authority to use the military and naval forces for the protection of the lives and rights of Americans at sea. How would he use these forces? There could be but one way, by the use of American warships as a convoy for American merchant vessels; and as this Nation will never use an American war vessel to convoy an American merchant vessel carrying contraband of war through a blockade, the case is finally limited to a convoy of an American vessel carrying nothing but passengers or mail or articles not held as contraband.

Now, that appears to be our position, as indicated by the last report. Does anyone for a moment believe that the German Government would attempt to torpedo an American vessel convoyed by an American warship bearing no contraband of war? It is impossible to believe that Government would be so stupid. When she would know we would not so break international law ourselves as to use it to convoy an American vessel carrying contraband of war to her enemies, is it possible to believe that the German Government would be that stupid and hurl herself into a war with the United States when the course of our conduct was such that we were not interfering with them or helping her enemies in the slightest degree? Then, Mr. President, why not say to the German Government, if this is the limit of our purpose, "We shall not attempt to protect the lives of our American citizens on belligerent vessels, but we insist that we will defend vessels not carrying contra-band." Does anyone believe for a moment that Germany would not immediately consent to this? To my mind, the decision arrived at in the Cabinet yesterday makes war between this country and Germany impossible. But this statement is not authoritative. And, again, I insist that we ought to know definitely what we are standing for. We ought not to keep stocks and values of the country buoyed up by rumors, insinuations, and threats of war when there is really no cause for fear.

Above all, we owe it to our own American people, we owe it to the belligerents themselves, to declare definitely and to state "thus far can you go, and no farther; if you cross this line it means war." Then our own citizens will fully comprehend what their rights may be; every belligerent will then fully understand what we mean in our declaration that the German Government must not carry on ruthless submarine warfare.

Mr. President, on April 21, 1916, nearly 10 months ago, an editorial appeared in the New York Tribune which brought before us very succinctly and clearly the confusion of the minds of the American people due to the many conflicting statements and demands made in our submarine note. It applies so clearly to-day that I ask, without reading, it may be printed at the conclusion of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The editorial referred to is as follows:

[Editorial from the New York Tribune, Apr. 21, 1916.] THE CONFUSION OF THE GERMAN NOTE.

The publication of the text of the latest note to Germany fails to clear up the confusion of thought so noticeable in the last three paragraphs of President Wilson's address to Congress. The reason is simple. The last part of the address was almost a literal transcript of the last part of the note. Both suffer, therefore, from the same defects—a lack of clearness in defining our case against Germany and a lack of decision in framing the demand which we make for an alteration of Germany's policy.

clearness in defining our case against Germany and a lack of decision in framing the demand which we make for an alteration of Germany's policy.

These defects have been conspicuous in nearly all of the administration's correspondence with Berlin over the illegal and criminal character of German submarine warfare. We started out all right in the "strict-accountability" note of February 10, 1915. In that communication our Government protested in advance against any violations on Germany's part of neutral rights or of the established rules of warfare at sea which might result in the destruction "of American vessels or the lives of American citizens."

Here was a clear, hard-and-fast conception of our policy and duty. But in the first Lusitania note the President shifted ground considerably. He called the attention of the German Government "with the utmost earnestness to the fact that the objection to their present method of attack against the trade of their enemies (not specifically against enemy merchantmen carrying American passengers, but against all merchantmen) lies in the practical impossibility of employing submarines in the destruction of commerce without disregarding those rules of fairness, reason, justice, and humanity, which all modern opinion regards as imperative. * * Manifestiy submarines can not be used against merchantmen, as the last few weeks have shown, without an inevitable violation of many sacred principles of justice and humanity."

If this meant anything, it meant that the United States considered itself intelliging the second of the considered itself intelliging the policy of the providers.

out an inevitable violation of many sacred principles of justice and humanity."

If this meant anything, it meant that the United States considered itself justified in holding Germany to account for submarine attacks upon merchantmen, whether those merchantmen carried American passengers or not. It was in effect a demand that Germany should abandon unconditionally her submarine campaign against merchantmen.

In the second Lusitania note (that of June 9, 1915) there was a distinct recession from this advanced position. Secretary Lansing wrote: "The Government of the United States condidently looks to see the justice and humanity of the Government of Germany vindicated in all cases where Americans have been wronged or their rights a neutrals invaded." Again: "The Government of the United States therefore deems it reasonable to expect that the Imperial German Government will adopt the measures necessary to put these principles into practice in respect of the safeguarding of American lives and American ships, and asks assurances that this will be done."

Even in the first Lusitania note a paragraph had been incorporated which was in conflict with the implications of the passages from that note which we have already quoted. This contained the celebrated flourish about omitting no word or act necessary to the performance of the "sacred duty of maintaining the rights of the United States and its citizens and so safeguarding their free exercise and enjoy-

note which we have already quoted. This contained the celebrated flourish about omitting no word or act necessary to the performance of the "sacred duty of maintaining the rights of the United States and its citizens and so safeguarding their free exercise and enjoyment."

From what the President and Secretary Lansing said last summer, it is impossible to tell whether they were demanding a cessation of submarine warfare on merchantmen under any and all citizens which the lives of American passengers might happen to be imperiled.

It is equally impossible to decide this question after reading the latest note. The same inconsistencies crop out afresh. In one paragraph the communication says:

"It has become painfully evident to it (the United States Government) that the position which it took at the very outset is inevitable, namely, the use of submarines for the destruction of an enemy's commerce is of necessity because of the very character of the vessels employed and the very methods of attack which their employment, of course, involves, utterly incompatible with the principles of humanity, the long-established and incontrovertible rights of neutrals, and the sacred immunities of noncombatants."

But in the next paragraph it is said that the United States will act against Germany only in case it is still Germany's purpose to prosecute wrefare of any kind—against merchant vessels. And in the paragraph following a breaking off of diplomatte relations is threatened unless the German Government shall "declare and effect an abandonment of its present methods of submarine warfare against merchantmen warfare and freight-carrying vessels."

No clear idea of the administration's attitude can be deduced from these tangled statements. Does the President contend that submarine warfare against merchantmen must be abandoned because it is in itself abhorrent to human principles and incompatible with neutral rights? Does he mean to demand immunity from the peril of submarine attacks for Americans only, or for all others, neut ingly?"

In his desire to ring the changes on mellifluous phrases like "serving the interests of humanity" and "fighting the battles of mankind" President Wilson has drifted far from the sound and simple conceptions of the note of February 10, 1915. That stood for Americanism—nothing more, nothing less. It stood for the maintenance of American rights and for holding to "strict accountability" any power which violated those rights. The more Mr. Wilson has talked about vindicating humanity the less he has thought about defending national honor and interests.

What we need most now in dealing with Germany is to clarify our and interests.

What we need most now in dealing with Germany is to clarify our point of view, to rid our case of extraneous rhetoric and to get back to the solid basis of national right and interests from which we started. Whatever we do, we should do as Americans, in vindication of our own sovereignty and in support of our own prestige.

If we are at last to call Germany to account, let it be exclusively on the grounds so admirably stated in our original warning and for the colossal crime of the Lustania, brazenly acknowledged and after more than 11 months still unavenged!

Mr. McCUMBER. Now, Mr. President, I ask that the resolution may be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be so referred.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. VARDAMAN and Mr. SMITH of South Carolina addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I ask that the bill (H. R. 14777) to provide for the control of the floods of the Mississippi River and of the Sacramento River, Cal., and for other purposes, be laid before the Senate. I desire to state that it is not the purpose of the advocates of that bill to urge the displacement of any appropriation bill. If we may be permitted to have the bill taken up and made the unfinished business, we shall cheerfully give way to appropriation bills. With that statement I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I believe that motion to proceed to the consideration of an appropriation bill has precedence over other motions, and I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 19410, which is known as the Post Office appropriation bill. The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Carolina moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 19410.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I raise a point of order on that motion. Can not the Senate choose which of two bills it shall first consider?

The VICE PRESIDENT. No; it can not. The motion to proceed to the consideration of an appropriation bill is a privileged motion, to be decided without debate.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I do not understand that to be so

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is what the rule says.

Mr. GALLINGER. That a motion to take up an appropriation bill has any priority of claim over a motion to take up

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is what the rule says.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I think that is a matter which the Senate can itself determine

The VICE PRESIDENT. Just one moment. Let us first read the rule.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say I may be wrong about the matter.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The rule provides:

The VICE PRESIDENT. The rule provides:

Immediately after the consideration of cases not objected to upon the calendar is completed, and not later than 2 o'clock, if there shall be no special orders for that time, the Calendar of General Orders shall be taken up and proceeded with in its order, beginning with the first subject on the calendar next after the last subject disposed of in proceeding with the calendar; and in such case the following motions shall be in order at any time as privileged motions, save as against a motion to adjourn, or to proceed to the consideration of executive business, or questions of privilege, to wit:

First. A motion to proceed to the consideration of an appropriation or revenue bill.

Second. A motion to proceed to the consideration of any other bill on the calendar, which motion shall not be open to amendment.

Third. A motion to pass over the pending subject, which if carried shall have the effect to leave such subject without prejudice in its place on the calendar.

Fourth. A motion to place such subject at the foot of the calendar, Each of the foregoing motions shall be decided without debate.

Mr. GALLINGER. Apparently I was wrong about that, and

Mr. GALLINGER. Apparently I was wrong about that, and yet, if a Senator is recognized to move to proceed to the consideration of a bill, can a motion be made to displace that motion by moving to take up another bill?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The rule says:

Each of the foregoing motions shall be decided without debate and shall have precedence in the order above named.

There was a motion made by the Senator from Mississippi to proceed to the consideration of a certain bill, and then the Senator from South Carolina moved to proceed to the consideration of an appropriation bill; which motion, as the Chair thinks, has precedence under the rules.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think the Chair is right.

Mr. CHILTON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business. That motion has precedence

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. TOWNSEND. On that I demand the yeas and nays. Mr. FLETCHER. Before the Chair puts the question on the motion, I should like to make a report from the Commerce

The VICE PRESIDENT. We are simply getting lost in the maze of motions. A motion to proceed to the consideration of executive business is now before the Senate, on which the yeas and nays have been requested. Is there a second? pause.] There is. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GRONNA (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Maine [Mr. Johnson]. As he is absent from the Chamber, I will withhold my vote.

Mr. NEWLANDS (when Mr. Kern's name was called). The Senator from Indiana [Mr. Kern] is necessarily detained from the Senate on account of illness.

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. Goff] to the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] and vote "yea."

Mr. WALSH (when his name was called). I inquire if the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. Lippitt] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not voted.
Mr. WALSH. I have a general pair with that Senator,

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Penrose] to the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. Kern] and vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I desire to announce the absence of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. Gore] owing to illness. I will ask that this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. Sterling]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] and will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have a general pair with the punior
Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER]. In his absence, and not being able to secure a transfer, I withhold my vote.

Mr. JONES. The junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. Swanson] is necessarily absent on account of illness. I agreed to pair with him for the day, and therefore withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. GALLINGER. I have a pair with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN], which I transfer to the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. Fernald] and vote "nay."

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. Catron] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. Owen]; and The Senator from Delaware [Mr. Du Pont] with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. Beckham].

Mr. HARDING (after having voted in the negative). I note the absence of the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. Underwood], and because of my general pair with him I desire to withdraw my vote.

The result was announced-yeas 19, nays 48, as follows:

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATIONS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now recurs on the motion of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] to proceed to the consideration of House bill 19410.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 19410) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads with amendments.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that it be read for amendment, the amendments of the committee to be first considered.

Mr. OVERMAN. Will the Senator agree now to lay aside temporarily the appropriation bill in order that the Senate may proceed to the consideration of a very important measure? Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I desire, first, to have the request I have just made acted upon.

Mr. OVERMAN. Very well.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Carolina asks that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that it be read for amendment, the amendments of the committee to be first considered. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. OVERMAN and Mr. SHAFROTH addressed the Chair.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I yield to the Senator from North Carolina.

[After a

Mr. OVERMAN. Will the Senator kindly yield to me in order that I may ask for the consideration of a very important bill that ought to be passed at once? I refer to Senate bill 8148, known as the espionage bill.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I would prefer that the Senator defer his request for a few moments until the status of the appropriation bill is established, so that it will be the unfinished business, and then it may be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. OVERMAN. I understand it is the unfinished business.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Not until after 1 o'clock. Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator is correct.

Mr. VARDAMAN. If unanimous consent is asked, I object.
Mr. OVERMAN. I have asked the Senator from South Carolina to yield to me in order that I may make the motion I have indicated.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I should like to have the Senator from South Carolina yield to me in order that I may make a request for unanimous consent,

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I yield to the Senator, if he merely desires to make a request for unanimous consent.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I ask unanimous consent that the Porto Rican civil-government bill be made the special order for Monday night at 8 o'clock.

Mr. GALLINGER. I thought we agreed to that by unanimous consent.

Mr. SHAFROTH. No; there was one objection made when I first submitted the request, but I do not think the Senator who objected then will object now.

Mr. GALLINGER. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. STONE. The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. Chil-

TON] did object to it.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I notified the Senator from West Virginia that I was going to renew the request.

Mr. STONE. If the Senator from West Virginia has with-drawn his objection, I shall not object; but I do not think it is happens to be momentarily out of the Chamber, that the request should be renewed in his absence.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I went to the Senator from West Virginia and notified him that I would renew the request. I will now make the request in the exact form that I advised him I would make it, namely, that the bill to which I have referred be made the special order for Wednesday night next at 8 o'clock.

Mr. STONE. For the time being I shall object.
Mr. SHAFROTH. Well, Mr. President, I do not want to take advantage of the absence of any Senator. I requested the Senator from West Virginia to be present, but I will withhold any further request in the matter.

Mr. NEWLANDS and Mr. KENYON addressed the Chair. The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that the Post Office appropriation bill is before the Senate, and that the real question is the request of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. Overman] that unanimous consent be granted to lay it aside temporarily and to proceed with the consideration of Senate bill 8148. Is there any objection?

Mr. VARDAMAN and others. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There seems to be plenty of objection, so the Post Office bill is before the Senate.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Then I ask unanimous consent— Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I have not yielded the floor.

wish to say that at the hour of 1 o'clock-

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I can not yield. At 1 o'clock. when the morning hour has expired, I think the Post Office bill will be the unfinished business anyhow: We met at 11 o'clock this morning, and it will become the unfinished business then. I will say to the Senator from South Carolina-

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, the Senator from South Carolina is not in the Chamber just at this moment. For our own purposes, we propose to proceed to the consideration of this bill.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, we can not hear on this side what is being said upon the other,

Mr. BRYAN. The Senator from North Carolina can make his request a little later.

Mr. CUMMINS. I want to hear the Senator from North Carolina, because I am interested in the bills to which he has

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, having the floor, I started to say, and I will repeat it for the information of the Senator from Iowa, who is interested in these bills, that when the hour of 1 o'clock comes, when the Post Office bill will become the unfinished business, I shall ask that the appropriation bill that is now before the Senate shall be laid aside in order that I may

Mr. CUMMINS. There are some of these bills to which I have no objection, Mr. President—that is to say, I have no objec-that I am not ready to consider immediately, but will be within a day or two. They are all in one bill, but as a matter of fact they represent different subjects.

Mr. OVERMAN. Each one is a chapter now. I want to say to the Senator that there are 14 very important bills, and in order to save time I am going to offer a substitute for the first bill which will contain chapters consisting of each of the other bills, each bill being a chapter. There are 14 chapters in the bill, and each chapter is one of the bills that was introduced, the 14 making one bill for consideration.

Mr. CUMMINS. Yes; I understand that, and there are certain chapters in this volume to which I have no objection. I do not speak for anybody but myself. There are other chapters that I think require very material modification, and I am not ready to-day to present the amendments which I think ought to be considered.

Mr. OVERMAN. Can the Senator indicate to me when he will be ready?

Mr. CUMMINS. I think I shall be ready to-morrow, so far as I am concerned. I took them up for study last night, and I did not finish them.

Mr. OVERMAN. Would the Senator be willing to let me go on with the bills to which he has no objection and pass over Would the Senator be willing to let me the other chapters and not ask for a vote until Monday? I shall be glad to do that.

Mr. CUMMINS. Certainly; I have no objection to considering the things that I think are all right.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, before any arrangement is made, I will ask the Senator from North Carolina if the bill will be in print, so that we can see it?

Mr. OVERMAN. The bills are printed, and I have had this substitute

Mr. GALLINGER. I thought the Senator reported it this morning.

Mr. OVERMAN. Oh, no. I reported them two or three days ago, but the substitute which I propose to submit I have had printed for the information of the Senate, and have had a copy of it laid on each Senator's desk. The Senator can get a copy from Mr. Halsey.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have not seen it.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President— Mr. OVERMAN. I just want to understand whether the Senator is willing to go on with these bills, and then pass over temporarily the chapters to which he objects, or would he prefer that we go on Monday? I want to accommodate the Senator.

Mr. CUMMINS. I have a series of amendments. There are a good many of them. They are not yet fully prepared; and so far as the chapters to which those amendments relate are concerned, I would ask the Senator to pass them over until Monday. Mr. OVERMAN.

Mr. OVERMAN. I shall be very glad to do that. Mr. CUMMINS. So far as those chapters are concerned to which I have no amendments to offer, I am perfectly willing that the Senator shall take them up at any time.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, the Senator from North Carolina stated to the Senator from Iowa that if any Senator so desired he would be willing to pass the consideration of this bill until The Senator from Iowa is a member of the Committee Monday. on the Judiciary. He was present when these bills were considered by the committee, and is familiar with them. I have read the 14 bills incorporated in one document now to be offered as a substitute only since I came into the Senate Chamber this morning, and while the speech of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCumber] was being delivered. I was trying to do both things at the same time—that is, listen to the speech and read the bills. There are Senators here, I know, who are not familiar with these bills. Some of them—all of them, in fact—are important, and some of them seem to me, from the hasty examination that I made, to need some amendment. I think the whole thing ought to go over until Monday.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I want to accommodate all of the Senators. Everybody recognizes the fact that these bills ought to be passed at as early a day as possible. Therefore I give notice that if the Post Office appropriation bill is not through at that time I shall ask the Senators on Monday, at the close of the morning hour, to yield to me to take up these bills.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry; that is, as to whether the river and harbor bill has been reported to the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has, and it is on the calendar.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I wish to ask in that connection of the chairman of the Committee on Commerce whether there is reported in that bill a provision for the organization of a waterways commission, composed of departmental chiefs and distion to their consideration at any time-but there are others I tinguished engineers, who are to make a thorough study of all the questions that relate to the development of our waterways for navigation and other purposes?

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I will say that a new section was added to the bill, section 13, which provides for such a commission as the Senator inquires about, to be known such a commission as the Senator inquires about, to be known as the waterways commission, consisting of the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of Commerce, and three additional members to be appointed by the President.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I ask that that amendment may be inserted in the Record in connection with my remarks. I have long favored action of that the marks. I have long favored action of that kind. An amendment in substantially the same terms was offered by me several years ago and then went into the appropriation bill, but it went out upon the objection of the House conferees.

The amendment referred to is as follows:

The amendment referred to is as follows:

SEC. 13. That a commission, to be known as the waterways commission, consisting of the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of Commerce, and three additional members to be appointed by the President of the United States from the active or retired list of the Engineer Corps of the Army, or other Government services, or from civil life, one of whom shall be designated by the President as chairman, is hereby created and authorized, under such rules and regulations as it may adopt, to bring into coordination and cooperation the engineering, scientific, and constructive services, bureaus, boards, and commissions of the several governmental departments of the United States and commissions created by Congress that relate to study, development, or control of waterways and water resources and subjects related thereto, or to the development and regulation of interstate and foreign commerce, with a view to uniting such services in investigating, with respects to all watersheds in the United States, questions relating to the development, improvement, regulation, and control of navigation as a part of interstate and foreign commerce, including therein the related questions of irrigation, drainage, forestry, arid and swamp land reclamation, clarification of streams, regulation of flow, control of floods, utilization of water power, prevention of soil erosion and waste, storage, and conservation of water for agricultural, industrial, municipal, and domestic uses, cooperation of railways and waterways, and promotion of terminal and transfer facilities, to secure the necessary data, and to formulate and report to Congress, as early as practicable, a comprehensive plan or plans for the development of waterways and the water resources of the United States for the purposes of navigation and for every useful purpose, and recommendations for the modification or discontinuance of any project herein or heretofore adopted. Any member appoi annum.

In all matters done, or to be done, under this act relating to any of the subjects, investigations, or questions to be considered hereunder, and in formulating plans, and in the preparation of a report or reports, as herein provided, consideration shall be given to all matters which are to be undertaken, either independently by the United States or by cooperation between the United States and the several States, political subdivisions thereof, municipalities, communities, corporations, and individuals within the jurisdiction, powers, and rights of each, respectively, and with a view to assigning to the United States such portion of such development, promotion, regulation, and control as may be undertaken by the United States, and to the States, political subdivisions thereof, municipalities, communities, corporations, and individuals such portion as belongs to their respective jurisdictions, rights, and interests.

sions thereof, municipalities, communities, corporations, and individuals such portion as belongs to their respective jurisdictions, rights, and interests.

The commission is authorized to employ, or retain, and fix the compensation for the services of such engineers, transportation experts, experts in water development and utilization, and constructors of eminence as it may deem necessary to make such investigations and to carry out the purposes of this section. And in order to defray the expenses made necessary by the provisions of this section there is hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as Congress may hereafter determine, and the sum of $100,000 is hereby appropriated, available until expended, to be paid out upon warrants drawn on the Secretary of the Treasury by the chairman of said commission.

The commission shall have power to make every expenditure requisite for and incident to its authorized work, and to employ in the District of Columbia and in the field such clerical, legal, engineering, artistic, and expert services as it may deem advisable, including the payment of per diem in lieu of subsistence for employees engaged in field work or travelling on official business, rent of offices in the District of Columbia and in the field, and the purchase of books, maps, and office equipment. Nothing herein contained shall be construed to delay, prevent, or interfere with the completion of any survey, investigation, project, or work heretofore adopted or authorized upon or for the improvement of any of the rivers or harbors of the United States or by this act.

It is my intention to urge that plan of organization as a substitute for that of the flood-control bill. The friends of the plan of river development which I have been advocating for so many years will also urge the adoption of that plan as a substitute for the plan presented by the flood-control bill, They will not rest with the assurance that it is contained in the river and harbor bill, lest it may go out of that bill upon the objection of the House, as it did before.

I give notice to all the friends of thorough and comprehensive action regarding the development of our waterways, involving the coordination of all the services of governmental activity in that work and the cooperation of the Nation with the States, that it is of the highest importance that they should be on guard both with reference to the flood-control bill and the river and harbor bill, so as to see to it that between the two this much-desired legislation, which is being urged by the President of the United States-not only the present President, but which was urged by President Roosevelt and by President Taft-is not lost in the confusion of the last hours of Congress, as it was once before.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I think it but fair to the Senator that I should advise him that if I continue in my present frame of mind I shall make a point of order to the provision in the river and harbor bill, as it is now framed, when it comes up for consideration.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I hope the Senator will change his mind and will join those who have been urging a reform of the entire subject of the development of our waterways.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I rise to a question of order. The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state his point of order. Mr. GALLINGER. What is before the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Nothing.

Mr. STONE. Would it not be well to get something?
The VICE PRESIDENT. The Post Office appropriation bill has been ordered before the Senate, but it is not there, as a matter of fact.

Mr. GALLINGER. I hope it will be proceeded with, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will proceed to read the bill in accordance with the order of the Senate.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, inasmuch as the river and harbor bill has been reported from the committee, I deem it fair to say that there will be a minority report, signed by a number of members of the committee, which is not as yet prepared, but of members of the committee, which is not as yet prepared, but will be filed by Monday morning.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads was, under the subhead "Office of the First Assistant Postmaster General," on page 4, line 15, after "$32,000,000," to insert ": Provided, That on and after July 1, 1917, drop letters shall be mailed at the rate of 1 cent per ounce or fraction thereof, including delivery at letter carrier and rural free tion thereof, including delivery at letter carrier and rural free delivery offices: Provided, That the rate of postage on second-class matter when sent by the publisher thereof and from the office of publication, including sample copies, or when sent from a news agency to actual subscribers thereto, or to other news agents, shall be 1½ cents per pound or fraction thereof during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and 2 cents per pound or fraction thereof during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and on and after July 1, 1919, 2 cents per pound or fraction thereof: And provided further, That nothing contained herein shall affect the free-in-county privilege on second-class matter or the present rate of postage on newspapers, when the same are deposited in a letter carrier office for delivery by its carriers, or on second-class matter when sent by others than the publisher or news agent," so as to make the clause read:

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President I aget the Senator in characteristics.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I ask the Senator in charge of the bill to allow this amendment to go over for the present.

Mr. HARDWICK. Of course we will do it; but is not the Senator prepared to dispose of it now?

Mr. SMOOT. I will say that a number of Senators who are not here at present are interested in the matter, and I simply ask that it go over now to save time.

Mr. HARDWICK. All right.
Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I should like to suggest a point of order against that amendment and have that pending at the same time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. What is the point of order?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I make the point of order that it is—
Mr. HARDWICK. I hope the Senator will not make it now, because I do not believe, when the Senator understands the proposition, he will make it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I will withdraw it, then, if I find I am

Mr. HARDWICK. Of course, we will not consider that that right is foreclosed to the Senator if he finally concludes to make the point.

Mr. HUGHES. The Senator can make the point of order at any time. It is not the practice here to reserve it.

Mr. HARDWICK. It is not necessary here to reserve it, just

Mr. HITCHCOCK. What is the objection to making it and having it pending?

Mr. HARDWICK. I do not think the Senator will want to make it at all when he understands the proposition. I do not

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I shall be very glad to withdraw it in that event. Meanwhile, Mr. President, I think I will make the point of order and have it pending with the amendment, to save

Mr. HARDWICK. All right. The Senator can do so if he

Mr. WEEKS. I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill when this amendment will be taken up?

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that I asked that it go over temporarily, because a number of Senators are out of the Chamber now who are interested in the amendment. I am perfectly willing to recur to it as soon as they come into the

Mr. WEEKS. I wish to discuss the amendment.

Mr. HARDWICK. Let me suggest to the Senator from Utah re want to push on, of course, the consideration of this bill. This is Saturday, and the longer we delay the less likelihood there is of having absent Senators here.

Mr. SMOOT. I will not ask that it go over at this time if there is anyone here who wants to go on with the discussion. They can do that now, and perhaps I can get Senators who have asked that it go over in their absence into the Senate before the discussion ends. If that happens, then I would be perfectly willing to go on with it now.

Mr. HARDWICK. Suppose we proceed with the discussion now and see if we can not dispose of it, because the longer we wait, as it is Saturday afternoon, the less likelihood there is that Senators will be in attendance.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator understands, I think, my object in asking that it go over, and that I do not object to a vote upon the question.

Mr. HARDWICK. I understand that. I suggest that Senators go on with the explanation and discussion of it, and that he in the meantime notify absent Senators and get them here.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, if the discussion is going on at this time, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll. The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. James in the chair). Fiftyone Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum

Mr. President-

Mr. HARDWICK. Does the Senator want me to proceed with an explanation of the amendment?

Mr. WEEKS. I would be glad to have the Senator from Georgia explain it if he wishes to do so, and then I will take

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, the committee amendment now under discussion will be found on page 4 of the bill:

now under discussion will be found on page 4 of the bill:

For compensation to postmasters, $32,000,000: Provided, That on and after July 1, 1917, drop letters shall be mailed at the rate of 1 cent per ounce or fraction thereof including delivery at letter carrier and rural free delivery offices: Provided, That the rate of postage on second-class matter when sent by the publisher thereof and from the office of publication, including sample copies, or when sent from a news agency to actual subscribers thereto, or to other news agents, shall be 1½ cents per pound or fraction thereof during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and 2 cents per pound or fraction thereof during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and 2 cents per pound or fraction thereof and provided further. That nothing contained herein shall affect the free-in-county privilege on second-class matter or the present rate of postage on newspapers, when the same are deposited in a letter carrier office for delivery by its carriers, or on second-class matter when sent by others than the publisher or news agent.

Mr. President, this proposition when clearly understood ought

Mr. President, this proposition when clearly understood ought in my opinion to appeal to the judgment of every Senator in in two ways. One is to increase the rate on second-class mail this Chamber and on both sides of it. The proposition comes from the Post Office Department with the hearty concurrence of the Postmaster General and has been carefully worked out by the Post Office officials.

The proposition is twofold. First, that in each post office in the country there shall be hereafter 1-cent postage only in place of the rate of 2 cents charged on all letters within the delivery of that office, including its rural routes,

Mr. President, this of itself and by itself will be a great gain in economy and service to the people of this country. It will give them in part what they are justly entitled to, and what eventually they ought to have, 1-cent postage on letters.

Mr. SMOOT. May I ask the Senator what the Post Office Department estimates that the loss will be from the present

Mr. HARDWICK. I am coming to that right now. The Post Office Department had a test made during the first week in October, 1914-I think that was the year-of what effect on the revenue this proposition would have, although they did not include in it the rural delivery routes. They discovered that the charge of 1 cent instead of 2 cents for the service described in the amendment would lessen the postal revenues by something over $26,000,000.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield to the Senator. Mr. GALLINGER. But is it not reasonable to suppose that when we make this concession to the citizens of the country, giving them cheaper postage, the amount of matter sent in the mails under a 1-cent stamp will be very largely increased?

Mr. HARDWICK. And thereby increase the revenue; undoubtedly. The Senator has just anticipated an argument the Post Office Department makes and that I was about to repeat.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am sorry I did so.
Mr. HARDWICK. I am glad the Senator did it, because he points it out very forcibly; and it shows how a sensible man jumps at once to the right conclusion.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say that I am very earnestly in favor of the amendment becoming a law.

Mr. HARDWICK. Now, Mr. President and Senators, I think the estimate to which I have referred, the test made by the Post Office Department as to the effect it would have on the revenues, was made in one of the busiest months of the year, the month of October, when the fall business is climaxing. It was made at the busiest part of the month, the first week in the month, when monthly statements are going out and monthly settlements are being made.

Therefore the Post Office Department contends, and contends properly, I believe, that probably the figure of $26,000,000 found by their test to be the resulting loss to the Post Office Department is the maximum figure, and that on account of the fact that the test was taken in the busiest month in the year, and at the busiest part of the month, the figure should really be very much under the figure found by the department at that time.

The Post Office Department contends, and contends properly, I think—the committee, at least, believe that its contentions are correct—that the effect of reducing this postage, as just suggested by the Senator from New Hampshire, will be to increase the number of letters that will be mailed, and therefore to increase the postal revenues on those that are sent. That has been the effect, I will say to Senators, in other countries, and it has been the effect in this country also, without exception, when the rates on letters were reduced, either in a foreign country or in our own country. For instance, when letter postage

Mr. WATSON. Is it the estimate that it will be sufficient to make up for the loss of revenue?

Mr. HARDWICK. No; not entirely, and that is the reason for the second proviso in this amendment.

The Post Office Department really believes that the loss in revenue from this 1-cent postage on letters will be something under $20,000,000. They do no know how much. Twenty-six million dollars was their maximum figure. They think it will be considerably under that. It may be not over half of that, when the increase of business is allowed for against that loss, whatever it is. It is necessarily a matter of conjecture. There is no way of giving a mathematical statement of future contingencies. It is clearly a matter of estimate and opinion.

Whatever that loss is, whether it is $13,000,000 or $20,000,000, or somewhere between those figures, they propose to make it up matter half a cent a pound the first year and a cent a pound the second year, so that at the end of two years we will have the rate doubled, and thereafter it will be double in amount what it is now.

We realize now, Mr. President and Senators, about $10,000,000 a year from second-class mail matter, and we carry it at a cost of $90,000,000 or more. In other words, according to the estimates of the Post Office Department, the Government of the United States loses every year on the carriage and transportation of second-class mail matter something like $81,000,000. I make the statement here, and I made it a year age, on the authority of estimates furnished me by the Post Office Department, that, if the users of second-class mail-matter privileges paid to the Government of the United States not a profit but simply what it costs to transport their matter through the mails and to deliver it throughout the country, we could tomorrow give the people of this country universal 1-cent postage as wide as the country and extended to its uttermost limits.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. HARDWICK. I do.

Mr. THOMAS. May I ask the Senator whether it is designed to apply it to the entire country or is the rate which the bill provides in geographical divisions?

Mr. HARDWICK. The Senator has confused it in his mind for the moment with the blue-tag system. That was the case under the blue-tag system. We had it first in only one or two postal divisions, but afterwards we put it on all postal divisions in order to equalize throughout the country. That proposition is not involved here.

Mr. THOMAS. That is what I had in mind.

Mr. HARDWICK. Now, to proceed just a moment with the argument, there is going to be a loss, of course, of somewhere from $13,000,000 to $20,000,000 in giving the people of the country the 1-cent postage on drop letters as provided in this amendment, but I think they are entitled to it. I think they are entitled to it for two reasons; first, because the Postmaster General assures your committee that at the end of this fiscal year there would be an excess of something like ten or twelve million dollars of receipts from the Postal Service over its expenditures, which can help pay this loss. He has called on the publishers of the country, or people who use second-class mail-matter privileges, to contribute $5,000,000 of this deficit the first year and $10,000,000 the second year, although we are losing on carrying their business over $80,000,000 every year.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.
Mr. CUMMINS. The statement just made by the Senator from Georgia, as I understood it, was that the Government is new losing about $70,000,000 a year.

Mr. HARDWICK. Eighty-odd million dollars is my recollection of the figures-$81,000,000.

Mr. CUMMINS. I understood that it would cost $80,000,000 to do second-class mail service.

Mr. HARDWICK. Ninety-odd million dollars. Mr. CUMMINS. The revenue is about $10,000,000.

Mr. HARDWICK. Last year we lost $81,000,000 on this class Mr. CUMMINS.

Whatever it may be, it is a large sum. Mr. HARDWICK. It is a very large sum. Of course, the exact figures do not matter for the purposes of this discussion. Of course, the

Mr. CUMMINS. Can the Senator give me an idea with reference to the distribution of that loss as between the newspapers and so-called magazines or periodicals?

Mr. HARDWICK. I can not. I have an idea, but it is so vague and it possibly may be so inaccurate that it might do somebody an injustice to voice it here.

Mr. CUMMINS. Is it true, as I have supposed, that a very large part of it is due to carrying magazines and periodicals?

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes, sir; that is true, a very large proportion; and a great many of these magazines and periodicals, I will say to the Senator, are hardly worthy to be called reading or educational journals; they are simply business enterprises.

Mr. CUMMINS. I think it would be vastly better if many of them were not permitted to be mailed at all. But the thought in my mind is this: Are we going to increase the burden of the legitimate newspaper, which is as necessary, of course, as the sun or food to life in this civilization, because of the great carloads of unworthy periodicals and magazines being carried?

Mr. HARDWICK. No; I will say to the Senator that is one reason why I advocate this proposition with so much confidence, because the small increase we propose here will not cost any one of them anything like what he ought to pay, I do not care how legitimate a publication he runs.

Mr. WATSON. Could there be any classification by which such magazines would be put in one class and legitimate publications in another, so as to exclude those which are undesirable?

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes, sir; that can be done. And undoubtedly, I will say to the Senator from Indiana, it ought to be done by those who deal with this proposition finally; and before we undertake to make this second-class mail matter pay what it ought to pay we must make a number of classifications. We must classify between legitimate papers and publications and those that we regard as illegitimate or as solely business enter-We can classify between educational journals and news journals and business projects. Ultimately, we are bound to do that, and apply different rates to these classes; but the point I make for this small increase is that this increase is just when applied to any of them, even to the most meritorious, from the standpoint of journalistic worth and from the standpoint of

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BRYAN. The Senator has stated the aggregate loss. Perhaps it would be well to have in mind what it means when applied in a concrete way. Several years ago the Hughes Commission reported a loss of between 7 and 8 cents a pound on second-class mail matter. The Postmaster General reported, however, last year that the loss was 5 cents a pound, the reduction being very largely due to the blue-tag system. After this amendment is adopted the Government will lose on every pound of second-class mail matter carried 4 cents a pound. It does not bring the revenues up to the cost of the service.

Mr. HARDWICK. That is all. It is almost an infinitesimal

Mr. BRYAN. We can not reduce the rate on first-class mail matter unless we increase the rate on second-class mail matter.

Mr. HARDWICK. That is right.

Mr. BRYAN. Yet three-fourths of the revenue is produced from first-class mail matter, the amount being over $225,000.000.

Mr. HARDWICK. That is right.

Now, Mr. President, just one more point. The contention may be made, and there is merit in it-it is the only reason for the moderation with which the committee dealt with this subject-that because of the present price of print paper this is an inopportune time to deal with this question. So I admit, and we have dealt with it only in a very modest way. have only made a very modest beginning in the real solution that ought to be applied to this question, and the very modest increase we have applied to second-class matter can not affect any paper, no matter how legitimate it is, in any way unfairly or unjustly, because even then none of them will pay half what they ought to pay. Now, that is the situation. Here is a great service. We propose to extend to our constituents, to the people of this great country, 1-cent letter postage in every local post office and on the rural routes. Think of what a convenience that is to our country people. People living out on rural routes can write to their friends in town and to merchants on business and people who live in towns and have business in the country can write out and 1-cent postage will carry it.

Senators, while the point of order may be good, I earnestly hope no Senator will interpose it. It is denying to the people of this country a great reform, the beginning of a great and general reduction in letter postage. It is denying to the people of this country who pay upon first-class postage nearly all the postal revenues of this Government a just reduction, not one-half as great as it ought to be. I do think this small increase of $5,000,000 on the business of these people we are carrying at a loss of $80,000,000 a year is not unreasonable at this time or any other, and I do not think one of them ought to object to it.

I will say in this connection that one of the largest publishers in the United States, in conference with the Postmaster General and to some extent informally with some members of the Senate committee, agreed that this was a very reasonable solution, although he wanted the increase up to 2 cents instead of one divided into thirds instead of halves.

I earnestly hope the Senate will adopt this amendment, and that no Senator will insist on arbitrarily interposing a point of order that will keep the Senate from voting for so many million people of the United States this just reform in the Postal Service in this economical postage.

Mr. WATSON. I should like to ask the Senator what would be the shrinkage in revenue if we had universally 1-cent postage?

Mr. HARDWICK. About $80,000,000. You see how the two ans are related. We can not give 1-cent postage without the plans are related.

One more word and then I will leave the subject with the We can not give 1-cent postage on local or drop letters or generally throughout the country unless we make some increase on second-class mail matter. It is a small beginning, a modest beginning, one that has been too long delayed, and we ought at once to take the first step proposed by this amend-

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, the proposition which has been so clearly explained by the Senator from Georgia is twofold. It includes the reduction of postage on drop letters and as a partial compensation for the loss in revenue increases the rate on second-class mail matter. Both these propositions have merit, very much merit. It is doubtful whether any class of mail is profitable except the first-class. In other words, firstclass mail is costing the sender an amount which makes up the deficit in every other class of mail. That should be changed because in effect it is paying a subsidy to the senders of large classes of mail and especially second-class mail matter.

The latest figures on the cost of transporting second-class mail seem to indicate that the Government is losing $80,000,000. Three or four years ago some pretty careful figures were made which indicated that the Government at that time was losing $65,000,000; in other words, it was receiving one-ninth of what it should to pay the cost.

There is not, Mr. President, very great objection on the part of those who produce second-class mail to paying a reasonable increase in the cost of transporting it. But the time at which this step is being taken is, I think, a very unfortunate one.

I would be very glad, personally, to see a reasonable increase made in carrying second-class matter, and I am in favor of a reduction of postage on drop letters to 1 cent when it can be done without disturbing the revenues of the Government and without disturbing a great business, such as is the publication of newspapers and periodicals. We will lose a maximum of something like $26,000,000 in the reduction of postage on drop letters to 1 cent. I think that is probably more than the amount which will be lost. Perhaps from twenty to twenty-five million dollars would be nearer right. By increasing the postage one-half cent a pound on second-class mail matter we will increase the receipts from that source about $5,000,000 the first year and about $10,000,000 the second year. So there will be a loss this year of certainly $15,000,000, and I think probably considerably more than that.

This is not a good year to cut out $15,000,000 of revenue, which can be obtained without any trouble. We are going to great lengths to produce sufficient revenue to carry on the Government and to pay for the extraordinary expenditures which are going to be required. Under those circumstances, when we are in the habit of paying 2 cents postage, and when it will produce $15,000,000 of revenue, which otherwise would be lost, it seems to me extremely bad business to take action which will necessitate the raising of that additional amount of revenue from some other source.

Almost all publishers of newspapers and periodicals agree that they should pay a higher mail compensation than they are now doing. I have talked with a great many of them during my service on the Post Office Committee, and I do not recall a dissenter to that proposition; but there is always raised the question of whether one kind of second-class matter shall pay a larger increase than some other kind, as, for instance, whether newspapers shall be increased as much as the periodicals, or whether the additional charge shall be imposed on advertising alone, or whether it shall be imposed on weight alone. There is a very large element in the publishing business that believes that the tax should be imposed on advertising matter, which is not always educational, but which is always commercial, and, therefore, which would seem to be a proper subject for taxation. This Post Office Committee has not considered that phase of the question. It should be carefully considered before we

The publisher referred to by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] is one of the great publishers of this country, but he has a different method of distributing his product from that which is followed by most other publishers.

Mr. HARDWICK. If the Senator will pardon me right there,
I desire to say that, while that is true to some extent, he is the largest payer for the second-class mail privilege in the whole country, as the Post Office Department stated.

Mr. WEEKS. I did not know that.

Mr. HARDWICK. That is true. He is the very largest user of the second-class mail privilege there is in the United States.

Mr. WEEKS. It is also true, Mr. President, that he has been the president of the association of the publishers of secondclass mail matter, but he has resigned that position. The action which he has taken before the Post Office Department and such communication as he has made to the committee-I do not know that he has made any directly—

Mr. HARDWICK. He has made none to the committee.

Mr. WEEKS. Has been an individual opinion, rather than the matured judgment of those who are engaged in the publication business. I have myself talked with this gentleman many times, and I know he has felt that if the rate could be raised to 2 cents a pound, and stopped there, it would be the wisest course to take from the standpoint of the publishers, if not from the standpoint of the Government; but I do not think too much weight should be given the opinion which he has expressed, and I am confident that it would be antagonized by most of the Pain comment that it would be antagonized by most of the publishers of the country if pressed at this time.

Now, what are the facts about print paper, Mr. President? That is an important question, which should be given fair consideration by the Senate when this proposition is voted on. Print paper has advanced at leaps and bounds during the past year to such a degree that where contracts have not been made which go over for the next year, or where the producers of print paper are not willing to provide on substantially the terms of the past for their regular customers, the increased cost to the publishers is going to be enormous. In many cases it is going to be enough to entirely wipe out the profits of what have been very profitable publications; and as to those which have not been profitable, in many cases, in my judgment, it will practically ruin them. At such a time as this, without giving them a hearing, for the Senate to increase a cost which may bring about the ruin of more or less publishers, seems to me to be unfair and ill-advised. If we are going to do what other Gov-ernments do, we should foster and aid business men, instead of taking action, without giving them a hearing, which may bring about their ruin. I have no doubt that, if a hearing could be given to the publishers of the country by and large, they would agree that at the right time there should be an increase in the cost of carrying their products. That is what we should do. We should give them a hearing, and then come to a definite proposition, and not the haphazard one which is now before the Senate. Otherwise, we are going to do an injustice, not only to the Government, but we are going to do an injustice to the publishers as well. I hope that this matter will be considered on its merits, and that it will be voted down when it comes to a

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, before my colleague takes his seat, I should like to ask him a question. Do I rightly understand him to say that the result of this amendment would be a net loss of at least $15,000,000 of revenue?

Mr. WEEKS. I should say so. Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, that fact seems sufficient, whatever the merits of the case may be, to demonstrate the inadvisability of reducing the postage on drop letters even by increasing second-class rates. We have to impose great taxes on the people, and to cut off this $15,000,000 of revenue at this time-revenue that is easily collected-seems the height of unwisdom. Treating it simply as a tax, without reference to the merits of the proposed rate on drop letters or the rate on second-class mail matter, of 1 cent on every drop letter-which is paid without complaint from the mass of the community-it seems to me to take that off at this time with a loss of $15,-000,000, when we are looking in every direction for taxation, when we are borrowing money to avoid increasing taxation beyond a certain point, is most unwise.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President Mr. WEEKS. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. JONES. I have not heard all of the debate, and so the point on which I desire to ask a question may have been covered, but, as I understand, by this reduction in the drop-letter postage there will be a reduction of the revenues of the Government of twelve or fifteen million dollars?

I should think there would be a reduction of Mr. WEEKS. at least $15,000,000 net.

Mr. JONES. How much would be derived from the increased rate on second-class mail matter?

Mr. WEEKS. This proposition would increase it half a cent pound, which would produce about $5,000,000.

Mr. JONES. So the net loss possibly will be $10,000,000?
Mr. WEEKS. It would be $15,000,000.
Mr. JONES. There would be a net loss of $15,000,000 to the

Mr. WEEKS. There would be a loss of about $15,000,000. A test was made, I will say to the Senator from Washington, in the early days of October, which is, however, hardly a fair time for such a test, because the volume of mail is very great beginning in the month of October. That test indicated that there would be a maximum loss of $26,000,000 by the reduction of the rate on drop letters from 2 cents to 1 cent. If we gain $5,000,000 from the other source, that would mean a net loss of $21,000,000; but I think the maximum loss is too great as based on the 1st of October test, and I should say that there would be a net loss of at least $15,000,000.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I wish I knew for certain whether the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] intended to raise the point of order against this amendment, because, if the point is to be made, I do not care to occupy the time of the Senate in discussing this proposition, which, however, I think has great merit.

I think, as the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Weeks] has stated, that publishers generally throughout the country admit that they are now receiving, and have received for years, a bonus or gratuity from the Government to which they were not entitled, measured by the charges which are im-posed upon other users of the mails. We have had several commissions in the past investigate the question of second-class mail rates, and their reports have been published. Those reports show that the price paid by the users of the mail for second-class matter is placed at from one-ninth to one-fifth of what it actually costs the Government to handle their products through The loss has been estimated at from $80,000,000 to $100,000,000 annually. That loss has been offset to the Government by the revenues which have come from first-class mail postage. Postal cards, for instance, have yielded large sums of money in excess of what it has cost the Government to handle I think it was estimated year before last that we received $15,000,000 from postal cards alone.

Mr. NORRIS. Of profit? Mr. TOWNSEND. Of profit.

The injustice of this condition, Mr. President, has, I think, been quite generally acknowledged, at least by the largest users of the mails, and the smaller users will, under this amendment, retain the privilege that they have now of circulating their local papers without postal cost in their counties and where there is free rural delivery. The proposition is to increase the secondclass mail rate from 1 cent a pound to 11 cents this coming year, and to increase that a half cent next year, making the total rate 2 cents in two years.

When you consider that a great many of these publications which have imposed the greatest loss upon the Government are operated not for the purpose, largely even, of disseminating information among the people, but as business enterprises in selling advertisements, it seems to me that there can be no just reason given why at least the advertising portion of their product should not pay approximately what it costs the Government to handle it. This amendment does not do that. It falls far short of that. It is a sort of compromise proposition which some of the publishers have proposed at this time.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I have a question I desire to ask the Senator. If this amendment is agreed to, would not the publishers of newspapers and periodicals having the second-class mail privilege be able in many instances, where the distances are not great, to send their publications by express at a less rate than that provided in the amendment, so that the result would be that the Government would lose the profitable part of the business, while, where the distance was great and it cost more to send by express than by mail under the rate provided in the amendment, the publishers would avail themselves of the postal facilities and send their publications through the Post Office Department, and thus the Government would get only the unprofitable part of the business?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, that is exactly what they are doing now.

Mr. NORRIS. I understand that is what they do now; but would they not do the same thing under this amendment?
Mr. TOWNSEND. To some extent. There is no doubt about that. Even to-day, under the present rate, which is a non-compensatory rate, the large publishing company to which the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Weeks] and the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. Hardwick] have referred, send a large part of its publications by freight.

Mr. NORRIS. What do they publish?

out largely by freight where that can be done to the financial advantage of the company and where there is an opportunity to effect a saving, to which I do not suppose anybody can reasonably object; for if there is a facility for handling their product which is cheaper than the mail they have a right to use it, but it is admitted that this proposed increase will produce about $5,000,000 additional revenue. I think it will produce more than that. My understanding is that the $5,000,000 estimate was based on the proposition that there was to be an increase in the second-class matter of one-third of a cent the first year.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, if the increase had been one-third of a cent the increase in revenue would be three and a third million dollars; but with an increase of one-half a cent, the increased revenue would be $5,000,000.

Mr. TOWNSEND. It was my understanding that that estimate had reference to an increase of one-third of a cent in the rate on second-class matter; but if I am mistaken about that we would, nevertheless, receive in additional revenue from this source $5,000,000 the first year.

Mr. NORRIS. Now, Mr. President, will the Senator permit another interruption?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. Bearing right along on the same proposition, could we not meet the objection that exists now, and that will exist if this provision is enacted, by providing a lower rate for the short haul; in other words, by the adoption of the so-called zone system? Would not that be a protection and at the same time give to the publishers the opportunity of sending their publications at a less rate than now for distances where the Government would still make a profit?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I will say, in answer to the Senator's question, that that matter was up but not seriously considered in the committee, because there seemed to be great objection to it. It has occurred to me during the last year that that probably would be the best way to proceed, inasmuch as my view of it is that many publications are commercial propositions anyhow. Take, for instance, magazines or other publications that are made up three-fourths of advertisements. be no reason why such publications should not be handled the same as are articles that now pass through the parcel post; but the committee could not work that out; it did not have time to work it out. But here is a simple proposition of compensating for some of the loss in revenue which will be sustained by granting 1-cent postage on first-class mail in the nature of drop letters and letters carried from the mailing office in the Rural Delivery Service.

The Postmaster General states that he thinks that he will effect a saving in his department during this year which will result in a ten-million surplus at the end of the fiscal year. He recommended that this change in the postal laws be made; or, rather, he recommended the proposition of Mr. Curtis that we raise the second-class rate one-third of a cent a year for three years, when the increase would amount to 1 cent, and the total rate on second-class matter would be 2 cents per pound or fraction of a pound, and he stated that he thought certain economies could be inaugurated which would pretty nearly balance the loss occasioned by the reduction in first-class postage at the end of the year if we imposed this slightly increased rate on second-class mail matter.

It is true, Mr. President, as the Senator from Massachusetts has stated, that the price of print paper, like everything else, has gone up. So has the price for advertising gone up, and it has gone up for the alleged reason that there has been an increase in the price of print paper. The subscription price of publications in many instances has also been increased because of the increased price of paper. These publications in some instances, at least, have recouped in a measure from advertisers and subscribers, and certainly the first-class mail users ought not longer be compelled to make up the losses accruing from second-class mail matter; neither should the Government be a party longer to the gross discrimination between patrons of the mails which it has permitted for years. I can see no reason why dealers in business advertisements should be granted a Government bonus which is denied to other kinds of business.

Furthermore, this is a trifling increase. The full measure of justice can be secured later after full investigation. is unjust only because it is much too slight. But it is conceded that a step in this direction should be taken, and now, when it seems that many of the publishers of the country have agreed that there should be an increase, is the time to take that step.

I do not wish to injure any publication; neither do I wish to Mr. TOWNSEND. Well, they publish three periodicals—the Ladies' Home Journal, the Saturday Evening Post, and the Country Gentleman. I think those publications are now sent that the imposition of $5,000,000 in extra postage charges on the publications of this country is going to affect disastrously a single legitimate publication in the United States. Therefore, it seems to me that we ought to adopt the amendment which the committee has presented. As I said to begin with, however, if the point of order is to be made against it, I think it ought to be made now, before this discussion is long protracted. If it is proposed to have the amendment go out on a point of order anyway, I do not desire to occupy further time of the Senate in discussing it. What is the intention of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Hitchcock] in this regard?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I am perfectly willing to make the point of order now and have the matter ended. make the point of order that the amendment proposes general legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, so far as I am concerned, as one member of the committee, I concede the point of order. desire to say, however, that it has always been the custom to provide for postage rates in the appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair did not catch the statement of the Senator from Florida.

Mr. BRYAN. I say that, so far as I am concerned as one member of the committee-I am not undertaking to commit the committee at all, but I happen to be the only member of the committee present at this particular time-I shall not argue that this is not general legislation, because undoubtedly it is general legislation.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have no doubt that the amendment proposes general legislation, but I want to appeal to the Senator from Nebraska to allow the Senate to vote on the first part of the amendment. Of course, if he intends to make a point of order as to the first proposition, that reducing the rate of postage on drop letters to 1 cent, I will say nothing further; but I will ask the Senator this question: Suppose the Senate agrees to vote upon the two propositions in the amendment separately, would the Senator make a point of order against the first item, providing 1-cent postage on drop letters?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That is another proposition; but as the amendment stands now I make the point of order against it.

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator withdraw the point of order so as to enable me to see if I can not get the consent of the Senate to vote upon the first part of the amendment?

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, if the Senator please, of course, it is his right, if he can do so, to have the question divided; but the committee would not like to separate the two propositions. We do not feel that one should be agreed to without the other.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not care to take up the time of the Senate unnecessarily, and I will ask the Senator if I make the request for a division of the question, will he object to it?

Mr. HARDWICK. I do not know Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President—

Mr. HARDWICK. If the Senator will pardon me just a moment, I do not see how in the world the Government can stand at the present time the loss in revenue which would ensue if the rate on drop letters was reduced to 1 cent, without some increase in the rate on second-class mail matter.

Mr. SMOOT. I will express my opinion briefly.

Mr. HARDWICK. Certainly.
Mr. SMOOT. And I will be brief, I assure the Senator.
I have no doubt, Mr. President, if we adopt the first part of this amendment providing for 1-cent postage on drop letters, under present conditions there would be a loss to the Government of perhaps $18,000,000 or $20,000,000 annually. That is as accurate an estimate as I can possibly make, judging by the amount of receipts that came into the department in the month of October as compared with the receipts in the other months of the year; and, as the test was made in the month of October, I am quite sure that the estimated loss of $26,000,000 is entirely too high, taking the 12 months of the year into consideration.

Mr. HARDWICK. But the Senator must remember-I neglected to include it specifically in my statement perhaps—that that estimate did not include the extension of the proposed 1-cent privilege to rural routes. That will add something to

Mr. SMOOT. I recognize that fact, and I heard the Senator so state; but as soon as the rate of postage on drop letters is reduced to 1 cent I am quite sure the increase in the use of drop letters, and therefore the increase in revenue to the Government, will be greater than is anticipated, for statements of accounts would be sent out more often, circular letters in the way of advertisements would be more frequently employed, and there are many other directions in which the use of drop letters would be increased, which, of course, would be bound to increase the receipts of the department. If the amendment is agreed to and we have 1-cent postage on drop letters, I believe it will bring down the actual loss to the Government in the carriage of the mails to something like $12,000,000. It may not do so the first year, but it certainly will the second year, and by the end of the third year I think the greater part of the loss will be wiped out, even if there were no other change in existing postal

Mr. President, I have all confidence in the statement made by the Postmaster General that there will be a surplus at the end of the fiscal year of nearly $10,000,000. Therefore, if we adopt the 1-cent postage rate for drop letters and there shall be ten-million-dollar surplus in the department, as stated by the Postmaster General—and I think he is correct in his estimatethen there will be very little deficit if we adopt the 1-cent rate for drop letters this year, and next year I am quite confident that there would be none. It is for that reason that I want the question divided and to have the Senate vote upon the first proposition, but I do not want to ask for that if there is any intention of any Senator to make a point of order against it, because it would simply take up the time of the Senate use-

Mr. BRYAN. If the Senator from Utah will yield to me for just a moment, I will state that it is the purpose of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads to ask the Senate to suspend the rule and adopt this amendment, anyhow. to do that, and to ask for a vote of the Senate on the amend-

Mr. SMOOT. If that is the case, I will not ask for a division until after that action has been taken.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia concede the point of order?

Mr. HARDWICK. It is good; yes, sir; but we expect to meet it in another way.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair sustains the point

Mr. BRYAN. I desire to give notice that on Menday I will offer this amendment, and I send to the desk a written notice of a motion to suspend the rule. I will ask the Secretary to read the notice and that it be printed in the RECORD. The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

The Secretary read as follows:

I hereby give notice that on Monday, February 12, 1917, I shall move to suspend paragraph 3 of Rule XVI, prohibiting general legislation upom general appropriation bills in order that I may propose the following amendment to H. R. 19410, an act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes, to wit:

On page 4, line 15, Insert the following:

"Provided, That on and after July 1, 1917, drop letters shall be mailed at the rate of 1 cent per ounce or fraction thereof, including delivery at letter carrier and rural free-delivery offices: Provided, That the rate of postage on second-class matter when sent by the publisher thereof and from the office of publication, including sample copies, or when sent from a news agency to actual subscribers thereto, or to other news agents, shall be 1½ cents per pound or fraction thereof during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and on and after July 1, 1919, 2 cents per pound or fraction thereof than provided further. That nothing contained herein shall affect the free-in-county privilege on second-class matter or the present rate of postage on wewspapers, when the same are deposited in a letter-carrier office for delivery by its carriers, or on second-class matter when sent by others than the publisher or news agent."

NATHAN P. BRYAN.

NATHAN P. BRYAN.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, as I am obliged to leave the Chamber for an hour or two I want to ask the Senator in charge of this bill if he will not consent that the amendment relating to the pneumatic-tube service shall go over until Monday?

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, personally, of course, I should be very glad to consent to any request that the Senator desired to make of me; but the desire of the committee is to press the bill through as rapidly as possible.

I wish to submit a few remarks on that Mr. VARDAMAN. amendment, and I do not think I shall be able to do it this afternoon. I have a matter of official business of importance that will require me to be absent from the Chamber probably for a couple of hours.

Mr. HARDWICK. We will not take it up in that time.

We will pass it over.

Mr. VARDAMAN. If I did not happen to get back, I should not like to have the matter considered this afternoon. are not going to be able to finish the bill to-day.

Mr. HARDWICK. Let me ask the Senator a question. Would the Senator want us not to use the day when we have it? Suppose there is no other part of the bill that is going to provoke any debate—does the Senator want to hold it up

Mr. VARDAMAN. The Senator has given notice that he is going to consider the bill Monday.

Mr. HARDWICK. I know, but the item to which the Senator refers is practically the only thing we have left that is likely to create any division or debate. Now, are we to pass that over until Monday also? We have had to pass the other matter over until Monday under the rules.

Mr. VARDAMAN. As a matter of fact, you do not have to pass any amendment over. You can go ahead with it and let it take its fate.

Mr. HARDWICK. I mean, we could not deal with it at all, under the rules, except by passing it over until Monday. Of course, the Senator is a member of the committee, and we want to do anything in the world to accommodate him.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I certainly would not have made the request if it had not been necessary for me to do it. I shall try to get back, but I should like to have the assurance that if I do not get back the amendment will not be considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Mississippi to pass over the section relating to the pneumatic-tube service?

Mr. HARDWICK. If the Senator presses the request, of course I will not object to it. He is on the committee, and has just as much responsibility for the bill as I have.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I want the Senator to understand, of course, that I am not trying to delay it.

Mr. HARDWICK. The only trouble is, I am afraid it will delay it; but if the Senator is willing to take that chance I will agree to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will continue the reading of the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed, and the Secretary read to line 8, on page 11.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the amendments made in the next paragraph all relate to promotions of clerks in post offices, and the Senate amendments have decreased the amount of promotions provided for by the House. I know it is rather of promotions provided for by the House. I know it is rather embarrassing for me to ask that this matter go over at this time, because I am perfectly ready to discuss it now; but there are a number of Senators who are absent from the city, who wish to be here when this matter is considered.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, the trouble is that it is getting so late in the session, and we have so much business to transact, that I would rather the Senator would just let us go ahead and dispose of as much as we can,

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that since my former statement I have learned that two or three of those who are deeply interested in this matter are out of the city.

Mr. HARDWICK. They can not be so very deeply interested in it, then.

Mr. SMOOT. I perhaps ought to take a share of the responsibility, Mr. President, because the other day, when they were here, they asked my opinion as to whether the Post Office appropriation bill would be reached by Saturday. From what I learned from the chairman of the committee at that time, I doubted very much whether it would be reported to the Senate and considered to-day, and I stated that I dld not believe the bill would be before the Senate by this time. If the Senator does not want the item to be acted upon now, I shall not insist. I am just telling him the situation that actually exists.

Mr. HARDWICK. Does not the Senator really think we ought to press the consideration of this bill?

Mr. SMOOT. I will ask the Senator just to pass it temporarily, and see how we get along with the balance of the bill.

Mr. HARDWICK. All right; I will consent to that.

Mr. SMOOT. Then we can revert to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the section will be passed over. The Secretary will continue the reading of the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed, beginning with line 24, page 11; and the Secretary read to line 13, on page 12.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, an amendment which the omittee adopted to the next provision has evidently been omitted from the printed copy of the bill. In line 22, page 12, before the word "watchmen," we inserted the word "foremen." Mr. HARDWICK. That is correct, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated. The Secretary. Before the word "watchmen," at the beginning of line 22, it is proposed to insert the word "foremen."

Mr. HARDWICK. The committee has no objection. That amendment was really agreed to in the committee.

amendment was really agreed to in the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed, and the Secretary read to line 8, on page 14.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the next paragraph refers to the promotion of letter carriers. I ask that it go over temporarily, the same as the item with regard to the clerks,

Mr. HARDWICK. The committee has no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the item will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed, and the Secretary read to line 8 on page 15.

Mr. HARDWICK. The next paragraph we agreed to pass over, Mr. President. The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes; that paragraph will be passed over. Mr. TOWNSEND. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Vardaman] is here. Mr. HARDWICK. Yes; the Senator from Mississippi is here. Is there any reason why we should not take up this mat-

Mr. VARDAMAN. I am going out right away. They are waiting for me.

Mr. HARDWICK. Very well, Mr. President.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be passed

The reading of the bill was resumed, beginning with line 12,

The next amendment was, under the head of "Office of the Second Assistant Postmaster General," on page 17, line 5, after the word "routes," to strike out "$1,124,000" and insert: "or by aeroplanes, $1,224,000: Provided, That out of this appropria-tion the Postmaster General is authorized to expend not exceeding $100,000 for the purchase, operation, and maintenance of aeroplanes for an experimental aeroplane mail service between such points as he may determine," so as to make the clause read:

For inland transportation by steamboat or other power-boat routes, or by aeroplanes, $1,224,000: Provided, That out of this appropriation the Postmaster General is authorized to expend not exceeding $100,000 for the purchase, operation, and maintenance of aeroplanes for an experi-mental aeroplane mail service between such points as he may determine.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator having the bill in charge whether there have been any experiments made with the aeroplane in mail service in the United States?

Mr. HARDWICK. There have been some experiments made; exactly where, I can not inform the Senator; but the Post Office Department informed us that there have been some experiments of this kind made, and that they were satisfied that in certain parts of the United States that are very difficult to get at by the ordinary methods of communication some service of this sort could be very reasonably employed. We first appropriated $50,000.

Mr. SMOOT. They think the conditions are such in some parts of the United States that this service would be justified?

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes; that this service would be justified; and, really, they say it is the most economical service that we could maintain in some parts of the country. They are experimenting with it, of course. A year ago we appropriated $50,000. for experimental purposes along this line, to be expended in the discretion of the Postmaster General. The cost of aeroplanes have increased so that they were not inclined to extend the experiments.

Mr. SMOOT. What I wanted to know was whether there had been any report made to the committee, or to Congress, showing the result of any experiments of that kind?

Mr. HARDWICK. No; except in a very general way. The Postmaster General claims that this method of carrying the mails is still in the experimental stage, and he never has asked the committee for any considerable sum. You will notice that he only wants an increase now of $100,000, to be expended in his discretion.

Did they spend the $50,000 last year? Mr. SMOOT.

Mr. HARDWICK. They never made any report.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President-

Mr. SMOOT. I can imagine, of course, places where, in my opinion, there would be a saving through using the aeroplane in the transportation of the mails.

Mr. HARDWICK. That was the statement that was made to us, and, as the Postmaster General only asked for a very modest sum for experimental purposes, the committee was not disposed to be very critical about it.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Georgia a question?

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield to the Senator from Oregon. Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Is there not some discussion about trying it in Alaska? Mr. HARDWICK. Yes.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Where, in certain seasons of the

Mr. HARDWICK. In certain seasons of the year nothing but dog sleds can go through, and they want to try these aeroplanes up there.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POMERENE in the chair). Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Wash-

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield to the Senator from Washington.
Mr. JONES. I have not had an opportunity to examine this provision very carefully, but does it require the Postmaster General to conduct these experiments himself, or can he do this through other departments?

Mr. HARDWICK. Oh, of course, the Postmaster General only directs it, just like he does any other service.

Mr. JONES. I do not refer to his doing it himself personally; I mean through the department. Must he use this fund himself—that is, through the department—or can he—

Mr. HARDWICK. I imagine he could contract the service out, if he wanted to, under this language.

Mr. JONES. That is what I wondered.
Mr. SMOOT. No; I do not think so, Mr. President. The appropriation is for the purchase, operation, and maintenance of aeroplanes for experimental purposes.

Mr. HARDWICK. Oh, yes; that is frue. I stand corrected. The Senator from Utah is right. By the way, I think this is the first time that language has been employed.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. HARDWICK. Before, under the language at first employed, he could have done what I suggested.

Mr. JONES. Does not the Senator think that he ought to have that authority?

Mr. HARDWICK. I do. That is the reason why the committee granted it to him without question; and, as I understand the Senator from Utah, he is not disputing it at all.

Mr. SMOOT. Not at all.

Mr. HARDWICK. There is no controversy about it.

Mr. JONES. But, as I understand, the language of the bill now does not allow him to let it out to private parties. He must carry on this service under his own department.

Mr. HARDWICK. I will say to the Senator from Washington that the language was changed at the request of the Post Office Department, because they preferred to conduct these ex-

Mr. JONES. I know: but does not the Senator think that possibly these demonstrations could be made much more cheaply by parties who are now in the aeroplane business—men who are trained for it, who have the machines, and all that sort of thing—rather than to have the department have to train men?

Mr. HARDWICK. I guess they can hire men that know the business as well as other people.

Mr. JONES. They might and they might not. You have got to pay them a certain amount.

Mr. HARDWICK. I do not see why you could not. You can hire men if you have money, whether you are under a Government bureau or not.

Mr. JONES. I know; but you might be able to get this done more cheaply by persons who are already prepared to do it than if the Government had to keep it up itself. That just occurred to me.

Mr. HARDWICK. I know. We have simply adopted the language suggested by the Post Office Department in this matter, for this reason: This service was experimental and we wanted the department to get the experience with it itself, so that if there is to be any considerable extension of it in the future, or any considerable expenditure upon it in the future, the department will have some practical knowledge of it. The change in language was made at the suggestion of the Post Office Department, I suppose, because they wanted to experiment with it in this way. The amount asked was very small.

Mr. JONES. They will come in and ask for $500,000 next

Mr. HARDWICK. Then we will give the matter a little more careful consideration.

Mr. JONES. Then they will come in and ask for $1,000,000

Mr. HARDWICK. When the matter passes beyond the experimental stage we will apply a different rule to the consideration of their requests.

Mr. JONES. Yes; but private parties are experimenting with aeroplanes all the time. They are developing them, and it ments and make better experiments and better demonstrations than the department is.

Mr. HARDWICK. That might be true; but we are trying to give our department some actual experience with this business itself

Mr. JONES. In order that there may be somebody trained up in the department, so that if this service should develop they will be better competent to pass upon-

Mr. HARDWICK. To pass upon contracts and everything

Mr. JONES. I think there is some force in that. Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Georgia a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Did I understand the Senator from Georgia, in his colloquy with the Senator from Utah, to agree that under this provision the department could not get an expert?

Mr. HARDWICK. No; indeed—oh, no! Mr. TOWNSEND. I did not understand the Senator, then. Mr. HARDWICK. No; I first said, without looking at the Mr. HARDWICK. No; I first said, without looking at the language very carefully, that I thought the department could contract this service out, remembering the language of a year ago, and not having this language in mind.

Mr. TOWNSEND. But there is nothing in this that prevents the Postmaster General-

Mr. HARDWICK. There is nothing here that prevents him from hiring all the experts he wants to; and I imagine he will have to if he runs aeroplanes successfully.

Mr. TOWNSEND. He is a rash man indeed who will suggest that the aeroplane service is not going to be of real, practical use to the department in carrying the mails.

Mr. HARDWICK. We think so.
Mr. TOWNSEND. And it seemed to me, as it did to the other members of the committee, that we could well afford to make this experiment.

Mr. HARDWICK. That is right.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 17, line 11, after the word routes," to strike out "$66,350,000," so as to read:

For inland transportation by railroad routes.

Mr. HARDWICK. The committee moves to restore that appropriation.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment was, on page 17, after line 11, to insert: Provided, That not to exceed $1,000,000 of this appropriation may be expended for pay of freight and incidental charges for the transportation of mails conveyed under special arrangement in freight trains or otherwise.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 18, line 11, before the word "clerks," to strike out "two thousand six hundred and five" and insert "four thousand one hundred and twenty," so as to Railway Mail Service: For 15 division superintendents, at $3,250 each; 2 assistant superintendents, at $2,350 each; 15 assistant division superintendents at $2,250 each; 118 chief clerks, at not exceeding $2,100 each; 474 clerks, grade 10, at not exceeding $1,800 each; 2,053 clerks, grade 9, at not exceeding $1,800 each; 2,053 clerks, grade 9, at not exceeding $1,500 each; 7,965 clerks, grade 6, at not exceeding $1,400 each; 2,403 clerks, grade 5, at not exceeding $1,300 each; 4,122 clerks, grade 4, at not exceeding $1,200 each; 78 clerks, grade 3, at not exceeding $1,100 each; 79 clerks, grade 2, at not exceeding $1,000 each; 4,120 clerks, grade 1, at not exceeding $900 each.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator in charge of the bill why we need this large increase of clerks?

Mr. HARDWICK. Because of the classification provided by the amendments that follow. There are a number of men who have been classified as substitutes who are really entitled to promotion to clerks. Their promotion is provided for in the amendments that immediately follow. That will increase the number of clerks that are provided in the bill. It is just a correlation of language. The real substantial amendment follows.

Mr. GALLINGER. Does it not make a large increase in the number of clerks?

Mr. HARDWICK. It makes an increase in the number of clerks, but, of course, a smaller number of substitutes.
Mr. GALLINGER. An equal number or nearly so?
Mr. HARDWICK. The calculation was made as to how seems to me they are better prepared to carry on those experimany would be taken out of the substitute class and made clerks, and therefore the number of clerks is increased, as the

Mr. SMOOT. There is an increase in the appropriation from $28,208,300 to $28,385,500.

Mr. HARDWICK. That is the total increase in the expenses of the Railway Mail Service.

Mr. SMOOT. That increase is caused by the increase in salaries of those who are promoted from substitutes to clerks? Mr. HARDWICK. Yes, sir; that is, by promoting a number to clerks who were substitutes.

Mr. GALLINGER. I call the attention of the Senator to the phraseology in lines 14 and 15:

Provided, That hereafter any substituted railway postal clerk who is not sooner appointed as a clerk—

And so forth. If he has been appointed as a clerk, he is not a substitute. Should not the language "sooner appointed as a clerk" be stricken out? Mr. HARDWICK. We got that from the department. It follows their practice, anyhow, and reaches what they are trying to do. That amendment has not been reached, but I might just as well explain now that a number of these substitute clerks have been running for years as substitutes, and really are entitled to go on as clerks, and the department practically

Mr. GALLINGER. You do not intend to make it retroactive?

Mr. HARDWICK. No. Mr. GALLINGER. How can they be substitute clerks and clerks at the same time? I am a little bit insistent, because the language to my mind-

Mr. HARDWICK. I expect the Senator's criticism of the language is proper and right. That part of the amendment perhaps should be stricken out.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have not any doubt about it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment, in lines 10 and 11, to strike out "2605" and insert "4120."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 18, line 12, after the words "in all," to strike out "$28,208,300" and insert "$28,385,500."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 18, line 13, to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That hereafter any substitute railway postal clerk who is not sooner appointed as a clerk shall, after having performed service equivalent to 313 days, be appointed railway postal clerk of grade 1, and in computing such service credit shall be allowed for service performed prior to the approval of this act.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move to strike out the words "who is not sooner appointed as a clerk."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to. The next amendment was, on page 18, line 23, after the word "capacity," to insert the following additional proviso:

Provided further, That hereafter class A lines may be divided into heavy lines and light lines, and the clerks on one-man runs on the heavy lines may be advanced to grade 5 and that clerks on one-man runs on the class B lines may be advanced to grade 6.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to have the Senator explain what the difference is between grade 5 and grade 6.

Mr. HARDWICK. Very well. A grade 6 clerk gets $1,400; a grade 5 clerk gets $1,800. The effect of this amendment is to take these railway mail clerks from short lines and divide those short lines into two classes, those heaviest in the work and those lightest, and to provide for an increase on each line, an increase of $100 a year over the present compensation.

Mr. SMOOT. I was going to ask the Senator if the real result of the amendment is not to increase the salary?

Mr. HARDWICK. Of the very lowest paid of all the railway mail clerks.

Mr. SMOOT. There is no question about that. I was wondering whether an increase of $100 a year would be sufficient.

Mr. HARDWICK. We think so. Their work is lighter than on the heavier lines. They live in smaller towns, where the expense of living is not so great.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The Senator will also admit that those who are transferred to this lighter-line work have been long in the service and are old men.

Mr. HARDWICK. That is a pretty reasonable inference.

We think they are entitled to it, because they are the poorest paid of all the railway mail clerks.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 19, line 17, after the word "sickness," to strike out "$1,365,709" and insert "$1,638,959: Provided, That the act of August 24, 1912 (37 Stat., p. 548), be amended to read as follows: 'That hereafter, in addition to the salaries by law provided, the Postmaster General is hereby authorized to make travel allowances in lieu of actual expenses, at fixed rates per annum, not exceeding in the aggregate the sum annually appropriated, to railway postal clerks, acting railway postal clerks, and substitute railway postal clerks, including substitute railway postal clerks for railway postal clerks granted leave with pay on account of sickness, assigned to duty in railway post-office cars, while on duty, after 10 hours from the time of beginning their initial run, under such regulations as he may prescribe, and in no case shall such an allowance exceed $1.20 per day," so as to make the clause rend:

For travel allowances to railway postal clerks, acting railway postal clerks, and substitute railway postal clerks, including substitute railway postal clerks for railway postal clerks granted leave with pay on account of sickness, $1,638,959: Provided, That the act of August 24, 1912 etc.

Mr. CUMMINS. I wish a little information upon this subject. I am not sure that the question I am about to ask is at all affected by the bill or any amendment to it, but I have received recently some very serious protests against a change of policy that is about to be made or has been made concerning the work of the railway mail clerks. It appears that they are about to put in a system that will compel the railway mail clerks to change their places of residence, compelling men who have lived for years in a community and whose families have grown up with the community to change their place of abode, to the very great inconvenience of the clerks and possibly to the detriment of the service. I ask the Senator from Georgia whether this amendment has anything to do with that situ-

Mr. HARDWICK. No; this amendment is entirely unrelated to that subject, although I think I can explain the matter to which the Senator refers.

Mr. CUMMINS. I shall be very glad to have some explanation made of it.

Mr. HARDWICK. The pending amendment the Senator is addressing himself to is a provision like this: Under the existing law the railway mail clerks are entitled after they have been out on their run for 10 hours to $1 a day for traveling expenses, for meals and lodging.

The complaint has come generally throughout the country that the recent advance in prices has been such that that is not adequate. The showing made to the committee, and even the statement of the department, convinced us that probably the amount ought to be increased. So we increased it to $1.20 a day, in order to cover what we believe is the actual increase these men have been put to. We are trying to carry out the intent of the original law to give them what actually was the cost. Of course no one can have any objection to this amendment.

The question which the Senator from Iowa asks relates to a policy of the department in what is called the terminal-station service. In some cases the department contends, and with a great deal of justice, as mail going through some railway centers is delayed anyhow for a good many hours, by putting clerks there to distribute it and getting it ready for other carriers and further distribution would save a great deal of time and a great deal of money. The department has put in a good deal of service like that, and a good deal of it, I think, has not only been justified but is absolutely economical in a reasonable administration of the Post Office Department.

But the railway mail clerks have to some extent been dissatisfied about it, because they claim it has been carried too far, and because the department, believing it can get the work done cheaper in that way, has taken them off of trains where the best administration of the service might require it. Of course the readjustment of the service at a station like that has to some extent involved moving clerks who have been living in a certain town or city for a long time to another station or another town or city, and a further readjustment at some time will be necessary.

Mr. CUMMINS. Is there anything relating to that in this bill?

Mr. HARDWICK. Nothing whatever. The committee went into it, but we could not find exactly what the dividing ground was-exactly how far the department ought to go-and we were not prepared to say that the department had gone too far in the matter.

Mr. SMOOT. In this readjustment, I understand, there has been a great deal of labor placed upon all the clerks, and some of the clerks who still remain have been compelled to remove from their old homes to other places. I will say to the Senator from Iowa that I have received a great many protests in regard to the readjustment that has taken place.

While I am on my feet I wish to ask the Senator from Georgia one other question. Does the amendment just adopted, beginning at the bottom of page 18 and including lines 1 and 2, on page 19, comprise the only advances that have been made to the railway postal clerks?

Mr. HARDWICK. That is the only thing that has been done for them, except as to the substitutes and the increase in allowance for traveling expenses.

Mr. SMOOT. That is an increase to $1.20 instead of $1, as now provided by law?

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. Is that all that the great majority of railway postal clerks will receive by way of an increase?

Mr. HARDWICK. That is not all. We have taken the clerks with the poorest pay out of one amount—

Mr. SMOOT. That is, grade 5 and grade 6?

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes; and we have advanced them $100 a year. A great number of substitutes—a thousand, or something like that—who have been substituting for more than a year we have advanced to the grade of clerks.

Mr. SMOOT. The advance made from substitutes to clerks is represented by an increase of one hundred and seventy and some odd thousand dollars.

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes; $177,000.

Mr. SMOOT. I think that in the Railway Postal Service the clerks are the most poorly paid, perhaps, of any in the service of the Government of the United States, considering the amount of work and the risk and the great responsibility placed upon

Mr. HARDWICK, The Senate committee is fully sympathetic with that view; but the Senator from Iowa must realize, as we all realize on both sides of the Chamber, that this is not an appropriate season, with the Government finances in the condition they are in, with a heavy deficit facing us, and with the necessity for increased taxation staring us all in the face, to make salary increases, and we have had to be a little mod-erate about it. We hope at some future day to readjust the entire thing on some more liberal scale. I say to the Senator that personally I favor such a readjustment, but I have felt that for the present we have done fully as much as we were justified in doing in view of the condition of the Public Treasury.

Mr. CUMMINS. I cordially agree with the Senator from Georgia in his last remark. I think we ought to go somewhat slowly in increasing compensation generally, but I hope that if the committee has any influence, or if there is any provision that will reach the subject, there may be impressed upon the department the idea that after a policy has been in force for years and years and men have fashioned their lives upon it, have founded their homes upon the assumption that the policy would continue, only under the most imperative necessity should that policy be disturbed, and all these men, or a great portion of them, be compelled to lift themselves out of the society in which their families have grown up in order to make a small saving in the expenses of the department.

Mr. HARDWICK. The committee agrees with that view thoroughly. At the same time, of course, the Government service must be improved where it can, and the public must be served in the most efficient and economical way possible.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 20, line 9, to insert "Provided, That the appropriation for the payment of substitutes for clerks on vacation may be utilized for the payment of salaries of regular clerks," so as to make the clause read:

For substitutes for clerks on vacation, $864,585: Provided, That the appropriation for the payment of substitutes for clerks on vacation may be utilized for the payment of salaries of regular clerks.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to have an explanation of this amendment

Mr. HARDWICK. This was done at the request of the department, in order to provide for the payment of the substitutes that we provided for, promoted to be clerks. That has already been provided for, and we want them to utilize this fund to pay the same men.

Mr. SMOOT. I see the object, although this is the first time I ever noticed in an appropriation bill a provision of this character

Mr. HARDWICK. It is really a very short cut to take it out of the fund.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was on page 22, line 16, after "$2,500," to insert: "Provided, That hereafter the Postmaster General is hereby authorized and empowered to enter into contracts with American citizens for the carrying of the mail between the United States and Great Britain on steamships built in the United States capable of maintaining a speed of 30 knots an hour at sea in ordinary weather and of a gross registered tonnage of not less than 35,000 tons. The said service to commence not more than four years after the contract shall be let. The rate of compensation to be paid for the said ocean mail service shall not exceed the sum of $10 per mile by the shortest practicable route for each outward yoyage. The Postmaster General shall have the right to reject all bids not in his opinion reasonable for the attaining of the purposes named: Provided further, That after the commencement of said service no vessel shall be accepted for mail service between the United States and Great Britain under the act of March 3, 1891, entitled An act to provide for ocean mail service between the United States and foreign ports, and to promote commerce': Provided further, That if there is no offer in accordance herewith to make any of the number of voyages each year specified by the Postmaster General to be made by the hereinabove described vessels, or if there is an offer in accordance herewith to make some but not all of the number of voyages each year specified by the Postmaster General to be made by the hereinabove described vessels, then, and only in either of the events aforesaid, there may be accepted for said mail service under the provisions of said act of March 3, 1891, between the United States and Great Britain vessels of the first class as described in the said act of March 3, 1891, but only for the number of voyages each year which can not be made by the hereinabove described vessels: Provided further, That all of the provisions of the said act of March 3, 1891, so far as they are not inconsistent herewith, shall control and apply to the methods to be used and contracts to be made hereunder."

Mr. HARDWICK. There is a mistake in the print, and in lieu of the language reported by the committee the committee desires to offer the following substitute.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be read.
The Secretary. On page 22, line 16, after "$2,500," insert:

Provided, That hereafter the Postmaster General is hereby authorized and empowered to enter into contracts with American citizens for the carrying of the mail between the United States and Great Britain on steamships built in the United States capable of maintaining a speed of 30 knots an hour at sea in ordinary weather and of a gross registered tonnage not less than 35,000 tons. The said service to commence not more than four years after the contract shall be let. The rate of compensation to be paid for the said ocean mail service shall not exceed the sum of $10 per mile by the shortest practicable route for each outward voyage. The Postmaster General shall have the right to reject all bids not in his opinion reasonable for the attaining of the purposes named: Provided further, That all of the provisions of the act of March 3, 1891, entitled "An act to provide for ocean mail service between the United States and foreign ports and to promote commerce," so far as they are not inconsistent herewith, shall control and apply to the methods to be used and contracts to be made hereunder.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President— Mr. HARDWICK. I desire to submit, in support of the amendment proposed by the committee, the letter of the Postmaster General.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator desire to have it read?

Mr. HARDWICK. I should like to have the Secretary read the letter.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be read. The Secretary read as follows:

Office of the Postmaster General, Washington, D. C., January 26, 1917.

Hon. John H. Bankhead, Chairman Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, United States Senate.

Chairman Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads,
United States Senate.

My Dear Mr. Chairman: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 20th instant, inclosing, for my opinion regarding its merits, a copy of a proposed amendment to the Post Office appropriation bill for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, authorizing the Postmaster General to contract with American citizens for carrying the mail between the United States and Great Britain on steamships capable of maintaining a speed of 30 knots an hour, at a rate of compensation not exceeding $10 a$ mile.

In my annual report for last year I called attention to the possibility of constructing ships of much greater speed than any now in the maritime service and recommended that this more efficient service be secured to the Government if it could be done upon fair terms. If Congress desires, by an amendment to the Post Office appropriation bill, to authorize the department to avail itself of such a service, I shall not object to, such an amendment, provided it leaves to the discretion of the Postmaster General to act thereon and that a proper limitation be placed upon the maximum amount that can be paid.

With reference to the amendment which accompanied your letter, you are informed that the limitations sought to be placed upon the department, beginning with the word "Provided," in line 4, on page 2, to the word "vessels," in line 24, on page 2, inclusive, are objectionable to the department; also, that if the text of the amendment is approved by the committee, the word "said," in line 2, should be omitted, and the words "entitled 'An act to provide for ocean mail service between the United States and foreign ports, and to promote commerce' "should be inserted after the word "ninety-one," in line 1, on page 3, so as to make clear what act is referred to. With these changes the amendment will read as follows:

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I am much pleased that the Senator from Georgia has submitted this substitute for the amendment in the bill. I will ask the Senator if I understand it correctly? Provision is made for these fast steamships, unexcelled in speed and tonnage, at a high rate of compensation as compared to what is now being paid to the steamships of lower tonnage and less rate of speed.

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes.
Mr. GALLINGER. All that is added to it is that the provisions of the ocean-mail act of 1891 shall be applied to this new

Mr. HARDWICK. The Senator is right.
Mr. GALLINGER. That is very agreeable to me. I was about to call the Senator's attention to the fact that I thought everything contained in the proviso ought to go out because it seemed to disturb the entire system which is now in operation under the ocean-mail act of 1891. As the Senator knows, we provided in that act for steamships of 20 knots an hour and we are paying them $4 a mile on the outward voyage; second class, I think, $3; third class, $2; fourth class, $1.50. Until a faster service is established and a sufficient number of ships have been constructed, if that time ever comes, it would be a calamity in my opinion to disturb the present system of subvention to the classes of ships enumerated in the ocean-mail act of 1891

Mr. HARDWICK. Neither the committee nor the department has had any such intention. If the Senator will pardon me, the aim of the Postmaster General was to advertise for this higher class service. He is not, of course, supposed to spend anything unless he can get it. The Postmaster General figured that it would be worth to the country and to the Mail Service of the country the amount of money it would cost under this amendment. The committee thought so. The increase in proportion to speed and tonnage is about what it has been for lower grades of speed.

Mr. GALLINGER. I understand that, but reading the proviso in the original amendment I was very fully satisfied that it was unfortunate and that it would-

Mr. HARDWICK. The Senator does not still think that about the substitute?

Mr. GALLINGER. I do not. I agree to the substitute very I am very glad that it has been offered, because I know something about what is going on in that respect. If we have American citizens who can construct ships that will cross the North Atlantic at a speed of 30 miles an hour and of this tremendous tonnage, of course they ought to be employed, because they would outrival any ships that are now in the ocean service of the entire world. I would be glad to see our country take the lead in that respect, and they ought to be well compensated for the service, as is provided in the amendment. It is twice and a half what is paid to the ships that are making 20 miles an hour and of the tonnage of 8,000 tons, I think. The Senator perhaps knows it has been something of a hobby of mine to establish mail lines upon that basis.

While the question of subsidy has been sometimes raised in regard to it, that has never disturbed me; and I am very glad to see that the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads is not frightened because of the fact that we are going to pay for this service an adequate compensation.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, the mere fact of a subsidy does not frighten me, because we are now practically subsidizing everybody and everything in the United States. We hardly pass an appropriation bill without granting some worthy or unworthy subsidy to some enterprise or citizen. But I should like to know whether this particular subsidy—and that it is a subsidy, of course, none will question-

Mr. WEEKS, I question that, Mr. President.
Mr. CUMMINS. Then I will proceed to prove it. I thought it was so plain that it would not be questioned.

Mr. HARDWICK. Then every time we pay anybody for any part of the mail service it is a subsidy.

Mr. CUMMINS. Let us see. The Senator from New Hamp-shire [Mr. GALLINGER] and I understand it alike in that respect. I do not regard it as very likely that there will be any considerable number of ships built in the near future that can run over 30 miles an hour, with 35,000 tons capacity. It probably is

Mr. HARDWICK. If the Senator will pardon me just a moment, in order to relieve the Senator's mind about that, I will say that there have been tests made by our Navy Department here which incline them to believe not only that that can be done but that such a thing as that is within the bounds of possibility and within the immediate future, too.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am not prepared to say that a boat of 35,000 tons, with a speed of 30 miles or 35 miles an hour is an impossibility. I think, however, that those who are familiar with the subject will recognize that, judging by our present standards, a boat of that kind would be very uneconomical in operation, and, therefore, is not likely to be put into any commercial service. However, I rose to ascertain whether it was intended to pay such a boat $10 per mile without regard to the weight of mail carried by the boat. I assume it is.

Mr. HARDWICK. Not to exceed $10 a mile. I have not gone into the details of the act to which reference has been made, but I imagine that the weight of mails has a good deal to do with the payment.

Mr. CUMMINS. The authority we give to the Postmaster General is not limited at all in that respect.

Mr. HARDWICK. No.

Mr. CUMMINS. We say to him that he can enter into a contract with the owner of such a ship by which the Government will be required to pay $10 per mile for the outward voyage, whether the boat carries one letter or 10,000 tons of mail.

I was struck, Mr. President, with this computation: Assuming the distance to be about 2,300 or 2,500 miles between our shores and Great Britain, we would pay such a boat for each outward voyage $23,000 or $25,000, and that without regard to the weight of mail carried. I suppose that we all understand that the revenue derived by the Government from the mails that would thus be carried would be but a very small proportion of the payment which we propose to make. I think $23,000 for one voyage is too great a subsidy. I am willing to give some subsidy, but I think that is too much.

Mr. HARDWICK. The committee are anxious to get along with the bill, as this is Saturday evening; but, of course, the committee is prepared to concede the point of order if the Senator from Iowa wants to make it.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am not going to make a point of order. I never do that. I have too much respect and regard for the desires of a committee to make a point of order upon legislation of this character. I simply wanted the country to know that we were adopting legislation which gave the power to the Postmaster General to pay one of these ships $25,000 for a single voyage, without respect to the question of service that it rendered to the Government in the voyage.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the Senator from Iowa must not lose sight of the fact that all the provisions of the ocean mail act of 1891 apply to these vessels; and that means that they shall be so constructed that they may be converted into vessels of war; that they shall carry boys to be trained in seamanship; and there are various and sundry other provisions. So the carrying of the mail is not the only condition that will be required of these steamships under the act which applies to this new service if it shall ever be established.

Mr. CUMMINS. I remember that; but when the Government does take the ship, if it ever shall find it necessary to do so, it must pay for it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Undoubtedly.

Mr. CUMMINS. And it must pay full value.

Mr. GALLINGER. Undoubtedly.

Mr. CUMMINS. I never thought that that privilege was of very much consequence, because we have the right to take the ship without it, if we should find it necessary for the national defense.

Mr. GALLINGER. The chief advantage is that such ships shall be constructed under specifications of the Navy Department, so that they would be of some service when the Government took them over.

Mr. CUMMINS. I grant that. I think that is a very wise provision in the law; but I wish to ask the Senator from New Hampshire a question. I am willing to give something in order to encourage the building of ships in this country, but I prefer some other plan of giving it than an overcontribution for an alleged service. Without pausing to discuss the difference between us however. I ach the Company to the contribution of the c tween us, however, I ask the Senator from New Hampshire does he not think that a payment of twenty-three or twenty-five thousand dollars to a ship for a single voyage to England would be rather excessive, even considered from the standpoint of an ardent advocate of the subsidy?

Mr. GALLINGER. Well, Mr. President, I always call it a subvention—a mail subvention—rather than a subsidy. The provision I find in the act of 1891 relating to apprentices or boys on the ships requires one to be carried for every 1,000 tons. So that each of these ships would be compelled to carry 35 boys to be trained in seamanship; which would be very desirable.

As to the amount of the subvention, that, of course, is a matter of judgment. The present law pays a subvention of $4 a mile to steamships of a speed of 20 knots and of 8,000 tons registry; it pays $2 a mile-I will try to be accurate-to ships of 16 knots and of 5,000 tons registry; it pays $1 a mile to ships of 14 knots and 2,500 tons registry; and it pays two-thirds of $1 a mile to ships of 12 knots.

As to whether $10 a mile for these mammoth steamships is excessive or not, I can hardly venture an opinion. Under the law they would be permitted to carry passengers, which, of course, we should expect would be very profitable on ships of that description.

I am not at all sure that in the lifetime of some of us ships of that enormous tonnage and that enormous speed will ever ply the ocean; but these of us who are anxious to have a merchant marine built up would be glad to see ships on the North Atlantic exceeding in speed and tonnage any ships owned by any other nation of the earth, as these would exceed them in speed and tonnage, if they should be constructed.

I should be in favor of a liberal subvention to ships of that kind if we can secure them. As to whether or not the $10 is really excessive, I would not want to offer an opinion; but I feel sure the Senator from Iowa may well join me in the presumption that when this matter gets into conference, if it ever does, that that feature of the amendment will be very thoroughly inquired into.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Let me ask the Senator from New Hampshire if he does not think it probable, unless proper aid be granted, that ships of this enormous speed and great capacity might not be constructed at all?

Mr. GALLINGER. It is not only probable, but I think it is absolutely certain that they would not be.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, the suggestion of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] can not lie against this proposition so far as principle is concerned, because the same principle applies now. It is only increasing the amount under conditions that are to be fulfilled, providing the Postmaster General thinks it is in the interest of the Government service that it should be granted. The Postmaster General is not obliged to employ these ships. It is simply giving him the discretion to pay not to exceed $10 a mile—that is the limit—in case these boats are built and he finds it is for the good of the service to employ them in convenient them. employ them in carrying the mail. There is nothing compulsory about it at all.

Mr. GALLINGER. There is not.
The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the substitute proposed by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] on behalf of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.
The reading of the bill was resumed.

The reading of the bill was resulted.

The next amendment of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads was, under the head of "Office of the Third Assistant Postmaster General," on page 24, line 16, after the word "wrappers," to strike out "$1,625,000" and insert "$1,825,000," so as to make the clause read:

For manufacture of stamped envelopes and newspaper wrappers, $1,825,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Postal Savings System," on page 27, line 25, before the word "tools," to strike out "chairs" and insert "chains," so as to read:

For the purchase, manufacture, and repair of mail bags and other main containers, and attachments, mail locks, keys, chains, tools, machinery.

The next amendment of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads was, on page 29, line 7, after the word "stations," to insert:

Provided further, That hereafter the compensation of carriers on horse-drawn vehicle routes shall be at the rate of $24 per annum for each mile of said routes in excess of a standard vehicle route of 24 miles, and any major fraction of a mile shall be counted as a mile.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 29, line 24, after the words "nineteen hundred and," to strike out "seventeen" and insert "eighteen," so as to make the clause read:

That if the revenues of the Post Office Department shall be insufficient to meet the appropriations made by this act, a sum equal to such deficiency of the revenue of said department is hereby appropriated, to be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to supply said deficiencies in the revenues for the Post Office Department for the year ending June 30, 1918, and the sum needed may be advanced to the Post Office Department upon requisition of the Postmaster General.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, will the Senator in charge of the bill in a few words tell what the provisions are that are stricken out? I have not had time to read them.

Mr. HARDWICK. The parts stricken out embrace legislation changing the Revised Statutes as affecting the postal laws. We did not think it ought to be done in this way, as there was no emergency requiring it. We did not approve of that method of legislating, except when an emergency demanded it. So we cut these provisions out, and I think the Senator will agree with the propriety of that general course.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads was, on page 36, after line 22, to insert:

Sec. 2. Contracts made in the Post Office Department for the various classes of mail transportation may, upon order of the Postmaster General, be signed in the place and stead of the Postmaster General by the Assistant Postmaster General who is charged with the supervision of the mail transportation involved, and such officer shall attest his signature to such contracts by the seal of the Post Office Department.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, I make the point of order

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, I make the point of order against that amendment that it is general legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. JONES. I hope the Senator will not make the point of order against that amendment. He will probably remember that a few days ago the Senate without a division passed a separate bill looking to the same end. It has been very carefully considered by the Post Office Committee in connection with this measure, and in connection with the other bill which has been passed. I had hoped that the Senator would not feel the matter has been considered by the Senate, discussed by the Senate, acted upon, and passed without a division.

I will say to the Senator that I was not present when the bill to which he has referred was passed, or I would have opposed it.

Mr. JONES. I did not know that the Senator was not present

Mr. HUGHES. I was not aware that the bill was going to be called up, and I happened to be temporarily absent when it was acted upon. I understand that it went through with very little debate or discussion.

Mr. JONES. It was discussed for some time and was amended to a considerable extent in the Senate.

Mr. HUGHES. That may be so, but certainly only a short time was occupied in its consideration, because I missed it entirely and did not know the bill had been passed. I intend to insist on the point of order in this case.

Mr. JONES. I suppose that it would hardly be desirable to make a motion to-day to suspend the rules; but I have given notice that I will submit such a motion.

Mr. HARDWICK. The point of order, as the Senator from Washington knows, is good, if the Senator from New Jersey insists on it.

Mr. JONES. I understand that.

Mr. HARDWICK. The Senator from Washington will have to handle it in the way he has suggested, if he cares to try that. Mr. JONES. I give notice now that on Monday I will move to suspend the rules.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator will have to give the notice now. Mr. JONES. The notice has been already given, so far as that is concerned, but I simply want to advise the Senate that on Monday the motion will be made. The notice has already been filed.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, has the point of order been passed on by the Chair?
The VICE PRESIDENT. It seems to be conceded that the amendment is subject to the point of order, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, that completes the reading of the bill. I inquire of the Senator from Utah if we can not recur to the amendments which have been passed over?

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to say that I desire to offer an amendment at this time that may have some bearing on other amendments which have been passed over. I offer an amendment to the bill, to be known as section 3.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The Secretary. At the end of the bill it is proposed to add a new section, to be numbered "Sec. 3," as follows:

new section, to be numbered "Sec. 3," as follows:

Src. 3. That to provide, during the fiscal year 1918, for increased compensation at the rate of 15 per cent per annum to employees who receive salaries at a rate per annum of $480 or less, and for increased compensation at the rate of 10 per cent per annum to employees who receive salaries at a rate of more than $480 per annum and not exceeding $1,000 per annum, so much as may be necessary is appropriated: Provided, That this section shall only apply to employees who are appropriated for in the act specifically and under lump sums or whose employment is authorized herein: Provided further, That deatled reports shall be submitted to Congress on the first day of the next session showing the number of persons, the grades or character of positions, the original rates of compensation, and the increased rates of compensation provided for herein.

Mr. HARDWICK. That is the same amendment that was incorporated in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill on motion of the Senator from Utah, is it not?

Mr. SMOOT. It is exactly the same amendment, word for

Mr. HARDWICK. I make the point of order, Mr. President, that it is general legislation-

Mr. SMOOT. Just a moment. I will ask the Senator to withhold that suggestion.

Mr. HARDWICK. I withhold it, of course.

Mr. SMOOT. I hope the Senator will not make that point of order against the amendment. It has been placed upon every appropriation bill which has passed the Senate so far at this session; and if the Post Office appropriation bill passes now without this amendment it will be impossible to secure the amendment in conference. Why can not the Senator accept this amendment? I believe he will agree with me that if the amendment finally is adopted as to the other appropriation bills it ought to be adopted and become a part of this bill. There should be no two plans agreed to by Congress in connection with the compensation paid to Government employees. If the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, the District appropriation bill, the Agricultural appropriation bill, the sundry civil appropriation bill, the naval appropriation bill, and all other appropriation bills carry the same provision, then cerdisposed to make the point of order, in view of the fact that tainly the Post Office appropriation bill ought also to carry it.

I will ask the Senator to allow the amendment to be placed upon the bill and let it go to conference.

Mr. HARDWICK. How did the amendment escape a point of order when it was offered to the other bills?

Mr. SMOOT. Because a majority of the Senate wanted this amendment to go on those appropriation bills.

Mr. HARDWICK. The fact that the point of order was not urged against it in connection with other bills does not affect it in this instance.

Mr. SMOOT. I understand that. I will very frankly say to the Senator that the point of order would not lie against the amendment in connection with the legislative, executive, judicial appropriation bill because of the fact that the House made a provision in that bill for an increase in salaries.

Mr. HARDWICK. The House did not do that in the case of this bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Therefore I offered my amendment as a substitute for the House text, and, as I have stated, the point of order did not lie against it; but as to other appropriation bills the Appropriations Committee have added a similar amendment, and they have felt that that policy should be pursuedthat if one general appropriation bill was to carry the amendment all the general appropriation bills should likewise carry I ask the Senator now to allow it to be placed in the bill, and the conferees can take it in charge.

Mr. HARDWICK. I have not yet made the point of order. My colleague on the committee, the Senator from Florida [Mr. Bryan], desires to say something about it, I understand.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I hope the Senator will not make the point of order against the amendment. If such an amendment is to be finally incorporated in other appropriation bills, it certainly ought to be incorporated in this one.

Mr. HARDWICK. That appeals to me, that we ought not to treat the employees of the Post Office Department differently from the employees of all the other departments, unless there is some particular reason why the same argument will not apply in their behalf. My colleague on the committee, the Senator from Florida, seems to think that it may not apply in this instance, and I think he expects to submit some observations on that question. I shall wait to hear what he has to say about it.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, if I may be permitted a word, I wish to say that I called attention in the discussion of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill to the fact that if the amendment of the Senator from Utah prevailed there it would result in the introduction and probable incorporation into every succeeding supply bill of the same provision. I also, I think, suggested that if we took that course in regard to one set of employees we ought to take it as to all. I opposed that amendment, as I have tried to oppose every movement of similar character, for reasons which I will not reiterate, as I have given them so frequently; but I think that it is perfectly just and right—in fact, that it would be unjust—to do anything else than to incorporate in this bill the amendment which the Senate has seen fit to adopt with regard to the employees of other departments. Consequently, so far as I am concerned, I shall acquiesce, although under protest, recognizing the justice of the situation in relation to the proposed amendment. Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, my recollection is that the representatives of the Post Office Department claimed that they had worked out a system of treatment of their employees which was much more equitable and just than that which they would receive under the so-called Smoot amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. May I call the Senator's attention to the fact that such a plan has been worked out by the department in all cases where salaries are over $1,000. I remember the testimony that was given. I heard the Postmaster General say to the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations that if certain amendments were made to the bill he would prefer them to having a horizontal increase, as provided for by the House. The House provision, as the Senator will remember, granted an increase to all employees receiving salaries up to $1,800 a year, while the amendment proposed by me granted an increase only to those who were receiving salaries of $1,000 or less. Therefore, Mr. President, the statement made by the Postmaster General before the committee does not apply to the amendment I have offered, but did apply to the House provision in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill. I hope the Senator will allow this amendment to go into the bill for consideration by the committee of conference, because I know he is too fair a man to have four-fifths of the Government employees whose compensation is $1,000 and less receive an increase in their salary and not allow a similar increase to the other one-fifth.

Mr. HARDWICK. There is one reason why we might ask the Senator to withhold that motion. We have called on the Post Office Department for an estimate as to how much expenditure it would involve. We anticipated that some amendment like that would be offered.

Mr. SMOOT. I am perfectly willing that it should go over until Monday

Mr. HARDWICK. We hoped to have it to-day, but we have not gotten it yet. I think the Senator had better withhold it until Monday.

Mr. SMOOT. Just a moment, and perhaps I can tell the Senator what it will be.

Mr. HARDWICK. Does not the Senator think we had better get an estimate from the department, so that we may be sure what we are doing?

Mr. SMOOT. I am perfectly willing. Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I want to say that of course I think all the employees ought to be treated alike. We put on the legislative bill a provision of several pages at the request of the Post Office Department, and the department claimed that in that legislation they had given consideration to the claim for increase of their men. Now I want to read just a few words from the House hearings on the legislative bill as applied to the Post Office Department.

Mr. SMOOT. In that connection, Mr. President, just a word.
Mr. BRYAN. I have not made any point of order, but I want this to go in the Recorp in connection with what is being said about this amendment.

In the House hearings Mr. Stafford asked Mr. Denning, chief clerk of the Post Office Department, the following. I will read back in order to get the connection:

Mr. STAFFORD. Would such an examination be held under the supervision of the Civil Service Commission?

Mr. DENNING. Yes, sir.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then you would not necessarily appoint pages at $720 hen they entered the service?

Mr. Denning. There would be no pages appointed. We have places we as assistant messengers, and we made original appointments at

Mr. Denning. There would be no pages appointed. We have places now as assistant messengers, and we made original appointments at $720 per annum.

Mr. Stafford. Then you abolish entirely—

Mr. Denning. The grade of page.

Mr. Stafford. The grade of page.

Mr. Stafford. Then the boys that you bring into the service at 16 years of age, at a salary of $480, would be paid $720?

Mr. Denning. Yes, sir.

Mr. Stafford. Do you think that a fair rate to be paid to a boy just coming out of school?

Mr. Denning. I misunderstood you. Under the civil-service rules we could not appoint a boy to a $720 assistant messenger's place. Applicants must be at least 18 years of age and pass the examination for assistant messenger. We make appointments now of young men from 18 years on up as assistant messengers, and the proposition here is to cut out the grade of page. Then we could not appoint boys any more. We would like, if the civil-service rules permitted us to do so, to promote these boys, but they are absolutely barred from promotion beyond $480.

Somewhere in the hearings there is a statement that it is not the intention of the department to have anybody in its employ at less than $720 a year, except, of course, some of the charwomen and people of that kind.

I want the Senator from Utah to consider whether the Post Office Department has not itself adopted a plan of increased pay, and whether or not this amendment is necessary. He will remember that a committee that went to New York and Philadelphia, before this amendment was offered on the legislative bill, came back, and under instructions from the Postmaster General they placed the salaries of the men in the Post Office Department at 25 to 50 per cent higher, and that was their method of meeting the high cost of living, and the Senate adopted that provision. Now, I do not want on one bill to grant the increase asked for by a department which they preferred, and which their men preferred, to this increase that was put on the legislative bill in the Senate, and then, on another bill, to give them an additional increase. It seems strange, if the Post Office Department are not satisfied, that they would have remained silent and not have said anything to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads about that matter. They seem to be entirely satisfied with the adoption of the provision that went on the legislative bill.

Of course, Mr. President, it is understood here that very few men in the Postal Service receive salaries below $1,000 a year. Most of them receive salaries above that. I believe the average salary is above $1,000 a year, and it is not a case of clerks and stenographers and the lower-paid employees. These men are highly paid employees, as a rule. There may be, and undoubtedly are, instances where benefits would accrue to employees; but the department themselves, with the apparent approval of their employees, asked for legislation that they anted in preference to this legislation, and it was given to them. That is a matter that I think the Senator from Utah ought to take into consideration in offering this amendment. I have no objection at all, so far as I am concerned, with that statement, to allowing the matter to go in and go to conference.

Mr. HARDWICK. No; I would not like to do that just yet, because we have just heard from the Post Office Department to the effect that the Postmaster General has certain reasons for believing that the system provided for promotions and increases in his department is such as to make it difficult of application in the department

Mr. BRYAN. I was sure that would be the case.

Mr. HARDWICK. And he expects to submit that showing to the Senate committee by Monday morning.

Mr. SMOOT. Just a moment further. The Senator, together with myself, was a member of the subcommittee of the subcommittee appointed to consider the proposition made by the Postmaster General to strike out all of the House provision and insert a new system as prepared by him. I gave a good deal of attention to the plan submitted by the Postmaster General. I thought it was visionary to begin with; but the more I studied the plan, the more I became convinced that it was the proper system to follow. The Senator from Florida and myself agreed upon that and reported it to the subcommittee. The subcommittee agreed upon the proposed amendment to the House bill, and the full committee agreed to it, and it was reported to the Senate, and the Senate agreed to it.

Mr. President, I have that proposition before me at this time. I am not going to take the time to read the proposition and explain the changes that were made. All that the Senator from Florida has said would apply to the House provision, or to salaries above $1,000; but in connection with the amendment that was adopted to the House provision, covering all of the appropriations for the Post Office Department in the legislative appropriation bill affecting the higher grade salaries, I remember showing that increases had been made in the department amounting in some cases, beginning with clerks of class 4, to sixty-odd dollars per annum, and in class 3 to fifty-odd dollars per annum, on an average, and in many classes they advanced $200 per annum. In that very amendment we proposed to give authority, and did give authority, to the Postmaster General to change the increases from $200, as provided by the present law, to $100, and to demote $100 instead of $200.

I am quite sure, Mr. President, that the amendment I have offered will take care of a class of employees in the Post Office Department that was not taken care of by the readjustment as adopted by the Senate; but I will say to the Senator that I am perfectly willing that this matter shall go over until Monday, as suggested by him.

Mr. HARDWICK. I think it would be better to do that. BRYAN. Let me make this suggestion to the Senator from Utah: Take the carriers on rural routes, for example. Under the joint resolution that was adopted in 1915, they receive so much according to the number of miles covered, beginning down perhaps as low as $600 per year. Now, it is entirely possible—in fact, I do not see how it could be avoided—that when you get above the $1,000 grade the man in the next higher grade, who is carrying the mail at $1,100, would receive

Mr. SMOOT. That is right.

Mr. BRYAN. But the $1,000 man would receive an increase of 10 per cent, so that he would get-

One thousand one hundred dollars. Mr. SMOOT.

Mr. BRYAN. He would get as much for carrying the mail the shorter distance as the man who was carrying the mail and being paid for a longer distance.

Mr. SMOOT. Why, of course that is true, Mr. President. Mr. BRYAN. Now, that is not right. That is not just as between those men.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that there is a justice in it, for this reason: Wherever there are blanket increases, I do not care what they are, there are always some little inconsistencies; but this is why I say that it is right: In the case of the carrier who is receiving but $1,000, or $900, or $840, and the employees who are receiving $240 and $480, I am quite sure that the Senator himself would say that the increase asked for,

10 per cent on salaries up to $1,000, ought to be allowed.

Mr. BRYAN. The Senator has discussed that; but here Congress, on a joint resolution extending the appropriation of the prior year, concluded that it was so important that they would fix the pay of rural carriers according to the miles, and they wrote that in the joint resolution, leaving all other legislation to wait until the next year. Now, if that was right and Congress thought it was the thing to do, then by the amendment which the Senator has offered you are going to pay a man for fewer miles as much money as you pay a man for hauling a longer distance

Mr. SMOOT. Well, perhaps that would occur in one instance, Mr. President.

Mr. BRYAN. Oh, it would occur in a great many instances.

There are 45,000 of these routes.

Mr. SMOOT. There are some inconsistencies that are unavoidable. For instance, I will say to the Senator, there are employees who are receiving $1,050 on our police force, and under the amendment they do not get any increase; but if they are receiving $1,000 they get 10 per cent increase, making their compensation $1,100, as against the man who is now getting $1,050, and you can not help it.

Mr. BRYAN. Of course, the Senator is pointing out some of the injustices of his own amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. I pointed it out at the time. They are not injustices. It is a condition that you can not avoid; but I say that they are avoided in this amendment just as much as it is possible to do and still reach the cases that we absolutely know are worthy and ought to have assistance. If the Senator wants it to go over until Monday—

Mr. HARDWICK. I think we had better let it go over until Monday.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is in Committee of the Whole and open to further amendment.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have an amendment I desire to offer, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator in charge of the bill desire the other committee amendments to go over

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, it is understood that several of the committee amendments that have been passed over will go over until Monday. We are about to lay the bill aside in just a moment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The Secretary. The Senator from Oregon proposes the following amendment:

The Postmaster General is hereby directed to prescribe rules and regulations for the use of the penalty privilege by the several executive departments and independent establishments of the Government; and such rules and regulations shall, when approved by the President, have the force of law.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, let that be stated again.

The Secretary again stated the amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say to the Senator that we passed just the other day a printing bill that takes care of all the subject matter of the Senator's amendment; and if enacted into law, of course the adoption of this amendment may conflict with the rules and regulations of the department. I hardly think that ought to be put upon this bill.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I question very much whether the bill to which the Senator refers will pass at this late day in the session. Now, here is an opportunity to do something to prevent the abuse of the franking privilege. The Senator will remember that in some of the discussions that have been had here recently it has been shown that men who are on the pay roll of the Government at nominal salaries, receiving their principal salaries from other sources, were having their documents stamped with approval by one of the bureau chiefs, and these documents then went over the country in the form, at least, of governmental publications, when, as a matter of fact, no Government official had read them or given them any consideration. Now, that ought to be stopped. The only purpose of this amendment is to prevent the abuse of the franking privilege; and the Senator will see that it only applies to the executive departments and to independent bureaus.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, Mr. President, there are to-day certain laws regulating the franking privilege; and I do not believe we ought to authorize the Postmaster General to make rules and regulations that may conflict with the laws that are now upon our statute books. It is a very dangerous thing.

I will say to the Senator that I am in sympathy with what he is trying to accomplish, and the House may pass this bill, There is not any opposition to it in the Committee on Printing. It is going to be substituted for the House bill upon the House Calendar, and there is still hope of its passing at this session of Congress. Really, Mr. President, I hope the Senator will not press that amendment.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I submitted this amendment to the Postmaster General, and it met with his entire approval, because he knows, as well as we know who have been giving the matter any attention, that the franking privilege is grossly abused by these executive departments. If the printing bill, of which the Senator speaks, reaches and cures the defect, the Postmaster General certainly would not undertake to adopt any rule that was in conflict with a law of Congress.

Mr. SMOOT. But he has that power; and I will say to the Senator that just as soon as that bill passes it will regulate all that he wants regulated, and it will protect the Government against the abuse of the franking privilege. In fact, I will say that it is just as strict as the Senator himself could possibly ask for

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I should like to have it considered, at least, in conference. If in the meantime the bill goes through, of course it can be dropped out.

Mr. HARDWICK. Does the Senator from Utah make the point of order? Mr. SMOOT. I will have to. I hate to do it, Mr. President; but, really, under the circumstances I feel that I must do it. Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Why does not the Senator from Georgia himself do it?

Mr. HARDWICK. I really did not know whether the Senator from Utah would do it or not.

Mr. SMOOT. I will do it now. I make the point of order that it is general legislation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, the committee will ask now to have the bill laid aside until Monday. Various agreements have been made as to the provisions passed over.

GOVERNMENT OF PORTO RICO.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Georgia to lay aside temporarily the unfinished business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understood that had been done

Mr. SHAFROTH. I move, then, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 9533, entitled "An act to provide a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes."

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President— Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I simply want to ask for a quorum at this time, because the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. Geonna] must be here, as the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. SHAFROTH. I have sent for him. I understand that, and I will not press his amendment until he gets here.

Mr. SMOOT. Well, Mr. President. I think we had better.

have a quorum,

Mr. RANSDELL. I shall have to insist upon a quorum. colleague [Mr. Broussard] is very much interested in this bill, and I could not consent to have it called up in his absence.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I have the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Broussard] and am ready to put it in as a committee amendment, so I have reconciled everything in connection with this bill.

Mr. SMOOT. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. RANSDELL. I would rather have a quorum, Mr. Presi-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the names of the absentees,

The Secretary called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. Chilton, Mr. Kenyon, Mr. Lewis, Mr. Martine of New Jersey, Mr. Pittman, Mr. Poindexter, Mr. Reed, Mr. Townsend, Mr. Walsh, and Mr. Williams answered to their names when colled when called.

Mr. Hughes, Mr. Fall, Mr. Gronna, Mr. Hitchcock, and Mr. Kirby entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-five Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. Shafboth] has moved that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9533) to provide a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes.

Mr. JONES, Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. If the motion is carried and the bill is under consideration when we adjourn, it displaces the Post Office appropriation bill as the unfinished business. Is that correct? The VICE PRESIDENT. It does displace it. The question the unfinished business.

is on the motion of the Senator from Colorado.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

Mr. SHAFROTH. There is an amendment which I supposed had been adopted, on page 25, section 29. In lieu of section 29 insert that which is included in the reprint.

The Secretary. The committee proposes, in lieu of section

29 as stated in the bill, to insert a new section, as follows:

29 as stated in the bill, to insert a new section, as follows:

SEC. 29. The next election in Porto Rico shall be held in the year 1917 upon the 16th day of July. At such election there shall be chosen senators, representatives, a Resident Commissioner to the United States, and two public-service commissioners, as herein provided. Thereafter the elections shall be held on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November, beginning with the year 1920, and every four years thereafter, and the terms of office of all municipal officials who have heretofore been elected and whose terms would otherwise expire at the beginning of the year 1919 are hereby extended until the officials who may be elected to fill such offices in 1920 shall have been duly qualified: Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to limit the right of the Legislature of Porto Rico at any time to revise the boundaries of senatorial and representative districts and of any municipality, or to abolish any municipality and the officers provided therefor.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The next matter that was passed over is a long amendment, beginning on page 30, line 16. There was some objection made to it, and it was passed over. like to have it presented again.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado desire to take up these amendments in the order in which they were passed over?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes; I would prefer that course. The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state them in their regular order.

The Secretary. There was an amendment passed over on New Jersey [Mr. page 23 at the instance of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. Martine]. It appears on line 12, after the numerals "$1,000," where the committee propose to insert "assessed in his name and upon which he pays taxes."

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I ask that that be disagreed to. I think it very ill-timed for a democratic body to propose a property qualification, whether it be in Porto Rico or in the United States of America. I think it is contrary to the spirit and genius of our institutions, and I am astonished and shocked that the chairman of the committee should stand for any such proposition.

Mr. SHAFROTH. It does not relate to a property qualification. It is a part of the requirements for the eligibility of a member of the Senate of Porto Rico. I have no objection, however, to its being stricken out. Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Let the amendment of the committee be rejected. The amendment was rejected.

The Secretary. The next amendment passed over was on page 24, at the instance of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. Martinel. On page 24, line 8, the committee propose to strike out "taxable" and insert the words "and pay taxes upon," and, after "Porto Rico," in line 9, to insert "of the assessed value of not less than $500."

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I move that this be stricken

Mr. FALL. Is it a motion to strike out the committee amend-

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. That is my proposition, to disagree to the committee amendment.

Mr. FALL. All right; I have no objection. Mr. KENYON. I should like to inquire how it would read f the amendment were disagreed to. I think it would still leave the property qualification.

Mr. SHAFROTH, I think the Senator from New Jersey ought to have waited until individual amendments are in order. Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I am quite willing to comply with the judgment of the Senator. If the bill is not to be disposed of finally to-night, I am quite willing to let it go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Let the next amendment passed over be

The Secretary. On page 30, beginning with line 21, the committee amendment at that point reads:

The sessions of each house and of the committees of the whole shall open, unless when the business is such as ought to be kept secret, be open, unless when the business is such as ought to be kept secret, in which event a motion must be passed by a yea-and-nay vote authorizing the secret session.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I should like to strike out the language relating to secret sessions. On principle I am opposed to secret sessions. I have protested here against them, and very many others have protested. It seems to me that the time is inopportune to impose this restriction upon the Legislature of

Mr. SHAFROTH. I accept the suggestion of the Senator, but I think that all the paragraph ought to be stricken out, including the words "the sessions of each house and of the committees of the whole shall be open." I think that ought to be stricken out, so as to leave it without any direction whatever.

I shall have to object to that.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Very well; then I am willing to accept the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let it be stated so that it can be

The Secretary. From the committee amendment, beginning in line 21, strike out the words "unless when the business is such as ought to be kept secret, in which event a motion must be passed by a yea-and-nay vote authorizing the secret session."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment striking out this part of the committee amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHAFROTH. In connection with the same subject matter, in line 18, page 30, in describing what kind of a journal shall be kept there are the words "except such parts as require secrecy." That ought to be stricken out. I move in the committee amendment, in line 18, to strike out "except such parts as require secrecy."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The Secretary. The next amendment passed over is on page 36.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I move to strike out section 35, beginning on page 36, down to and including line 7, on page This refers to the literacy test, to which I am totally opposed.

Mr. SHAFROTH. That is not a committee amendment.
Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. It is a part of the bill.
Mr. SHAFROTH. It is a part of the bill and the committee amendments are now being considered. I shall have no objection to taking this up when I can suggest a certain modification, to which I think the Senator will agree. The VICE PRESIDENT. The next amendment passed over will be stated. What disposition was made of this section? Mr. FALL.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Section 35?

Mr. FALL. Yes.

Nothing yet. Mr. SHAFROTH. The Senator from New Jersey proposed to strike it out, but his motion is an individual amendment, and we have not yet gotten through with the amendment, and we have not yet gotten through with the amendments of the committee, and it was passed over. I have a committee amendment which I should like to propose to section 36. It is on page 37, to strike out lines 8 to 12, inclusive, and insert what I will send to the desk. The long committee amendment has not yet been disposed of, I understand.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Section 34 has been agreed to, according to the record.

The Secretary. Section 35, page 36, line 24, the committee proposes to strike out "who is not" and insert "unless he is," That was objected to by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MARTINE 1.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Inasmuch as the Senator from New-Jersey is proposing a substitute for the entire section I think probably the committee amendment can go over.

Mr. FLETCHER. Are there further committee amendments? Mr. SHAFROTH. There are.

The SECRETARY. On page 40, line 18, an amendment was passed over at the instance of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Broussard]. The committee propose, after the word "valuation," at the end of line 17, to insert "to be determined by the public-service commission."

Mr. SHAFROTH. There is an amendment offered by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Broussard] on page 40, at line

This comes before that,

The VICE PRESIDENT. This is before that. The amendment will be agreed to without objection.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Now, let the amendment presented by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Broussarp], on page 40, be stated. The Secretary. On page 40, line 24, after the word "valuation," at the end of section 39, insert the following:

That nothing in this act contained shall be so construed as to abrogate or in any manner impair or affect the provision contained in section 3 of the joint resolution approved May 1, 1900, with respect to the buying, selling, or holding of real estate. That the Governor of Porto Rico shall cause to have made and submitted to Congress at the session beginning the first Monday in December, 1917, a report of all the real estate used for the purposes of agriculture and held either directly or indirectly by corporations, partnerships, or individuals. That the right to legislate further upon this subject is reserved to Congress.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary. On page 48, line 14, beginning in line 12, section 51 reads:

The annual salaries of the following-named officials appointed by the President and so to be paid shall be: The governor, $10,000.

The committee propose to strike out "$10,000" and insert

$8,000." The Senator from Utah [Mr. Smoot] objected and the amendment went over at his suggestion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I am quite sure the Senator from Utah would like to be present when this provision is considered.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will let it go over, although I do not think-

Mr. GRONNA. I therefore suggest the absence of a quorum. Mr. SHAFROTH. The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. Fall] tells me that the Senator from Utah went out, and said he had no objection.

Mr. FALL. No; he said to me he was going over to his office; that he had some work to do. He knew the bill was up. He did not state any objection that he had to any part of it.

Mr. GRONNA. I suggest the absence of a quorum.
Mr. SHAFROTH. I will let it go over, if the Senator wishes.

Mr. SMOOT entered the Chamber.

Mr. GRONNA. This is a very important bill. There are very few Senators present. I think we ought to have a quorum when it is considered, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Let us get through some amendments to which there is no objection whatever.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Dakota suggests the absence of a quorum. The Chair has nothing to do but to order the Secretary to call the roll,

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The VICE PRESIDENT. Thirty-six Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the roll of absentees.

The Secretary called the names of absent Senators, and Mr. Broussard, Mr. Husting, Mr. Newlands, and Mr. Stone answered to their names when called.

Mr. Kirby, Mr. Lea of Tennessee, Mr. Ashurst Mr. Myers, Mr. Hughes, Mr. Hardwick, Mr. Harding, Mr. Simmons, Mr. Johnson of Maine, and Mr. Townsend entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I do not want to lose this quorum. I think it is important that we should have a very brief executive session, in order that some nominations which have come in may be referred to committees. I shall not ask any more than that; but I want to have an executive session for that purpose this afternoon.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I think we can in a short time lay aside the pending bill. There will be but one amendment, I think, which will be discussed; but I should like to proceed with the

Mr. FLETCHER. I want the Senator from Colorado to make as much progress as he can with the bill, but I do not want to lose the quorum.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I am trying to get on with the bill as rapidly as possible. What was the last amendment before the Senate, I will ask the Vice President?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the pend-

Mr. SHAFROTH. I ask that that amendment may go over for the time being. I desire to revert to section 36, which is the committee amendment to strike out lines 8 to 12, inclusive, and insert what is printed in small capitals.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That has been agreed to.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I understood that it went over. Did it

The VICE PRESIDENT. No; it has been agreed to.

Mr. SHAFROTH. If it has been agreed to, very well. Then in section 38 there is an amendment to strike out from line 5 to line 8, inclusive.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That also has been agreed to, according to the record.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Very well. Then I suggest that the Senator from New Jersey propose his amendment.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I move to I move to strike out, on page 36, section 35, down to and including line 7, on page 37. This provision refers to a property qualification and requirement of the payment of taxes. I feel that that should not be made a condition for enabling a citizen to vote.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will ask the Senator to accept the provision I am about to suggest. I am satisfied it is the same as the amendment the Senator is holding in his hands. I should like to have this provision inserted at the end:

Provided, That at all elections subsequent to the first election herein provided for no one shall be entitled or permitted to register or vote who is not at the time of registration or election a bona fide citizen of the United States.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. That will be perfectly satisfactory to me.

Mr. SHAFROTH. With that amendment I accept the amendment offered by the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. SMOOT. Do I understand that it is proposed to strike out section 35 and to insert other language in lieu thereof?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Insert a new amendment in lieu thereof.
The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.
The SECRETARY. On page 36, after line 18, it is proposed to strike out section 35, including the proposed committee amendments, and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

ments, and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

SEC. 35. That at the first election held pursuant to this act the qualified electors shall be those having the qualifications of voters under the present law; thereafter voters for all offices elected by the people shall have the qualifications prescribed by the Legislature of Porto Rico and be comprised within one of the following classes:

(a) Those who at the election of 1917 were legal voters and exercised the right of suffrage.

(b) Those who are able to read and write either Spanish or English.

(c) Those who are bona fide taxpayers in their own name in an amount of not less than $3 per annum: Provided, That at all elections subsequent to the first election herein provided for, no one shall be entitled or permitted to register or vote who is not at the time of registration or election a bona fide citizen of the United States.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President I desire to ask the chairman

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, I desire to ask the chairman of the committee a question. Do I understand that the amendment now suggested imposes a property qualification?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. No; the amendment now proposed strikes out that qualification.

Mr. SHAFROTH. It is in the alternative.
Mr. CHILTON. What does the Senator mean by its being in the alternative?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I mean that a person who voted at the last general election or who has the requisite educational qualifications or who has paid $3 in taxes will be permitted to vote.

o vote. That is the proposition.

Mr. SMOOT. Does that apply to all elections after the first election?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes, sir; it provides that at the first election the qualified electors shall be those having the qualifications of voters under the present law; and as to future elections the provision is as follows:

Thereafter voters for all offices elected by the people shall have the qualifications prescribed by the Legislature of Porto Rico and be comprised within one of the following classes:

(a) Those who at the election of 1917 were legal voters and exercised the right of suffrage.

That is a permanent provision. Mr. CHILTON. That is all right. Mr. SHAFROTH. Then follows:

(b) Those who are able to read and write either Spanish or English.
(c) Those who are bona fide taxpayers in their own name in an amount of not less than $3 per annum.

And then comes the proviso which has been added:

Provided, That at all elections subsequent to the first election herein provided for, no one shall be entitled or permitted to register or vote who is not at the time of registration or election a bona fide citizen of the United States.

Mr. CHILTON. Then it imposes a still further qualification upon those who can read and write or those who pay as much

Mr. SHAFROTH. It is in the alternative.

Mr. CHILTON. No.

Mr. SMOOT. It is cumulative. Mr. CHILTON. For instance, a man who pays taxes to the amount of $3 can vote if he is also a citizen of the United States.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes,

Mr. CHILTON. So that there is a property qualification in addition to the other qualification.

Mr. SHAFROTH. But a man can vote hereafter if he voted at the election in 1917 and is a citizen of the United States.

Mr. CHILTON. Oh, yes.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Or if he can read or write and is a citizen of the United States.

Mr. CHILTON. But if he was only 20 years old at the election of 1917 in 1918, when he becomes 21, if he does not pay $3 taxes, he can not vote.

Mr. SHAFROTH. He can not vote now unless he is 21 years

Mr. CHILTON. Certainly not.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator would not want anyone to vote who is not a citizen of the United States, would he?

Mr. CHILTON. Certainly not; but I do not want the additional qualification that he shall also be the owner of a certain amount of property. I would not vote for that kind of a clause

Mr. SHAFROTH. That is not a requirement except in the alternative.

Mr. CHILTON. As I understand, to entitle a man to vote he must be a citizen of the United States. That is a requirement for all of them whether they have paid $3 in taxes or whether they can read or write or whether they voted at the election of 1917. That certainly applies to all of them.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes.

Mr. CHILTON. Then he must have the further qualification either of having voted in 1917 or of being able to read or write Spanish or English or having paid $3 taxes.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes,
Mr. CHILTON. Then that is a property qualification.
Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. That is not as I understood it, asked that that provision be stricken out of section 35.
Mr. SHAFROTH. Section 35 has been stricken out, and this amendment has been inserted in lieu of it. It is the same amendment as that which was suggested by the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER].

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I do not want that feature in it. I would not stand for that under any conditions.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, there is confusion with reference to this amendment. The amendment on the Secretary's desk, which has been adopted, as I understand, is simply section 35 with a proviso as to citizenship in it.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. That is not my understanding and is not in accord with my desire.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I should like to have the Secretary read the amendment again, and I will ask the Senator from West Virginia to listen to it

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again read the tee amendments, it is proposed to insert the following:

SEC. 35. That at the first election held pursuant to this act the qualified electors shall be those having the qualifications of voters under the present law; thereafter voters for all offices elected by the people shall have the qualifications prescribed by the Legislature of Porto Rico and be comprised within one of the following classes:

(a) Those who at the election of 1917 were legal voters and exercised the right of suffrage.

(b) Those who are able to read and write either Spanish or English.

(c) Those who are bona fide taxpayers in their own name in an amount of not less than $3 per annum: Provided, That at all elections subsequent to the first election herein provided for, no one shall be entitled or permitted to register or vote who is not at the time of registration or election a bona fide citizen of the United States.

Mr. MAPCIUNE of Now Torsey. That is all right

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. That is all right.

Mr. CHILTON. Now, Mr. President, that is exactly what I understood it to be. There is no chance to be mistaken about what that language means. If a man has voted in 1917 he is entitled to vote, whether he can read or write or has property or not. If a man did not vote in 1917, by accident or mistake or negligence, or if he has become of age since, if for any reason he did not vote in 1917 and he presents himself, then he must either read or write Spanish or English or be a property holder to a certain extent. Of course, there is the general provision that everybody must be a citizen of the United States. Now, I respectfully submit that we are not prepared to say that we are going to fix a property qualification for a voter in Porto Rico, and we ought not to have a standard different from what we have in the United States.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, each State prescribes the standard for the voter, and for the Territories the Congress has to prescribe it. There are different standards in the different States. There are different qualifications in Vermont from the qualifications in Massachusetts. There are different qualifications in Connecticut from the qualifications in Rhode Island. Now, for the National Congress to prescribe a qualification for the voters in Porto Rico is no hardship. It is a duty that rests upon us.

Let us see what this standard is. First, as amended by the Senator from New Mexico, after the first election nobody shall vote who is not a citizen of the United States. Well, certainly we all approve that. We do not want men coming in to vote who are not naturalized.

Mr. CHILTON. Nobody objects to that. That is unanimous, Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Every one must be a citizen of the United States. In addition to that, he must have one of the three qualifications I shall name—not all of them. Either of the three will let him vote.

First, if he was on the list of voters at this first election. That we recognize because they were former voters of Porto He can register and vote, therefore, if he is a citizen of the United States and is now on their list of voters.

Second, if he is a citizen of the United States and can read or write in English or Spanish, he can vote. It does not require anything else.

The objection to the property qualification would be sound if you required the property qualification for all voters; but you do not. It is an additional permission to vote. You say that even though he is not on the original list, and even though he does not know how to read and write in Spanish or in English, if he pays $3 tax, still you will let him register and vote.

I would agree with the Senator from New Jersey if it were a fixed-property qualification to vote, but it is not. It is an additional permission. It says: "Even though you can not read and write, and even though you were not on the original registration list, if you have been industrious and have sought to acquire some property, if you own a little home or a little farm, still, though you can not read and write, and though you have never been heretofore on the registration list of Porto Rico, we give you the right to vote." There is not a particle of trouble in carrying it out.

We have in our State a provision that a man who can read and write can register. We have the further provision that if he pays taxes on $500 worth of property, even though he can not read and write, he can register. There is not a particle of trouble in enforcing it.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Well, that is possibly so; but while that may be true in the Senator's State, in our State, thank Heaven, there is no such condition, that a man shall own property.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. There is not any here.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Yes; there is here. Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. The payment of taxes is tantamount to owning property.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It is an additional permission. It is an additional privilege. You do not put it on everybody.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Well, why put it in at all?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Because the man who has accumulated something, who has his little farm, even though he does not know how to read and write, has a steadying influence that gives him some standing.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I question very much the wisdom of that.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It is not any large sum. It is the recognition of the small farmer or the small home owner, even though he does not know how to read and write.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Very well, then; but one man may be just as industrious as another and fortune may not smile on him, and he may not acquire the little farm; but I am not willing to ostracize him on that account,

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. You do not. If he can read and write he can register anyhow, or if he is on the present registration list he can register anyhow. If he is now a voter, whether he can read or whether he owns anything or pays a dollar of taxes or not, he can register. There are three privileges, either one of which, added to citizenship of the United States, gives the right to register and vote.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I want to ask, what is the use of putting in any of the three privileges to which the Senator refers? Why put them in?

Mr. SHAFROTH. It is for the very purpose explained by the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Well, I can not see the explanation. I am opposed to this property and literacy quali-

Mr. SHAFROTH. That is the very language of your own amendment.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. No.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I ask the Secretary to read the amendment offered by the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I did not offer the amendment. I simply read that in the bill, and the Senator said, "I consent to strike that out.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, allow me to call the attention of the Senators here to one or two provisions of this bill, and the power which you are giving to the Legislature of Porto Rico which is to be chosen by the electors whose qualifications are now being prescribed.

We have had up for consideration in the Senate various bills upon which debate has been had with reference to the rights of the people in the different States of the United States of America. Some of us have insisted on the right of local selfgovernment. Some of us have been insisting here recently that the people of the States should be left with their constitutional right to control their own property as they saw fit. That right is being denied us to-day by the arbitrary action of the bureaus of this Government without legislative sanction for such action.

We have pending here now what is known as the waterpower bill for the Western States. It is admitted in the report of the committee and by those contending that this bill should be enacted into law, that the people of those Western States own the water of the streams affected. It has been so decided by the Supreme Court, admitted by the departments, admitted in the report of the committee offering the bill, and admitted by the bill itself. Yet the people of these self-governing States, sovereign States in the American Union, are denied the right to control their own property, while at the same time you are giving to the Porto Ricans, who are not citizens of the United States as yet, who have no knowledge so far of self-government except what they may have gained within the last 16 or 17 years, the absolute right to legislate as they see fit with regard to the water powers and the minerals under the surface of the land, which you are denying to the people of my State. are giving to the people of Porto Rico the absolute sovereign right to legislate for the minerals under the land, for the waters which run through the land, for the power sites upon which hydraulic power can be developed, but you are denying it to the people of my State and the other sovereign States of this Union inhabited by citizens of the United States. You are giving to the people of Porto Rico more power in legislative matters than has ever been given to the people of any Territory which you have organized in the United States. have given to them more power than you gave to the State of Colorado when it was a Territory; more power, three to one, than the people of the Territory of Alaska have to-day; more power than Arizona, New Mexico, Idaho, the two Dakotas, Montana, Wyoming, California, or any of the other Territories which you have erected into States, ever had; and still Senators would have no limitation whatsoever upon the qualifications of voters!

Why, under this bill as it stood, the Porto Ricans could continue forever remaining Porto Ricans, refusing to become citizens of the United States, and still you are passing into their hands all the property which the United States Government acquired from Spain by conquest, by treaty, and by the payment of money! That is what this bill is doing for these people.

Sir, no man who has a seat in this Chamber, I think, feels more kindly toward the people of Spanish descent than I feel. I do not believe there is a man here who knows them better than I know them. I do not believe there is a man here who understands their limitations better than I understand them. I do not believe there is a Senator here who will go to greater lengths to help those people, to raise them in the scale of civilization, to teach them self-government, to hold up their hands, to give them education, to make them citizens of the United States. But I will tell you, sir, they must be led; they must be taught; and simply because, as it happens, they have labor organizations existing in the island of Porto Rico, that is no reason why any man belonging to such a labor organization should be allowed the disposition of the property of the people of the United States without some qualification upon it.

Every Senator here knows exactly the agitation that has been carried on here. I have always stood in my Territory of New Mexico during the last 30 odd years, in my experience in the local legislatures there, and in so far as it was possible for me to do so in the constitutional convention, in favor of securing the adoption of a proper constitution for those people when they came into the Union; and in so far as it has been in my power I have stood here upon the floor of the Senate as the friend and the defender of those people; and I stand here in exactly that attitude toward the people of Porto Rico. But, Mr. President, you are bringing them now into practical statehood; you are adopting here the constitution of the State of Colorado, a sovereign State of this Union, for the people of Porto Rico; and, as I said, you are giving them more power than you have ever extended to the people of any Territory, although you have erected those Territories into sovereign States, one of which I represent here now. My people in New Mexico never had extended to them the helping hand of the Government of the United States in educating 90,000 Spanish-Americans who came in here knowing nothing of our Constitution, or of our laws, or of our citizenship, or of what true democracy means. Not one dollar did the Congress of the United States ever give to the people of New Mexico or to the native people of Arizona. have already spent hundreds of thousands, millions in fact, to educate the people of Porto Rico.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Then they ought to be safe without any further educational or literacy test.

Mr. FALL. Of course, they ought to be safe. Then, although they have been here 17 years, and you have spent hundreds of thousands of dollars for assisting them, you object to a requirement that they shall be able to read or write.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I will not vote for a property qualification or a literacy qualification. I am willing to accord them all the education that they are capable of receiving and willing that I should be taxed, in common with the rest of the citizens of the United States, for that purpose; but I will not

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, the trouble with this great United States to-day is the fact that we have among our numbers alien citizenship, not true American citizens. You say we are a melting pot for all the nations of the earth. Yes, sir; and we have had an overdose of it. We have not been able to digest it.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Well, I have not seen any evidences of the evil of the melting pot. God knows, when I look out in New Mexico and over the arid plains of the West I think if a little of the dripping could have spread its way over there it would have been a blessing for every mortal within the borders of those States.

Mr. FALL. The amendment offered or accepted by the committee works no hardship whatsoever upon the people of Porto Rico. The Senator from Georgia explained the qualifications necessary with perfect plainness and frankness. All those who are now recognized as voters remain voters, provided the Porto Rican Legislature says so, and provided they are citizens of the United States. The only amendment the Senator from New Mexico has insisted upon and that he will continue to insist upon is that hereafter no man shall be allowed to vote in Porto Rico unless he is a citizen of the United States. That is the amendment which I have insisted upon. The Senator and other Senators here have provided a classification, and yet they are leaving it in the power of the Porto Rican Legislature, for which they have prescribed a property qualification, to place other restrictions upon the voter than those which are mentioned in this amendment.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I am not insisting upon any other restrictions.

Mr. FALL. You are doing it if you adopt this bill.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I do not want to adopt that Mr. FALL. You are giving to the Legislature of Porto Rico hereafter the power to fix the qualifications of voters, provided that they shall select them from certain classes and that they shall be citizens of the United States, but you leave it to them to increase the property qualification or to provide that they shall read, write, and speak the English language if the legislature so chooses; and you have provided property qualifications for every member of that legislature.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I am sure the Senator will be just enough not to charge me with insisting upon any of those conditions. I think that is the cause of the whole trouble. I want those all stricken out.

Mr. FALL. The Senator made his motion, and it has been adopted by the Senate.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Oh, no; I made no such motion at all.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President-

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. It was done without any reference to me.

Mr. FALL. I do not care to have any controversy with the Senator. Of course, there is none between him and me person-

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I do not want any, either. Mr. FALL. But the object of my remarks is not to have any controversy with the Senator.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Oh, of course there is not any personal controversy.

Mr. FALL. These are facts I am referring to, Mr. President, As the Senator from Georgia has said, the qualifications after the first election shall be such as the Legislature of Porto Rico may fix out of these three classes with one congressional restriction. Those three classes are: First, those who are entitled to vote now; second, the property qualification; third, an educational qualification, and then such other qualifications as the Legislature of Porto Rico may see fit to fix, provided always that they shall be citizens of the United States. I do not care what qualifications you fix. I do not care whether you strike out the property qualification or not. I do not care whether you strike out the educational qualification or not. I say if you do that you do more than you have been doing for your own people. But to me it matters not. The Congress of the United States a few years ago adopted the suggestion of one of the Senators here by which they enlarged the time within which these people should declare their intention to become citizens of the United States or to become noncitizens and remain citizens of Porto Rico. You enlarged the time, and yet 17 years have passed since the acquisition of Porto Rico. In every American possession or Territory inhabited by an alien people you have possession of Territory innabled by an alien people you have provided that within 12 months' time from the date of the acquisition or the date of signing the treaty the people coming in with the Territory shall declare their election. You have given these people 17 years, and now you are giving them a year's time instead of six months. As a matter of fact, I say to you frankly a Porto Rican should not be allowed to vote to elect a legislature with these great powers vested in it who is not a citizen of the United States, and you know it.

I objected, but I finally consented to anything provided we could get the citizenship qualification absolutely on the bill. I have objected to anyone, and I object now to any living human being in Porto Rico, casting his vote until he registers his declared intention to become a citizen of the United States. or files his declaration that he will not so become, in which event he should not vote.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I will state the situation with respect to this amendment. There was a provision in the bill as follows:

SEC. 35. That the qualified electors of Porto Rico, for any election whatsoever, shall consist of those citizens that will be hereafter registered in accordance with the terms of this act and of the laws of Porto Rico hereafter enacted. That no person shall be allowed to register as a voter or to vote in Porto Rico unless he is a citizen of the United States, over 21 years of age, and is able to read and write, or unless having the said qualification of citizenship and age he is a bona fide taxpayer in his own name in an amount of not less than $3 per annum.

That was a provision which permitted only those persons to vote who were able to read or write or those who possessed the property qualification. Porto Rican people appeared before the committee and nearly every one insisted that those who had already the right to vote in Porto Rico previous to the acquisition and up to the present time should be permitted to vote. We had a disagreement in the committee, and the result was we made a compromise that all should be permitted to vote for 10 years, so as to give them time to qualify under the educational qualification. The various political parties sent delegates to Congress to represent what they want still further, and they have insisted upon this amendment, which gives the right to all those persons who are voters now and then to all who can read and write and also to those who pay a property tax. So we have taken in all the classes and made it exactly as the people of Porto Rico want it. It seems to me there ought not to be any objection to this amendment since we have put in the qualification that no person shall vote unless he is a citizen of the United States, and that proviso was suggested by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. Fall].

Mr. FALL. That applies simply to the subsequent elections, not to the first election.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes, sir. Mr. FALL. It was merely a compromise on my part, because I claim that no man should be allowed to vote anywhere who is not a citizen of the United States.

Mr. SHAFROTH. That being the case, it seems to me plain that we have covered all classes. Under those circumstances an amendment was introduced by the Senator from Washington [Mr. Poindexter], and that qualification, I understood, was satisfactory

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Let me ask the Senator whether any Porto Rican, to become a citizen, swears allegiance to the United States?

Mr. SHAFROTH. No; he does not. This act makes what is called collective citizenship; that is, unless a person living in Porto Rico declines to become a citizen he becomes a citizen by virtue of the act. We have denied him the right of citizenship heretofore, and he has been clamoring for it. . He says, "I have got to belong to your country, and I want to be a citizen of it."

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. No man could object to a man becoming a voter and a citizen of the United States. Every alien who lands on our shores has that right. Why impose the other qualification?

Mr. SHAFROTH. It is not an additional qualification.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Then, what good does it do? I can not see wherein it will do any good. I can not understand the explanation of the Senator. It may be that I am stupid, but the explanation was not lucid enough to make me understand it.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Let me read this to the Senator and see whether every person will not consent to it, because, as you know, they have sent their representatives here:

This is the amendment which I understood the Senator from

New Jersey offered-

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I want to strike out all that section. The Senator came to me afterwards and made a suggestion regarding their becoming citizens of the United States, and I said that was perfectly proper.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Here is the amendment which was moved by the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] and which was the same as that of the Senator from New Jersey:

SEC. 35. That at the first election held pursuant to this act-

That is going to be July 16, 1917-the qualified electors shall be those having the qualifications of voters under the present law—

Everybody concedes that that is right at the first electionthereafter voters for all offices elected by the people shall have the qualifications prescribed by the Legislature of Porto Rico and be comprised within one of the following classes.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Let us stop right there. Why should we not strike out, after "thereafter," all those qualifications-a, b, and c?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Because we want, in the first place, an educational qualification.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. That is just what I do not want.

Mr. SHAFROTH. This does not eliminate anybody at the first election in July, 1917.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Lea of Tennessee in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The Senator from New Jersey has two other amendments here which we had better dispose of.

Mr. SMOOT. I suggest that if there are amendments which require a vote they had better go over. An executive session, I understand, is desired.

Mr. SHAFROTH. On page 23, section 26—— Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Beginning at the word "and" in line 10.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes; at line 10. Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Page 23, "and who does not own in his individual right taxable property in Porto Rico of the value of not less than $1,000 assessed in his name and upon which he pays taxes."

I want to have that stricken out.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. On page 24 I move to strike out from line 7, beginning with the word "and":

And who does not own in his individual right and pay taxes upon property, real or personal, situated in Porto Rico, of the assessed value of not less than $500.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I accept that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary. On page 23, line 10, after the word "election," strike out the following words:

And who does not own in his individual right taxable property in Porto Rico to the value of not less than $1,000, assessed in his name and upon which he pays taxes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This amendment has been agreed to.

The Secretary. On page 24, line 7, after the word "language" and the comma, strike out the words:

And who does not own in his individual right and pay taxes upon property, real or personal, situated in Porto Rico, of the assessed value of not less than $500.

The amendment was agreed to.
Mr. SHAFROTH. There is one other matter—
Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I wish to have it understood, as a member of the committee, when the chairman is accepting amendments striking out these property qualifications he is not representing my sentiment.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Well, I have to get the bill through. Mr. FALL. I understand you want to get it through, but you are not putting it in such a shape with my consent.

Mr. SHAFROTH. On page 6 there was an amendment passed over concerning subdivisions. I should like to have a vote

The Secretary. On page 6, line 10, the committee propose to insert the words "subdivision or."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Just a moment. I think that amendment was disagreed to and the words "subdivision or" stricken from the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary states that the amendment was passed over. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I understand the Senator from Florida [Mr. Fletcher] has an amendment to propose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is one committee amendment left, and the Secretary will state it.

Mr. SHAFROTH. What is that amendment? The PRESIDING OFFICER. On page 48, relating to the salary of the Governor of Porto Rico.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Let it be read.

The Secretary. On page 48, line 14, after the word "governor," strike out "$10,000" and insert "$8,000."

Mr. SMOOT. I want to have a yea-and-nay vote on that amendment, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Then let the Senator from Florida propose his amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is temporarily passed over. Mr. FLETCHER. I move, after the word "repealed," at the end of the bill, page 52, line 7. to strike out the period and insert a semicolon and the words:

The principal agent to collect the duties and taxes authorized to be levied, collected, and paid in Porto Rico by the provisions of the act of April 12, 1900, shall be known as the collector of customs for Porto Rico, and shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

I will state that the provision under the act of 1900 is that the Secretary of the Treasury shall name such agents as may be required for the collection of duties in Porto Rico. It is the only instance in the jurisdiction of the United States that I know where the collector of customs is not appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. I think the district in Porto Rico ought to have, instead of agents, a collector of customs, and the principal agent should be called collector of customs, and should be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate, just like collectors of customs all over the country.

Mr. FALL. Does the Senator's amendment provide for doing away with the present agent?

Mr. FLETCHER. No; it simply

Mr. FALL. Then you would have the present agent continued with his salary and have a collector of customs with his salary

Mr. FLETCHER. No; he is designated as agent in the act of 1900, and he will be designated as collector of customs and appointed by the President.

Mr. FALL. I have no objection to helping the Senator to what I understand he wants, but I do not want to see two offices left there if one would do.

Mr. FLETCHER. No; that could not be the case. principal agent would become collector of customs under this amendment.

Does the Senator agree that it will not be necessary to divide Porto Rico into two districts in a month and have two collectors?

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not see any necessity in the world for that. It is all one district, and it ought to remain one district. The principal agent, who is at present the collector of customs down there, is appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury, and it is the only instance in the country where that is done.

Mr. FALL. If the Senator means to abolish this agency, I have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. FLETCHER. That is what it does, and it makes the agent the collector of customs.

Mr. SMOOT. There is another question to be considered.

Does the Senafor know what the agent is being paid at the present time?

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not know; but I think $5,000.

Mr. SMOOT. No matter what the salary is, if it is less than that provided for now for collector of customs, then, of course, the increase will take place.

Mr. FLETCHER. It is not less, I am sure; it may be more. Mr. SMOOT. I think it is greater.
Mr. FLETCHER. I think it is greater. I was going to propose an amendment in another part of the bill fixing the salary at $5,000.

Mr. FALL. Why $5,000? Mr. FLETCHER. I think that is what the agent gets now, and I think that is about the usual salary for a collector of customs

Mr. FALL. The collector of customs, for instance, at the El Paso port, having in charge all New Mexico, a part of Arizona, and west Texas, the greatest port of entry, certainly, on the border between this country and Mexico, receives $4,000.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the bill is not going to pass to-night, and I ask the Senator from Florida to allow the amendment to go over until Monday and offer it when the bill comes up again. We can then find out exactly what the agent is being paid and provide for the same salary.

Mr. FLETCHER. Very well. I have no objection to that. I do not believe in increasing salaries. I think it is $5,000.

Mr. VARDAMAN. What was the disposition made of the question of the governor's salary?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That was not acted upon.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The Senator from Utah insists that there shall be a quorum when that is acted upon and we can not dispose of it to-night.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Unless the chairman of the committee will accept an amendment to fix it at $5,000.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do not feel that that ought to be done, America has occupied the islands. It was fixed at $10,000 in the bill as it came from the House. The Senate committee cut it down to $8,000 and it seems to me that that is a fair amount.

Mr. SMOOT. All I have to say is that the governor of Hawaii receives $7,000, the governor of Alaska receives $7,000, and I do not see why the governor of Porto Rico should receive

Mr. SHAFROTH. In the first place there are 1,250,000 people in Porto Rico and only two hundred and some odd thousand in

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator knows it costs more to live in Honolulu than it costs to live in Porto Rico.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do not know about that, but I know-Mr. SMOOT. Not only that, but in Porto Rico the governor is furnished with a home. Neither in Honolulu nor in Alaska is the governor furnished with a home. With the perquisites that follow the governorship, I think, in Porto Rico, I do not see why he should receive a higher salary than the governors of Hawaii and Alaska.

Mr. SHAFROTH. It is because his salary had been fixed.

He accepted the office on that basis.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the Senate determine the question. Mr. SHAFROTH. I understand the Senator from Florida is going to move an executive session.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think we should have an executive session. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. CHILTON. On that motion I shall insist on the yeas and mays. I ask for the yeas and mays.

The ayes and nays were not ordered.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Florida that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened and (at 5 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, February 12, 1917, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, February 10, 1917.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Inspire us, our Heavenly Father, with renewed faith and confidence in the overruling of Thy providence for the eternal good of man; that we may follow the dictates of conscience in all the affairs of life as individuals and as a nation, with malice toward none and charity for all; but with firmness in upholding our rights and the rights of all mankind; for Thine is the kingdom and the power and the glory, forever. Amen.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. SCHALL, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the high cost of living.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. objection? [After a pause,] The Chair hears none. Mr. NEELY. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?
Mr. NEELY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Record a copy of a short resolution adopted by the House of Delegates of West Virginia indorsing the course of this Government in severing diplomatic relations with the Imperial Government of Germany.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia? [After a pause.] The Chair

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes. Is there objection?

[After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, about a week ago I brought before the House the question of a certain resolution which I had introduced relative to getting some information from the Department of Labor concerning Ellis Island, and I announced that I purposed to get the resolution reported or have a roll call. I desire to say to the House that it will not be necessary to have a roll call, but that the resolution will not be reported. The chairman of the Committee on Immigration arranged a compromise by which the department sent to that committee the documents for my inspection upon my agreement not to give to the newspapers any information contained in the documents relative to the investigation. I agreed, with the reservation that I might and would give information to the House Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

The information was sent, I looked it over, I gave the information to the House Committee on Immigration, and, in my judgment, the House Committee on Immigration and Naturalization ought to go further and get the remaining information, which, I think, is still in New York, and ought to take some action on the astounding conditions which the record discloses.

During the recent campaign the Commissioner of Immigration at Ellis Island challenged me to a joint debate. It was had and it was interesting. During it he made two remarks which challenged my attention. One was that one of the accused watchmen at Ellis Island had been vouched for as to his moral character by myself. I thought that was probably so, as the commissioner stated it, because I have vouched for the moral character of a good many men in the Government service. But I find from an inspection of the records that the commissioner dealt with a half truth, and that the situation was this: In 1913, when I was not a Member of Congress, and when, of course, the administration of the Government was Democratic, a colleague of mine, now a Member of the House, for some reason requested me to recommend, on his authority, a certain watchman at Ellis Island. I wrote to some one-I do not remember who, the record does not disclose-stating that I had been informed by a gentleman in whom I had every confidence that the man referred to was a man of good moral character. I have consulted with the colleague who asked me to make the request at that time, and he has suggested I give his name to the House. I do so with the statement that I have known him for 18 years and have never known him to make a misstatement of facts. The colleague who asked me to make the request was my very good friend, the Hon. DANIEL J. RIORDAN. Therefore I had the pleasure of recommending to a Democratic official a Democrat at the request of a stanch Democratic Congressman. If Commissioner Howe thinks I made a mistake about it, he is wel-

And the man was appointed?

Mr. BENNET. It was a transfer, and I believe the transfer.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman has more influence outside of Congress than the Republican and Democratic Members have had inside Congress.

Mr. BENNET. I admit that.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman stated this was in 1913, when he was not a Member of Congress. Was it before or after

Mr. BENNET. It was along in August, as I recollect, 1913, when the administration was Democratic.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman, although not a Member of Congress, was potential in aiding a Democratic Member of Congress in having this man appointed.

Mr. BENNET. I was, and I think that was commendable. I know there were certain reasons why possibly my Democratic colleague did not apply to my present interlocutor for any assistance in getting an appointment under a Democratic administration.

Mr. FITZGERALD. He wanted results.

Mr. BENNET. He wanted results and knew-

Mr. FITZGERALD. He knew he could not get it through me. Mr. BENNET. He knew possibly he would meet with difficulty in getting it through my colleague, the gentleman from New York.

There is one other statement the commissioner at Ellis Island made. It was that he had urged the department to show me these records. I found, not much to my surprise, that he had written a letter to the department urging the department not to let me see the records. That is in line with the general conduct of the Commissioner of Immigration at Ellis Island in the recent past. That is all on this subject, and I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD in connection with some criticisms I made of Mr. Donald, of the Shipping Board, by printing a letter from the Panama Commission calling attention to what are claimed to be some errors in my statement.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The letter is as follows:

THE PANAMA CANAL, Washington, D. C., January 12, 1917.

Hon. William S. Bennet,
House of Representatives United States, Washington, D. C.

Hon. WILLIAM S. BENNET,

House of Representatives United States, Washington, D. C.

Sir: My attention has been called to the statements you made on the floor of the House of Representatives on January 4 last, as reported on page 966 of the Congressional Record, in reference to complaints you made in 1909 relative to certain advertisements issued by the then Isthmian Canal Commission for anticorrosive and antifouling paints equal to Rahtjen's or Holzapfel's. The following is a quotation from your remarks:

"At about the same time my attention was called to some rather peculiar proceedings in connection with the ships of the Panama Line at Panama. On the recommendation of the Panama Commission the War Department had issued an advertisement for antifouling composition paint there, and they had asked for bids on four times as much paint as they could use in any one year.

"I laid all the facts before Mr. Jacob M. Dickinson, then Secretary of War, who made an investigation and set the whole procedure aside because he did not like the smell of it. Curiously enough thereafter the Panama Commission found out it could make composition paint for the bottom of their ships, and they ceased advertising. I went down to the office of the commission while the thing was on, and the Army officer in charge said 'Mr. Bennet, you act as though you thought our purchasing department was crooked. I said, 'That is what I do think,' and subsequently Members of this House may recall that members of the purchasing department of the Panama Canal Commission were indicted for graft."

The facts connected with the purchase of these paints were published in a hearing held before the House Committee on Appropriations in November, 1909, in connection with estimates for the construction of the Isthmian Canal for the fiscal year 1911, and I inclose herewith a copy of these hearings and would invite your attention to pages 99 to 115, inclusive, covering this subject, from which it will be seen, as you will no doubt remember, that the Secretary of War in a letter to you dated November 23, 1909, replied to the statements contained in your letter of August 25, 1909. The Secretary of War's letter, together with the other documents published, shows, I think you must admit, that the insinuations that there was anything "crooked" connected with these transactions is not warranted.

Furthermore, in connection with your remark that members of the purchasing department of the Panama Canal Commission were indicted for graft, I would state that there is absolutely no foundation for this statement. No one connected with the purchasing department of the canal has ever been indicted, nor have any charges ever been brought against anyone connected with this department. You may perhaps have had in mind the case of Mr. John Burke, who was formerly manager of commissaries on the Isthmus, against whom charges were brought in connection with accepting bribes, but Mr. Burke never had any connection with accepting bribes, but Mr. Burke never had any connection with the purchasing department of the Panama Canal, and it is hoped that your sense of fairness and justice will prompt you to make some explanation and correction of the statements you recently made on the floor of the House as above quoted.

Very respectfully,

EARL I. BROWN,

Major, Corps of Engineers, United States Army,

EARL I. BROWN,
Major, Corps of Engineers, United States Army,
General Purchasing Officer.

P. S.—It may be added for your information that the matter appraing on pages 99 to 115 of the hearings before the House Committee on Appropriations, above referred to, was republished in House Document No. 1967, Sixty-first Congress, third session.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 20632, a bill making appropriations for the haval service ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes.

Mr. MANN. Pending that motion, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. MANN. It is stated that quite a number of the Members of the House are absent this afternoon on account of a trip to a Lincoln memorial service at Cumberland Gap. Monday is a holiday, though not in the House, it being Lincoln's birthday. Would it be practicable to have an agreement that the vote on the final passage of the naval bill be postponed until Tuesday, merely to accommodate Members of the House?

Mr. KITCHIN. What would we do on Monday?

Mr. MANN. Oh, well, we could go ahead with other business.
Mr. KITCHIN. With the pension bill?
Mr. FITZGERALD. With the pension bill and with general debate on the military bill.

Mr. MANN. Just vote on the final passage of this bill on Tuesday.

Mr. KITCHIN. With the understanding that on Monday after we get through with the business on the Speaker's table we could take up the pension bill and the military bill. That would be agreeable to us.

Mr. TALBOTT. Monday will not be District day, then?
Mr. KITCHIN. No; it would not, because a motion to go into the Committee of the Whole House to consider the pension appropriation bill or the military bill will prevail over it, anyway

Mr. PADGETT. There will be no trouble about that.
The SPEAKER. Does anybody make any request?
Mr. MANN. Suppose we settle it now, so that Members will

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that after the reading of the bill in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union-

Mr. MANN. The proposition is that the vote on the final passage of the bill be postponed until Tuesday.

Mr. PADGETT. After the reading of the Journal.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Padgett] asks unanimous consent that the vote on the final passage of the naval bill be postponed until after the reading of the Journal on next Tuesday. Is there objection? pause.] The Chair hears none.

The gentleman from Tennessee moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the naval appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 20632) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes, with Mr. Page of North Carolina in the chair.

I Mr. HUDDLESTON. I have heard it charged here on the floor that certain eminent officers—one in particular—had perfected patents relating to ordnance—not to go more into detail—and was receiving royalties from them, and that the inventions were being used by foreign countries, and that in the event of

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read. The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Military stores, Marine Corps: Pay of chief armorer, at $4 per diem; 1 mechanic, at $3 per diem; 2 mechanics, at $2.50 each per diem; 1 chief electrician, at $4 per diem and 1 assistant electrician, at $3.50 per diem; per diem of enlisted men employed on constant labor for periods of not less than 10 days; purchase of military equipments, such as rifles, revolvers, cartridge boxes, bayonet scabbards, haversacks, blanket bags, canteens, rifle slings, swords, drums, trumpets, flags, waistbelts, waist plates, cartridge belts, spare parts for repairing rifles, machetes; purchase and repair of tents, field cots, field ovens, and stoves for tents; purchase and repair of instruments for bands; purchase of music and musical accessories; purchase and marking of prizes for excellence in gunnery and rifle practice; good-conduct badges; medals awarded to officers and enlisted men by the Government for conspicuous, gallant, and special service; incidental expenses of schools of application; construction, equipment, and maintenance of school, library, and amusement rooms and gymnasiums for enlisted men, and the purchase and repair of all articles of field sports for enlisted men; purchase and repair of signal equipment and stores; establishment and maintenance of targets and ranges, renting ranges, construction of buildings for temporary shelter and preservation of stores, and entrance fees in competitions; procuring, preserving, and handling ammunition and other necessary military supplies; in all, $852,000.

Mr. HICKS. I move to strike out the last word Mr. Chair.

Mr. HICKS. I move to strike out the last word, Mr. Chairman, and I do so for the purpose of making a statement. Yes-terday when the committee had under consideration this bill I offered an amendment in these words:

That no part of any appropriation herein shall be used to pay any officer on the active list of the Navy or Marine Corps who shall engage in any private business, either actively or as a consulting expert, or permit any person, firm, or corporation or association to use his name in the conduct of its business.

I had intended, Mr. Chairman, to reoffer that amendment this morning, but realizing that this is a matter that will probably require a good deal of investigation, and not desiring to injure anyone in the service, I merely want to make the statement now that I will not offer it later on.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, yesterday during the consideration of this bill the gentleman from New York [Mr. Hicks] offered his amendment, which, it seems to me, should be adopted. Since then, however, I have had communication with some of the officials of the department, and I believe by adopting that amendment at this time it might perhaps do an injustice to some of the officials in the department. One of the gentlemen toward whom I thought this amendment was directed I have talked with and have his statement. I have discovered in an ex parte way that the gentleman is in no wise interested in any patent. He has worked for the Government. He has prepared plans for the department of machinery for the Government and handed them out to anyone who might see fit to use them.

Now, Mr. Chairman, with the permission of the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, I would like to make the gentleman from New York [Mr. Hicks] a promise that if I should live to serve on this committee in the next Congress I shall ask the committee to make an investigation of all the facts involved in the gentleman's amendment, and ask him to attend at the time the hearing is had, to the end that we may report to Congress any measure that will put an end to the condition the gentleman thinks exists.

Mr. PADGETT. And in that I will gladly cooperate.

Mr. HICKS. Allow me to thank the gentleman and to express the hope that he will not only live during this session of Congress but during many others. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Transportation and recruiting, Marine Corps: For transportation of troops and of applicants for enlistment between recruiting stations and recruit depots or posts, including ferriage and transfers en route, or cash in lieu thereof; tollet kits for issue to recruits upon their first enlistment and the expense of the recruiting service, $500,000: Provided, That authority is hereby granted to employ the services of advertising agencies in advertising for recruits under such terms and conditions as are most advantageous to the Government.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Butler] a question. Referring to the subject that the gentleman discussed a moment ago, I would like to ask the gentleman's opinion whether he does not think that our Army and Navy officers should be required to assign to the Government the patents that they may perfect while they are in active service?

Mr. PADGETT. That is the law, as I understand it, now; and in this matter referred to there was no patent whatever. The gentleman was giving out the information as they wanted it and putting it in the form of books.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I have heard it charged here on the floor that certain eminent officers—one in particular—had perfected patents relating to ordnance—not to go more into detail—and was receiving royalties from them, and that the inventions war we would be confronted by armies using inventions perfected by officers of the American armies while in active service as the result of experiments conducted at Government works, where the patents were perfected. I want some information from gentlemen who are acquainted with the subject on that

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I think the chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee answers the gentleman's question, I will add that I do not believe any officer on the active list in the military service should have the permission given him to turn over to either private concerns of this country for profit, or any other country, any invention which he makes during the time he is in the service, provided the invention might be employed in the military service for the benefit of our Government.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Does the gentleman know whether any officers are now receiving royalties on patents?

Mr. BUTLER. I do not. It is for the purpose of making an examination that I requested the gentleman from New York [Mr. Hicks] to withhold his proposed amendment until the opportunity might be given to the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House to look into the subject. I do not know anyone now; I thought I did yesterday, but I feel quite well satisfied this morning that I was mistaken in my impression.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. It is a fact, however, that officers who are on the retired list and receiving three-fourths pay, or substantially that, are in the employment of private concerns and drawing handsome salaries?

Mr. PADGETT. We have a law on that, the law of 1896, to the effect that-

Hereafter no payment shall be made from an appropriation made by Congress to any officer in the Navy or in the Marine Corps, on the active or retired list, while such officer is employed, after June 30, 1897, by any person or company furnishing naval supplies or war mate-rial to the Government, and such employment is hereby made unlawful after said date.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. That is not applicable to other lines of employment?

Mr. PADGETT.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. So that there is no reason why a retired officer of the Army or Navy may not draw a salary of $5,000 or $10,000 a year from employment in positions in private

Mr. PADGETT. No; only as limited in this bill, affecting the Government, and then it does not apply to the Army, but only to the Navy and the Marine Corps.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Is it a fact that officers do go on the retired list and then go into other business and make handsome

Mr. PADGETT. They do, but it does not interfere with Gov-

Mr. PADGETT. No; a man might be a one-legged man, and that would incapacitate him for service in the Army.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Have we not some places in the Army where a one-legged man could render valuable service?

Mr. PADGETT. No; I do not think so.

Mr. BUTLER. As the case stands now, the matter has been deferred, and we will make an investigation into the matter, and then we can talk with greater intelligence about it when we take it up again.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Forage, Marine Corps: For forage in kind and stabling for public animals of the Quartermaster's Department and the authorized number of officer's horses, $68,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves to strike out the last word.

I notice in the preceding item the appropriation Mr. MANN. for forage and stabling of animals in the Quartermaster's Department is considerably reduced. I had supposed that there was no reduction in the cost of animal feed. Why is this reduction in the amount of the appropriation? Is it based upon the expectation that peace will be declared and the price of corn and hay will be considerably decreased?

Mr. PADGETT. No, sir. Public animals are being replaced from time to time, when necessary and practicable, by motor trucks, and the sum asked for is based upon the estimated number of animals that will be in use by the corps when this appropriation becomes available. They are using motor trucks in transportation instead of horses.

Mr. MANN. Instead of buying corn they will buy gasoline? Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir. The CHAIRMAN. The pr

The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Contingent, Marine Corps: For freight, expressage, tolls, cartage, advertising, washing of bed sacks, mattress covers, pillowcases, towels, and sheets, funeral expenses of officers and enlisted men and retired enlisted men of the Marine Corps, including the transportation of bodies and their arms and wearing apparel from the place of demise to the homes of the deceased in the United States; stationery and other paper, printing and binding; telegraphing, rent of telephones; purchase, repair, and exchange of typewriters; apprehension of stragglers and deserters; per diem of enlisted men employed on constant labor for periods of not less than 10 days; employment of civilian labor; purchase, repair, and installation and maintenance of gas, electric, sewer, and water pipes and fixtures; office and barracks furniture, camp and garrison equipage and implements; mess utensils for enlisted men; packing boxes, wrapping paper, olicloth, crash, rope, twine, quarantine fees, camphor and carbolized paper, carpenters' tools, tools for police purposes, safes, purchase, hire, repair, and maintenance of such harness, wagons, motor wagons, armored automobiles, carts, drays, motor-propelied and horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles, to be used only for official purposes, and other vehicles as are required for the transportation of troops and supplies and for official military and garrison purposes; purchase of public horses and mules; services of veterinary surgeons, and medicines for public animals, and the authorized number of officers' horses; purchase of mounts and horse equipment for all officers below the grade of major required to be mounted; shoeing for public animals and the authorized number of officers' horses; purchase of mounts and horse equipment for all officers below the grade of major required to be mounted; shoeing for public animals and the authorized number of officers' horses; purchase and repair of hose, fire extinguishers, hand grenades, carts, wheelbarrows

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois reserves a point of order.

Mr. MANN. Especially in connection with the proviso. How many enlisted men are detailed as clerks and messengers in the office of the commandant or other staff officers? Does the gentleman happen to know?

Mr. PADGETT. I understand, or my impression is, somewhere in the neighborhood of 75, all told.

Mr. MANN. These men when they are detailed have their pay increased so as to correspond with the ordinary cleri-

Mr. PADGETT. I believe they get about $1.20 a day extra.

That is my recollection.

Mr. MANN. Are they noncommissioned officers?

Mr. PADGETT. They are enlisted men. They may be noncommissioned officers.

Mr. MANN. Of course, the pay of an enlisted man, as such, is not very high, and increasing it $1.20 a day would not be making it very high pay?

Mr. PADGETT. No, sir.

Mr. MANN. I suppose the purpose of this is to place them on a level with the ordinary clerks in Washington?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; and if they were detailed on duty at the barracks and on furlough they would not lose their pay. they were not detailed and were furloughed for more than 24 hours, they would lose their pay.

Mr. MANN. Are the men at the barracks furloughed for 30 days on pay?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; I believe they may get pay.
Mr. MANN. Now, I want to ask the gentleman as to the grammar of the proposition. I suppose this item was prepared by some clerk in the Quartermaster's office. The word "none" is supposed to mean no one, and is not properly used in the plural. I will withdraw the point of order and offer an amendment to strike out the word "none" and insert in lieu thereof the words "no part." The CHAIRMAN.

The gentleman from Illinois withdraws the point of order and offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 57, in line 13, strike out the word "none" and insert the words "no part."

Mr. PADGETT. I think that is proper and a good amend-

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to. The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the authorized expenses of the Marine Corps Reserve, $25,000. Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I ask the indulgence of the committee and the attention of the chairman to a statement I wish to make in advance of our reaching the "Increase of the Navy," because when that item is reached I presume there will be much discussion upon it. I am in favor of the increase of the Navy, but I think this is a proper place to put the inquiry that I would like the chairman to answer, if he will.

In the item headed "Increase of the Navy" provision is made for "1 submarine tender, $1,900,000; 18 coast submarines, to have a surface displacement of about 800 tons each, $1,300,000 each." I favor these appropriations, and would prefer that we should build even more submarines than are provided for in this paragraph. But inasmuch as much of the war trouble that now beclouds the horizon arises from the use of submarines by one of the foreign nations, I would like to know whether our understanding, or the committee's understanding, of international law is, that if any foreign nation uses submarines in what is reported to be "ruthless warfare," that objection would hold against the United States if we should be engaged in war and should find it necessary to use submarines?

Mr. PADGETT. Of course, the gentleman can understand that I am not prepared or commissioned to speak for anyone except myself. I have no authority to speak for the present except myself. administration or for any future administration that may be in power. I presume I would be authorized to say that the Government of the United States, if engaged in war, would conduct it along the recognized and proper lines of conducting war and would observe all of its obligations and perform all of its duties. [Applause.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am obliged to the chairman of the committee for that statement, and if he will listen to what I desire to say it may be that he will care to say something further.

Mr. TOWNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I yield to the gentleman from

Mr. TOWNER. I think the objection to the submarine is principally directed toward its use as an instrument of destruction of merchant vessels. Certainly no one has made any protest so far against their use as vessels of war against vessels of war, and it occurs to me that the gentleman's statement is entirely justified when he says we ought to increase these rather than diminish them, because we are acting ostensibly and with the avowed declaration that these increases in our Navy are for defensive purposes. Certainly the submarine has demonstrated itself as the greatest and most efficient coastdefense instrument of war that has yet been devised.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman hold there for a moment?

Mr. TOWNER. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I want to finish this in five minutes, if possible. Does the gentleman think that if we should make a declaration of war against any nation it would be proper for us to use our submarines either for offensive or defensive purposes?

Mr. TOWNER. Why certainly, as against enemy vessels—as against vessels of war.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman think it would be proper for us to use our submarines to capture or to destroy any other vessels that contained contraband, or that were known to be hostile to the United States?

Mr. TOWNER. I think so clearly; but the extent to which they may be used as against merchant vessels, either of belligerent or neutral powers, is a very mooted question.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I understand, and I think the gentleman will agree that the whole point in controversy between Germany and the United States now is that Germany is using submarines, attacking marchantment, armed or containing contraband, and that the United States resents that use of submarines by Germany.

Mr. TOWNER. As against a neutral power, certainly. Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The query then arises, why are we building submarines? Is it merely to keep them afloat, merely to harbor our sailors, or are we building submarines with a view of attacking or defending?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. TOWNER. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TOWNER. Again let me say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that no one contends that we have not the utmost right to use submarines, or that any other nation has not the right to use them as vessels of war against vessels of war; and this war has demonstrated that there is no defensive power that is equal to the submarine; because with a navy two or three times that of Germany opposed to her, Germany has been able to protect her coast and her coast cities absolutely, principally by the use of submarines and the fear of submarines; and these that we are appropriating for in this bill are to be used, as I say, principally as a defense against vessels of war that may be sent to attack our coasts.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does it occur to the gentleman that sometime in the course of a war in which the United States might engage, particularly a foreign war if we should be dragged into it, it might be advisable for us to attempt a blockade of the ports of a foreign country?

Mr. TOWNER. That is a question that no one could determine in advance, I think.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Would it then be advisable, or would it be in accordance with international law, for us to send our United States submarines to establish that blockade and to maintain it against our enemy's commerce, even if we had to sink some ships?

Mr. TOWNER. Why, certainly; I suppose we would have the same right to use that kind of a vessel of war as we would have to use any other kind of a vessel of war to maintain a blockade, if under international law it was a legal blockade.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I thank the gentleman for his expressions of opinion as to international law and as to the rights of this Government to use submarines. Now, Mr. Chairman, I believe we ought to construct these submarines, and that we ought to construct more of them. Their efficiency in naval warfare has been demonstrated. Germany has them and is using them very successfully. Great Britain has them and is using them to the best of her ability. As between these two nations there seems to be no practical difference as to the right of either of them to use their submarines, but the United States has taken the position that Germany is using her submarines No one has said a word about the manner in improperly. which Great Britain is using her submarines. The whole sum of the contention is that Germany is conducting a "ruthless submarine warfare." If Germany has no right to use her submarines, it may be a fair question to ask why we are building The United States is building submarines, and most of us believe in the construction of submarines; we certainly believe we are constructing them for some useful purpose. believe we are constructing them for a fighting purpose, if need be.

The question arises, why should we continue to construct submarines at enormous expense if we are not going to use them somewhere for offensive or defensive purposes? If we forced into a crisis which necessitated the blockading of a foreign port or a crisis which necessitated the defense of our own coasts, would we use those submarines in the manner the nations now at war use them; and if we would so use them, what becomes of our grievance against other nations which are using them?

Mr. TEMPLE. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I yield to the gentleman.
Mr. TEMPLE. If the same use were made of surface vessels, sinking merchant ships without warning, by 8-inch or 14-inch cannon on battleships, do you not suppose we would make the same protest? In other words, it is not a protest against the particular weapon, but against the thing that is done by the use of any weapon. The invention of a new weapon does not change the rights of neutrals against whom that weapon is used.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I wish the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Temple], who is versed in this subject of international law, would take the floor in his own right and explain the situation. [Applause.] The question with me-is this, are we building these submarines merely to have and to hold them as an ornament or are we building them with a view to using them when some one strikes at us with a mailed Will we strike back with a mailed fist or will we wait until some question of international law is settled? It will take a long while to bring any war to an end if we have to confer with the enemy every time we propose to attack him.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman have one minute more and that I may make a statement.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks that his colleague's time be extended one minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BUTLER. I voted for this appropriation with the understanding that these weapons would never be used to commit unjustifiable murder, and for no other reason would I vote

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. May I ask the gentleman this? Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Pennsylvania may have an additional five minutes in which to tell the House what his idea of submarines is and how they should be used.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Pennsylvania may have five minutes in which to give the House certain definite information. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. In answer to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, I will say that he is a good, sturdy, peaceloving Quaker, but he fights sometimes-

Mr. BUTLER. I am not a Quaker.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. A Friend. Mr. BUTLER. Nor a Friend; I do not belong to the society of either. I have made that statement in the House 40 times and this is the last time. I would not disgrace those honorable people by assuming to belong to them. That is the way I look

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman swears by the uplifted hand.

Mr. BUTLER. I do not swear at all; I can keep my word without swearing.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman got into the somehow. [Laughter.]

Mr. BUTLER. I got into the House because my constituents sent me here, and I did not ask for any outside help.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman said he voted for submarines, but that there should be no unnecessary blood-

Mr. BUTLER. I did not say that. Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. No, unjustifiable murder; that was it. I would like to inquire whether any war is conducted on a peace basis; whether they do not kill each other in war?

Mr. DYER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has not given us that information.

Mr. REAVIS rose.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. REAVIS. There has been so much said and written that am confused, and I am asking for information. What does the gentleman understand our complaint against Germany to sinking our vessels bearing contraband or sinking our vessels without warning and without giving the lives on them a

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The President, when he came

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McKENZIE. I object to the gentleman's time being all taken up in answering questions. He was to proceed for five minutes to make a statement to the House, for which I asked the extension of time.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I think I can answer the gentleman from Nebraska in a minute. When the President came here and announced the severance of diplomatic relations with Germany, he indicated that there had been a breach of understanding between the two countries; that Germany had given notice of a change of position on the submarine question, which the United States did not stand for. It is charged in the newspapers that Germany is using the submarines in contravention of international law; that it destroys vessels; and that human life has been taken in consequence of the destruction of the vessels.

Was not the breach of the understanding the Mr. REAVIS. note of Germany indicating that these vessels would be sunk without warning?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The original understanding was that Germany would cease the submarine warfare she had been carrying on, and the President said that notice was given by Germany that Germany intended to resume that warfare;

hence there was such a misunderstanding as justified the sending home of the German ambassador.

Mr. GARDNER. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes; for a question.

Mr. GARDNER. Does the gentleman think that the sending home of the German ambassador was justified or not?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Well, the gentleman has a certain Anglomaniac notion-

Mr. GARDNER. That does not answer the question.
Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Why, certainly; if the President thought there had been such a breach of diplomatic relations between the two countries as to justify it, he should have sent the German ambassador home. But that does not mean what the gentleman has in mind, that that should be followed up by a declaration bringing 100,000,000 people into war.

Mr. GARDNER. Why does the gentleman think that; why, should he say I think so?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Because the gentleman is one of the most warlike of the gentlemen who favored the severance of relations

Mr. GARDNER. Has the gentleman any reason for that statement?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman has made speeches indicating it and has offered resolutions.

Mr. GARDNER. I absolutely deny the statement that the gentleman just made, that I think it ought to be followed up with a declaration of war.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman has denounced

Germany heretofore and indicated that we should break with Germany. He has done it in his speeches, and he has gone out of his way to force this Congress into discussion of such matters,

Mr. GARDNER. What is the gentleman from Pennsylvania doing now

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am trying to maintain peace with honor. The gentleman from Massachusetts has been licking the Hohenzollerns.

The time of the gentleman from Penn-The CHAIRMAN.

sylvania has expired.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I have waited patiently and listened attentively to the definite information provided for in the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McKenzie] about submarines and their proper use. I have some definite views—at least I think they are definite—in relation to sub-marines and have been trying to express them.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will my friend yield me half a minute of his time?

Mr. SLAYDEN. I will if the gentleman will use it quickly.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I want to answer the question of the gentleman from Illinois in reference to submarines. If we were in conflict with a foreign power, like Germany, for instance, and we had submarines, I would use those submarines to beat that foreign power, no matter whether they destroyed lives or not. I would fight to win. When nations are at war life and property are subject to destruction. I deplore war and would hold out against it until the last, but if my country becomes involved in war I would not expect it to yield because somebody got hurt. That is war.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Of course, Mr. Chairman, that is what they are designed for, and we have had some curious information or misinformation here with reference to them. My learned friend from Iowa [Mr. Towner] suggests-I think it was hethat they are excellent coast-defense weapons. In view of what has recently happened, I would like to ask whose coast they defend? Most of the sinkings that have occurred recently have been along the coast of Great Britain, which has the most powerful navy that floats on the surface of the water, but which, apparently, is unable to prevent the coming of hostile submarines to her coasts and the sinking of ships—8, 10, 15, 20 of them a day, so near to those coasts that the victims, the passengers and crews on the ships that are sunk, can get into open boats and find their way to the coast of Ireland or some other part of Great Britain. They were in their original conception defensive weapons, and they are the most powerful defensive weapons ever conceived by the mind of man, but, in my judg-ment, they have come to be the most effective and powerful offensive weapons also.

When they can send those boats thirty-five hundred miles from Bremen to the coast of the United States and back again, and, if my recollection is right, upon the same fuel supply they took upon the other side, then submarines have passed that period when they are merely defensive weapons.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SLAYDEN. I have only a minute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, not only have they ceased to be merely defensive weapons, but, in my judgment, they have become the most effective offensive weapons, and I think they have verified a prediction of mine in this House quite two years ago—in September, I think it was, 1914—in which I ventured to quote in the RECORD the opinion of Sir Percy Scott, admiral of the British Navy, that the time was near when great dreadnaught battleships would become museum pieces merely, and nothing has happened yet in this war that has demonstrated their ability to float upon the surface of the ocean in defiance of a submarine that happens to be in their vicinity. I believe, as Sir Percy Scott believed, that all of the money we are spending for these huge ships of war, these expensive leviathans, is waste. I believe in the construction of submarines. I believe that the United States Navy is not apt to be oversupplied with them, because they meet the conditions that my friend Mr. Bur-LER, from Pennsylvania, has in his mind of a defensive weapon. I mean that he has in his mind during those moments when he is not hostile, when he does not want to expend all of the money in the Treasury for weapons of war-in his calmer moments, when he lapses into the frame of mind to which he was trained in his youth.

Mr. BUTLER. What does the gentleman know about my training in youth?

Mr. SLAYDEN. I formed a very excellent opinion of it from many conversations I have had with my friend, who was a very antiwar man most of his earlier life in this House, I think.

Mr. BUTLER. I would rather be an American citizen than be right. What do you say to that?

Mr. SLAYDEN. All I can say is that everyone in such matters must be guided by his own conscience and judgment. I claim that privilege for myself and cheerfully concede it to others

Mr. TEMPLE. Mr. Chairman, this debate has arisen in connection with the appropriation provided in this bill to build sub-marines. My colleague and friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] has asked, Why build them if we are not going to use

I believe that no man on earth, certainly no man in any responsible position, has objected to the use of submarines. There are certain laws of war that have been developed in the experience of mankind that put restrictions upon the use of any weapon, and particularly that defend the right of any neutral. It is not a question as to whether a submarine may be used————Mr. DAVIS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TEMPLE. Not at present. It is not a question of whether the submarine may be used, but whether it may be used as other weapons may not be used, in violation of the rights of neutrals which have been recognized from generation to generation. There is the same objection to the use of surface war-ships if they be used in the same unlawful way. When a merchant ship is attacked, it is, under certain conditions, subject to capture, but if it can not be taken into port, a practice has recently grown up—and I think the first instances recognized, so far as neutral ships are concerned, were in the Russo-Japanesse War—it has recently been recognized that when the vessel so captured can not be taken into port, either because there is no port available to take it to or because taking it to port or sending it there in charge of a prize crew would interfere with the military operations of the captor, that vessel may be sunk; but it may be sunk only after the ship's papers have been examined and have furnished prima facie evidence that the vessel may properly be confiscated by judgment of a prize court. A ship's papers will include such documents as the certificate of registry to show what its nationality is, to determine whether it is an enemy or a neutral; the clearance papers to show the destina-tion, to see whether it is bound for an enemy port or perhaps even a blockaded port; the manifest of cargo and invoices to show whether the vessel is carrying contraband. If those papers are examined or if the ship itself is searched and evidence is found which shows that the vessel is subject to confiscation, and if it is impossible for him to take it into port, then the captor may

In that case he should take the papers to the prize court in order that a case may be presented there and the owner may have his day in court claiming his property. The captor is also under obligation to provide for the safety of noncombatants upon the vessel, whether enemy or neutral, whether passengers or crew. It is never lawful to make war against noncombatants, and it is as unlawful upon the ocean as it is upon the land to fire upon women and children. [Applause.] An attack either by a submarine or a surface warship in violation of the rights of neutrals is unlawful and just as unlawful when it is done rines are used for the same purpose and under the same restrictions with regard to the rights of noncombatants and the rights of neutrals, as are lawful when a surface vessel is used. there will be no objection.

It is a very different use of the submarine which is chargedand which, according to the last note which was sent to this country, was affirmed by Germany-it is that use that is objected to. Germany has inclosed an area of ocean which is the property in common of all mankind, and has said that all commerce must get off this part of the earth and stay off under penalty of being sunk. That is the thing objected to.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TEMPLE. Just for a question.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is not the action of Great Britain in mining the coasts along which are neutral ports, for the purpose of preventing neutral nations sending their vessels into those ports and thus interfering with neutral commerce, akin to the action of Germany in establishing a war zone?

Mr. TEMPLE. That has nothing to do with the case. John Jones is accused of murder, it is no defense for John. Jones to say that William Smith has done it, too.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is it not a parallel case?

Mr. TEMPLE. That has nothing to do with the case.

Mr. GARDNER. Does the gentleman recognize any difference between elbowing out of a rich market a prosperous trader who is making a lot of money and murdering women and children on the high seas?

Mr. TEMPLE. That question also has nothing to do with the lawfulness of killing women and children and other noncombatants.

Mr. GARDNER. It is quite parallel.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. COLEMAN. Mr. Chairman, I would ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman be extended for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. TEMPLE. These parallels are very interesting, but it is no part of my present purpose to discuss them. I want to confine my discussion to one point.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TEMPLE. For a question.

Mr. FESS. I would like to have the gentleman expand on the same subject, so as to extend to merchant vessels of belligerents as well as to neutrals.

Mr. TEMPLE. Merchant vessels of belligerents are also reckoned as noncombatant. They are subject to capture, whether carrying contraband or not, simply because they are enemy vessels. They are subject to capture and confiscation by a prize court, but the captain of the belligerent vessel that captures them is not a prize court and he can not confiscate them. He may seize and take them into court to have them passed on there. If a vessel resists such lawful capture, it loses its rights as a noncombatant and becomes subject to the same treatment as that given to a warship; that is, if it resists such capture, it can be blown out of the water, and the captain of the noncombatant vessel then would be responsible for the loss of life on the vessel under his command.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TEMPLE. For a question. Mr. LONGWORTH. Would or would not the gentleman say that the only modification of international law which has been caused by the modern submarine is as to the question of what armament a ship may use against the submarine, and whether shall be considered offensive or defensive?

Mr. TEMPLE. In answer to that, I would say I do not believe modern international law has been modified to any extent, not even in the case which the gentleman has mentioned.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Then the gentleman does not believe there has been any modification?

Mr. TEMPLE. If a vessel is a merchant ship, and her purpose is to deliver her cargo to a certain destination, she is allowed under international law to carry whatever weapons are necessary to accomplish that purpose, just as an express messenger on one of our trains which might be attacked by robbers is allowed to carry weapons to resist any attack. You would not limit him to a .22 caliber to do it, but you would give him a .45 Winchester repeating rifle.

Mr. EMERSON. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. TEMPLE. I will. Mr. EMERSON. When a merchant ship, armed for defensive of neutrals is unlawful and just as unlawful when it is done purpose only, sees a submarine approaching it is absolutely nec-by a submarine as if it were done by a battleship. If submarrine as if it were done by a battleship.

submarine fires first the merchant ship will have no occasion to

Mr. TEMPLE. If it fires, of course, under the general law it loses its noncombatant status.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TEMPLE. I will.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. In view of the character of the weapon, the submarine, does the gentleman think it should be guided by the same rule of international law that requires a war vessel to take a merchantman in tow?

Mr. TEMPLE. In answer to that I will say that the right of a neutral does not depend upon the nature of the weapon used against him. The law is based on the rights of the neutrals, and it is unlawful to do certain things to a neutral, no matter what weapon is used to do them.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Suppose a warship or submarine was unable to take the merchantman into port. Would it have a right then to sink the ship?

Mr. TEMPLE. If I have the right to compel certain action, may have the right to use certain means, but that right is limited. For example, I have the right to compel one of my children to go to school. Have I, therefore, the right to kill him in attempting to make him go to school? The rights of the belligerent are limited by the rights of the neutral.

Is not the proposition, then, as to the submarine simply this, that simply because you have a new weapon of warfare is no reason why you should use it in an illegal and inhumane manner?

Mr. TEMPLE. Just precisely that. The right of the neutral does not depend on the weapon that is used against him. If I am accused of murder and plead in defense that I used a kind of poison that had not been discovered when the law against murder was made, still the murder depends on the right of the murdered man to his life and not on the nature of the weapon that was used in taking his life.

Mr. FESS. I wish the gentleman would also state to the House what right the merchantman with a defensive armament has if a submarine appears out of his course or the submarine appears in the due course of the vessel? I am not questioning the right, understand, but I want the gentleman to state to the House the right of the captain on that defensively armed vessel as to when he can fire.

Mr. TEMPLE. He has the same right to fire on the submarine that he would have to fire on a surface vessel, but he does

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.]

The Chair hears none.

Mr. TEMPLE. As soon as he abandons his legal status by beginning a fight he is subject to any kind of attack that would be lawful against a warship. Does that answer your question? He has a right to do it, but he must take the consequence.

Mr. FESS. That is, in case—
Mr. TEMPLE. That is in any case, whether he fires first or waits for the fire of the enemy.

Mr. FESS. I think there should be a qualification if the submarine is in the course of the vessel.

Mr. TEMPLE. He can not be both. If a noncombatant begins to fight, he is no longer a noncombatant.

Mr. FESS. Do I understand that if the submarine is in the course of a vessel, proceeding on its right, that he has a right to fire if he has any evidence that there is

Mr. TEMPLE. That is a question of policy or of morals. It depends on the judgment of the captain of the noncombatant vessel always as to when he ought to begin and when he ought not to fight. I am not discussing the question of moral justification, but a legal question. When he does begin to fight, what is his legal status? Without doubt he then has the status of a

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. May I ask the gentleman an explanation of this? Is it not probable that by the very character of the submarine and its method of warfare the fact that it is lying in wait anywhere is equivalent to beginning an attack?

Perhaps, but that does not affect the answer I made to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS]. Whether the merchant ship remains noncombatant or becomes a combatant depends on the fact of whether it fights or not. The moral justification for beginning a fight is another question.

Mr. GARDNER. I would like to ask the gentleman a ques-

Mr. TEMPLE. Very well.

Mr. GARDNER. And I am asking this to clear my own You say that a submarine may not fire on a merchantman that is stopped; that is, not disobeying its signal to stop? Mr. TEMPLE. No; I think I did not make any statement about that

Mr. GARDNER. That was not resisting, I think you said.
Mr. TEMPLE. I say that a warship, whether a submarine or surface ship, has a right to seize and capture, but no right to fire upon a noncombatant, unless the vessel resists, and there is no difference between the submarine and a surface boat in that

Mr. GARDNER. That is what I understood. Now, suppose there is a submarine on the high seas. This may be a little bit contrary to my own sympathies in the matter, but I want to find out the rights of it. Here is a submarine that comes up on the high seas, and here is a merchantman in plain view, and you say that the merchantman has a right to fire on the submarine, but that when it does so it becomes a combatant. Now, why has not the submarine the same right if the merchantman has that right? I want to get that clear in my own mind for the

Mr. TEMPLE. By agreement and under traditions and long practice it has been held that the choice lies with the merchant ship of enemy nationality as to whether it shall become a combatant or whether it shall remain noncombatant. If that is a disadvantage that the submarine labors under, it is the same disadvantage advantage that a light-armored cruiser or converted ship without armor would labor under.

Mr. GARDNER. Then the merchantman has a right at any time to turn itself into a combatant and fire?

Mr. TEMPLE. The merchant ship of a belligerent has the option to resist capture, even to resist visit and search, though that right is denied by the German correspondence at the present time. It is like the question that arises with regard to the use of quickly gathered fighting forces on land which Germany has been opposed to.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TEMPLE. Yes.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I wish to ask the gentleman this question: Is it the right of a merchant ship to use its armament limited to defense, and that if it is guilty of an attack not in defense, is it an act of piracy?

Mr. TEMPLE. I prefer the statement that I made a moment ago, that a merchant ship of enemy nationality has the right to resist, even to resist visit and search.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. And has no right to attack. Mr. REAVIS. Taking the case where Germany has by its note to the powers of the world notified them that within a certain zone merchant vessels will be sunk on sight, has a merchant vessel the right, under those circumstances, to presume that an attack is going to be made upon it and fire in self-defense, without becoming a combatant?

Mr. TEMPLE. My answer to that is that the practice of declaring that a certain zone is barred to all traffic is a practice unknown to international law. The thing resolves itself into its primitive elements there.

Mr. REAVIS. In a controversy between individuals, upon a threat made by one upon the life of another and a revolver is drawn, you do not have to wait to find out whether that revolver is loaded or not, but you can act upon that threat when the revolver is drawn,

Mr. TEMPLE. That is an interesting analogy.

Mr. REAVIS. Under those circumstances could not the merchant ship fire on the submarine without waiting to be attacked? That is a question for the captain of the mer-Mr. TEMPLE.

chant ship to decide.

Before I sit down I wish to say that, of course, I do not attempt to speak as an authority on this subject. The opinions which I have expressed are founded, I believe, on judgments of prize courts and the practices of nations which until recently have not been disputed. [Applause.]

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, we have listened to a splendid statement from a very learned gentleman on a very important subject. I do not feel like taking issue with him on any statement he makes with reference to the law with-out some hesitation. I think, however, he is in error on one important point.

I understood the gentleman to say that if a merchantman, whether belligerent or neutral, is stopped by a ship of war and does not resist, the belligerent ship of war stopping it has no right to sink her. I think she has, by the rulings of our own State Department and by the insistence we ourselves have made in times of stress; but only under certain conditions, and the conditions are these: If the ship of war stopping the merchant ship is in such a condition—and she herself is largely the judge of that-that she can not for military reasons take the captured ship to a court or to a port, there to have it condemned as a prize, she can sink her; but only after she has given all the persons on the merchant ship the opportunity to get off and be saved.

Mr. SUMNERS and Mr. SIMS rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield, and to whom? Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I yield to the gentleman from

Mr. SUMNERS. I rise merely to suggest to the gentleman, in order that he may understand the matter before the House, that the gentleman who has taken his seat [Mr. Temple] stated his position exactly as the gentleman himself is now stating it.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I beg to differ from the gentleman. I hoped he was going to qualify it as I have done, but he did not

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?
The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Minnesota yield to the gentleman from Tennessee? Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Yes,

Mr. SIMS. Suppose the attacking vessel can not provide means of safety for noncombatant life. Has it any right what-were to sink that vessel?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Absolutely none. There can be no destruction of property that will result in the destruction of human life under circumstances of that character.

Mr. STAFFORD. Supposing the merchant ship, after she has been given warning by the submarine or by a belligerent vessel, attempts to escape. Does the gentleman contend that the war vessel attempting to check its passage has not the right to continue to fire into it and sink it?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Certainly; if the vessel stopped by a belligerent undertakes to escape, she can be sunk, because that is universally accepted international law.

Mr. FARR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. FARR. What is the essential difference between your view and that expressed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania IMr. TEMPLE1?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Temple] stated that there existed no right to sink a merchant ship after she had been stopped and human life removed. I maintain this right does exist under certain If the warship stopping the merchantman becircumstances. lieves it inexpedient for physical or military reasons to take the merchantman to a home port, the human beings on board can be removed, and then the ship can be sunk, provided, of course, that she is either a belligerent ship or a neutral ship loaded with contraband. We are speaking of submarines now, and the submarine is by its very nature, perhaps, incapable of taking a captured prize into a prize court, or even to any port; for military reasons and for physical reasons they are incapable of doing it. However, I must confess that I think a German submarine has the undoubted right to sink every captured merchant boat if she first will give a chance for all human life to be saved and the boat itself belongs to a belligerent nation, or, if a neutral boat, she is loaded with contraband. She has no right to sink a neutral merchant ship not loaded with contraband unless that boat is trying to run a blockade which Germany has physically effected.

Mr. DECKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. DECKER. I would like to know if the gentleman can inform us when the principle of law was established that would permit a warship to sink a merchant ship in case it could not take it to port; of course, as the gentleman said, first providing for the safety of the passengers and crew. When was that principle established?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. We have maintained that in this country for more than 75 years. We did it repeatedly during the blockade even of our Civil War.

Mr. DECKER. I am interested in knowing whether the principle was established while the war was going on or in

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. The fact is that all these rules that are involved were in controversy during the war and then settled in time of peace.

Mr. DECKER. The belligerent nations involved insisted on it or disputed it during the time of war, but it was agreed to afterwards in time of peace?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Yes; but the gentleman knows that no two nations agree precisely on all questions of international law.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. MANN. How would it be possible in time of peace to determine?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. We have done that by various tribunals and conferences, as, for example, the Geneva Conference and The Hague Tribunal. It would be interesting to know that all the nations of the world, except the United States, agreed at The Hague Conference that no longer there should be piracy on the high seas. We did not agree to it. We still maintain that perhaps there can be piracy, but everybody knows that the United States will never sanction piracy

Mr. SHERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield

there?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Yes. Mr. SHERWOOD. Does the gentleman know and make the statement that that policy of the nations has been prevailing 75 years, and that during our war the United States Government established a blockade of all our southern ports and the vessels running that blockade were sunk without notice?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Yes. Of course, that was a physical blockade. The facts were slightly different in that case from those in the present case.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's re-

Mr. PADGETT. I think, Mr. Chairman, that we have been very liberal in permitting discussion. We are now up to the item for "Increase of the Navy," except for the reading of the two lines for the total. Then there were some matters passed over. I was going to ask if we could not suspend this debate until we reached the item for "Increase in the Navy," and then agree upon a time of debate for the paragraph on page 58 providing for the "Increase of the Navy."

Mr. MANN. I would like to have five minutes now.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I would like an opportunity now to reply to some of the things stated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. TEMPLE], which I think are not well founded.

The CHAIRMAN. This debate, of course, is all proceeding by unanimous consent. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Mil-This debate, of course, is all proceeding by LER] has preferred a request that he may be allowed to proceed

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Three minutes. Is there objection? There was no objection.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, what I desired to state when I took the floor, in addition to what I said of international law governing the rights to sink a boat is this: The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moore] made the statement, with a great deal of energy and apparently coming from settled conviction, that he hoped this country some time, if ever she was in the throes of war, would use the submarines to the limit: that we would make every possible use of the submarine that her deadly destroying character might make possible. Chairman, I have heard that same thing said on this floor, although not quite so vigorously, once or twice before. I take exception to it. I would indorse that no quicker than I would the man who says I am willing to fight, and if I get a chance I will strike below the belt.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Oh, Mr. Chairman, I was not striking below the belt; I was only using instruments of war for If we must fight, I want victory. an effective purpose.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. If I understand the English language that the gentleman used, it is this: That he would sink boats, with or without warning, carrying human freight as well as dead freight, no matter what might be the consequences to human life, provided that some advantage might accrue to the United States.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman is doing me an injustice.

justice. Munition ships carry destruction—— Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I am glad that the gentleman is making a confession-

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am not making any confession. The gentleman is putting words into my mouth that I did

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I will submit to anyone who will read what the gentleman said-

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Would the gentleman fight to

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I am glad the gentleman has made his subsequent statement-

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman would fight to lose, he is not the kind of an American I take him to be.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Of course, we all desire that our country shall, in time of war at least, use every instru-mentality that will aid the national defense or offense that is just and proper and wise and humane. But if civilization means anything, it means that even war must have its limits. It means that you must not shoot down innocent women and children, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Temple] so wisely said, either on the high seas or on the land; that you must not shoot down noncombatants who are not engaged in any military operation; that military operations should be confined to the military forces of the combatants. Unless we accede to that we turn the pages of history back again to the day when every man was an enemy to every other man on earth; when the strong arm of might could prevail; when he took that which he could by his own strength and lost it only to a man stronger than he. We might just as well indorse the movement to tear down our churches, to tear down our schoolhouses, to tear down our hospitals and every institution that Christian civilization has erected in our land, as to say that if we wage war we shall wage it ruthlessly. It is not the complaint against Germany that she uses submarines; she ought to use them. Every nation ought to make use of the instrumentality that will aid her, but let her make use of it in accordance with humanity, in accordance with the rules of Christian civilization, and I submit that there is no exigency that can come to her, nor can it come to any nation that will justify the conducting of war contrary to civilization and justice. [Applause.]

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. TEMPLE] said that this is not a question of whether you can use the submarine at all. I beg to disagree with him and to assert that it is a question of whether you can use the submarine at all. Exactly that. And I propose to prove this by examining the facts and by quoting from an official letter of the Government of the United States setting forth the views of the President and of the Secretary of State. I know that for giving expression to any other view than that already expressed here one is apt to be criticized, perhaps denounced. Criticism and denunciation are rampant over country against anyone who attempts fairly to consider both sides of this question.

But let us see what the Government of the United States said was right and just on this question of regulating the use of the submarine. Its views were set forth in a letter sent by Secretary Lansing to the belligerents in January, 1916, a copy of which I have here. These views were the views also of "my Government," and "my Government" was the President.

Government," and "my Government" was the Fresident.

Prior to the year 1915 belligerent operations against enemy commerce on the high seas had been conducted with cruisers carrying heavy armaments. In these conditions international law appeared to permit a merchant vessel to carry armament for defensive purposes without lessening its character as a private merchant vessel.

This right seems to have been predicated on the superior defensive strength of ships of war, and the limitation of armament to have been dependent on the fact that it—could not be used effectively in offense against enemy naval vessels, while it could defend the merchantman against the generally inferior armament of piratical ships and privateers.

That is, the armament of the merchant vessel-

I stop here to ask, whether, if we were at war with Russia or Japan, or with both combined, we should consider ourselves bound to use our submarines in accordance with rules made before the submarine was invented, rules made to meet entirely different conditions? Let us see what our Government thought a year ago:

The use of the submarine, however, has changed these relations. Comparison of the defensive strength of a cruiser and a submarine shows that the latter, relying for protection on its power to submerge, is almost defenseless in point of construction. Even a merchant ship carrying a small-caliber gun would be able to use it effectively for offense against the submarine.

Note that language-"effectively for offense."

Moreover, pirates and sea rovers have been swept from the main trade channels of the sea and privateering has been abolished.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I want again to get before the House the views of our Government. Here is a decisive state-

Consequently, the placing of guns on merchantmen at the present date of submarine warfare can be explained only on the ground of a purpose to render merchantmen superior in force to submarines and to prevent warning and visit and search by them.

Here, only a year ago, was our Government officially declaring that the only purpose of arming merchantmen now is to prevent visit and search by submarines. And yet such impossible visit and search is the exact thing which is being insisted upon.

Mr. TEMPLE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I can not now. Please let me finish this.

Any armament, therefore, on a merchant vessel would seem to have e character of an offensive armament,

Now, international law does not fix the number of guns that a merchantman may mount nor what their caliber shall be. Do you call a ship carrying 4-inch or 6-inch guns a merchantman? We must be careful about the terms we use in discussing this great question and be sure as to their exact meaning. For three or four merchantmen to-day in a group crossing the ocean, each of them armed with two or three modern 6-inch guns, shooting high-power shells with deadly accuracy 4 or 5 miles, could sink any 20 of such battleships as were in existence when the old rule of international law, which is now invoked, was formulated. Now, if a vessel is so powerful in offense that it could have sunk any battleship that Farragut com-manded in the Civil War, is it in any proper sense of the word a merchantman as that word was always understood at the time when the rule of visit and search was established?

After saying that "the placing of guns on merchantmen at the present date of submarine warfare can be explained only on the ground of a purpose to make it impossible for a submarine to warn and visit and search them," and that therefore "any armament on a merchant vessel would seem to have the character of an offensive armament," the President and Secretary

Lansing continued:

If a submarine is required to stop and search a merchant vessel on the high seas, and in case it is found that she is of an enemy character and that conditions necessitate her destruction and the removal to a place of safety of persons on board, it would not seem just nor reason-able that the submarine should be compelled, while complying with these requirements, to expose itself to almost certain destruction by the guns on board the merchant vessel.

Mr. FLOOD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. FLOOD. The gentleman has undertaken to state the position of this Government with reference to submarine warfare. Is the gentleman quoting from the note of Secretary Lansing of January 18, 1916?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I am quoting from a note which the Secretary signed, in which before he finished he in effect said that it was written to express the views of "my Government," and that means the President.

Mr. FLOOD. Is that dated January 18, 1916?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. January 18, 1916, a year ago last

Mr. FLOOD. Is not the gentleman aware of the fact that was a confidential note, sent to the British Government and its allies for the purpose of inducing them to waive what this Government recognized as an international right to arm their merchant vessels, and not a statement of the position of this Government upon that international question?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, the right or wrong of a statement does not depend upon the secrecy with which the statement is made. If it be right in secret, it is right in public.

[Applause.]

Mr. FLOOD. The gentleman has not answered my question. Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. One of the belligerents agreed that our Government was right in urging that no merchantman in these days should be allowed to mount cannon, because these make it absolutely impossible to use the submarine at all for the purpose of visit and search.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I ask five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TEMPLE. I should like to ask the gentleman one question. If these submarines were not used, and not per mitted to be used against merchantmen, would there not still remain a very great use for them against warships of the

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman says that it prevented the use of submarines. It does.

Mr. TEMPLE. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I said it did not

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I knew, of course, that was the gentleman's view. But, nevertheless, in my judgment it does. Because it is perfectly plain that a submarine dare net rise and approach a merchant ship armed with these guns, since to do so would, as the President and Secretary of State said, expose the submarine to almost certain destruction. This exact point was raised very clearly indeed by our Government in that

Mr. TEMPLE. Have they not been used successfully against battleships'

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Not recently at all.

Mr. TEMPLE. Over at the Dardanelles.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Not within the year. The belligerents have learned how to protect battleships.

Mr. FLOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I must decline to yield now, as I wish to finish this statement.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. May I ask the gentleman a

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I desire to finish this.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. All right. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Our Government maintained that the arming of merchantmen to-day can be explained only on the ground of a purpose to render merchantmen superior in force to submarines and to prevent warning and visit and search by them. And the President and Secretary of State in the same official letter to the belligerents declared also that to all intents and purposes armed merchantmen are battleships and ought to be treated as auxiliary cruisers. And at this point I wish again to remind the House that later, when Germany had acceded to this suggestion of our Government, the New York World, the great administration newspaper, in its issue of February 10, 1916, contained the following from its Washington correspondent:

High officials of the State Department seemed disposed to consider the development broad enough to warrant the claim that the fundamental questions involved in the conduct of submarine warfare have been settled in accordance with the contention of the United States.

This is based on the belief that, with Germany and Austria giving notice that they will sink without warning all armed ships, the two Governments can not legally claim the right to sink unarmed vessels. That is the principle for which the United States has so vigorously contended since the beginning of the negotiations over the conduct of submarine warfare.

According to these "high officials of the State Department," the principle for which the United States had so vigorously contended since the beginning of the negotiations over the conduct of submarine warfare was the principle that belligerents can not lawfully sink unarmed vessels. To this principle the central powers agreed, declaring that they would not sink unarmed vessels, but reserving the right to sink all armed belligerent vessels, and requesting, in accordance with the suggestions of our Government, that all merchant vessels be prohibited from mounting cannon or other armament.

The article in the World continued as follows:

In view of this situation American citizens, it is stated by high authority, now may be warned that they will take passage aboard armed merchant ships at their own risk and be entitled to no more protection from the United States than if they had embarked upon a belligerent warship.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has again expired.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I ask merely time enough—three minutes—in which to read an excerpt from an editorial in the Chicago Tribune upon the same subject.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, here is what the Tribune said:

Upon the armament question it seems only common sense to recognize that the character of the submarine enforces new definitions of right. The fragility of the new craft virtually abolishes any real distinction between offensive and defensive armament. No naval vessel before the submarine could be seriously injured by small guns on a merchantman, and the presence of such guns could therefore be accepted as evidence of the nonoffensive or nonbelligerent character of the merchantman.

But a 1-inch gun can destroy a submarine, and is potentially an offensive weapon. To require a submarine to challenge an armed craft violates the necessities of legitimate warfare.

On the other hand, the right of defense is inherent in the merchantman, and the presence of guns sufficient to protect it from a submarine should not be held to constitute it a naval vessel in a sense which would debar it from our ports. A merchantman is not a naval vessel because it is prepared to exercise its right of defense against submarines.

If this pragmatic view is taken of the legalistic issues raised by submarine operations, we need not become involved with either belligerent and we shall be conserving our own commercial interests.

The question of responsibility for American lives remains. If we are ready to enter the war to enforce the immunity of Americans traveling on ships of the belligerents armed in fact, the way will probably be opened to do so. The alternative is to recognize the modifications above suggested as justified by the conditions of the present war and to refuse formally to accept responsibility for the safety of Americans who elect to travel on merchantmen armed in fact. This would avoid the objection that neutral passengers are protection for belligerent shipping and supply, otherwise legitimately subject to attack in commerce-destroying operations.

Mr. Chairman, I shall now ask the question that I asked a year ago: If we are in a war against Japan, and God forbid that we ever again get into a war-but as I said, it is the duty of statesmanship to be provident of the future—if we are in a war against Japan or against Japan and Russia, they now having entered into a secret agreement, and you and I are out in a submarine upon the Pacific Ocean while our relatives and friends are on shore fighting, dying to save the great Republic, and along comes a Japanese armed merchantman flying the flag of Japan and loaded with ammunition to kill Americans defending government of the people, by the people, for the people, and you and I are requested to stand back with our submarine because on board of this merchantman, armed with 6-inch cannon, are three Chinamen, citizens of a neutral country-would you do it? [Applause.] The CHAIRMAN.

The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has again expired.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Under the leave to print I add the following from a recent editorial in the Milwaukee Sentinel, one of the leading stalwart Republican newspapers of the country:

The main source of danger will be the presence of Americans on torpedoed vessels of belligerent nationality. If Americans ship or take passage on such vessels of belligerents as are offensively armed or are carriers of munitions, it might appear that they do so at their own risk. The United States Government can no more be expected to make a cause of war of an American serving in the crew of such a vessel than of an American serving in the French aviation corps.

I add, also, a further quotation from the letter of the President and the Secretary of State.

dent and the Secretary of State.

It would therefore appear to be a reasonable and reciprocally just arrangement if it could be agreed by the opposing beligerents that submarines should be caused to adhere strictly to the rules of international law in the matter of stopping and searching merchant vessels, determining their belligerent nationality, and removing the crews and passengers to places of safety before sinking the vessels as prizes of war, and that merchant vessels of belligerent nationality should be prohibited from carrying any armament whatsoever.

In proposing this formula as a basis of conditional declarations by the belligerent Government, I do so in the full conviction that each Government will consider primarily the humane purposes of saving the lives of innocent people rather than the insistence upon doubtful legal right, which may be denied on account of new conditions.

I should add that my Government is impressed with the reasonableness of the argument that a merchant vessel carrying an armament of any sort, in view of the character of the submarine warfare and the defensive weakness of undersea craft, should be held to be an auxiliary cruiser, and so treated by a neutral as well as by a belligerent Government, and is seriously considering instructing its officials accordingly.

The principles set forth in this letter are wholly reasonable

The principles set forth in this letter are wholly reasonable and just, and had their enforcement been firmly insisted upon, would, in my judgment, have saved countless innocent lives and prevented this Nation from being drawn into its present portentous situation.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. Howard having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 19119. An act making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Clerk be, and he is hereby, directed to request the Senate to return to the House of Representatives the bill H. R. 19298, entitled "An act authorizing the Western New York & Pennsylvania Railway Co. to reconstruct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Allegheny River in the town of Allegany, county of Cattaraugus, N. Y."

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 17055. An act providing when patents shall issue to the purchaser or heirs on certain lands in the State of Oregon.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 7795. An act to amend and revise the laws relating to printing and binding and the distribution of publications for Congress.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I have been considerably interested, as the other Members have, in this discussion, and I listened, as I always do, with a great deal of interest and profit, especially to the discussion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Dr. Temple, who comes before the House with the point of view of a learned man who has given long study to subjects of international law. The United States does not have a very large merchant marine engaged in foreign trade. There is a possibility that our country may go to war with any nation in the world, and, so far as our rights are concerned, it seems to me the duty of statesmanship to so provide, as far as we can, that we may most effectively protect our rights in the waging of war against any other power. As I understood Dr. Temple, his position is that international law would require, if we are engaged in war with a foreign power, and we have a subma-rine which meets a merchant vessel either of a neutral country or of the other belligerent country loaded with ammunition to supply the army or the navy of the enemy country, our submarine must, ladylike, rise from beneath the surface of the sea, ask to board the merchant vessel, armed, ask to inspect the papers of the merchant vessel, if we could get that far, before we can do any damage to that merchant vessel. I am not very well informed as to submarine warfare, though doubtless as well as the average Member of the House; but I have been told that while this ladylike operation was going on the merchant vessel would sink the submarine before officers from the submarine could board her.

Mr. TEMPLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. MANN. I prefer to go ahead. Of what use is a submarine except for defense against war vessels, and, so far as the submarine is concerned in defending against war vessels to-day, the submarine is not very valuable. War vessels are, I am told, in the main provided with nets, or whatever they may use—I do not undertake to say—so that the submarine can not be very effective against the war vessel and as a matter. can not be very effective against the war vessel, and, as a matter of fact, they are not to-day effective to any extent against the war vessel. It is to our interest, if we are going to have sub-marines for our own use in time of war, to give them the power to do execution. I am not in favor any more than anyone else of barbarous warfare, except that all warfare to me is barbarous. do not think men can engage in a ladylike fight; I do not think that nations can engage in a gentleman's warfare.

I believe that the quickest way to end war usually is to make it destructive while it lasts. I am not willing, so far as I am concerned, to admit that the use of submarines by the United States shall be so restricted in advance that they are valueless, because I think with our small merchant marine and our very long coast line that we ought to be able in defensive operations to do as much with the submarine and the aeroplane as we can do in any other way, so I believe in having them. [Applause.]

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Chairman.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman from Texas before he begins how much time he wishes?

Mr. CALLAWAY. I would like to have 10 minutes.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate upon this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

Mr. SIMS. I want five minutes.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the request for the present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee withdraws his request for the present. The gentleman from Texas is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Chairman, there have been a number of statements made here to the effect that submarines had proven ineffective against battleships and real warcraft. know these men believe that. I know there has been deter-mined effort on the part of naval officials to discredit submarines, the power of submarines, because with the recognition of the power of submarines passes the magnificence of the navy from the seas; with the recognition of the power of submarines passes the enormous expenditures for these great battleships, the money for the building of which goes into the navy yards, to the present manufacturers of ships. The grandeur and glory of the Navy, the drum beat and the fanfaronade that accompanies it, the music, the wireless telegraphy that enables them to get news from home, the printing press aboard, the ice plant, and every modern convenience, and the various things which give them every comfort, and these little hog wallows, that necessitate the most trying service that any mortal has yet ever seen, take their place. I want to read you a statement from men who ought to know. Now listen to the statement of Simon Lake, one of the builders of submarines, as to what their capacity is.

The submarine is peculiar in the fact that it is able to prevent the carrying on of commerce, if necessary, but it is useless for invading purposes, as the moment any portion is exposed on the surface it becomes vulnerable. As long as the submarine remains below the surface, she is invisible, and when we get noiseless machinery, which is the next step, you can neither hear them nor see them, and they have the ability to discharge a torpedo or to plant a mine, which will destroy any fabric which can be made to float upon the surface of the water. I think our own experiments in our own Navy Department if they were made public would prove that assertion. You might armor a ship or make her with many different decks and of cellular construction, as many engineers have tried to do, and yet the explosion of a thousand pounds of trinitrotoluol or some other similar explosive would blow the fabric up into the air. It is absolutely impossible, in my judgment, to build any fabric that will float on the surface that can not be destroyed by means available to the submarine.

Simon Lake.

Member Institution of Naval Architects of England; Member of Shifts-bau-technische Gesellschaft of Germany; Member Society of Naval Architects and Marine Engineers (United States) and American Society Mechanical Engineers.

BRIDGEPORT, CONN., February 3, 1917.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Is it not true that they can penetrate the nets that protect the battleships?

Mr. CALLAWAY. The general asks if it has not been demonstrated that these submarine torpedoes could penetrate the nets that we have just been assured by men have been devised to protect the battleships. At the Dardanelles the English fleet went down to assist in the landing of troops. A few days after they got there one of their battleships was torpedoed. A few days after that they sighted a submarine. A few days more and two more battleships were torpedoed. In neither instance did they know the exact location from which the shot came nor at neither time did they sight the submarine.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I would ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be granted five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama? [After a pause.] The Chair hears

Mr. SHERWOOD. What became of the Queen Elizabeth, which carried 15-inch guns?

Mr. CALLAWAY. If the gentleman will wait a minute, I will answer the whole question. A few days more and another battleship, in clear view of the main fleet, with its protective nets down, steaming slowly up and down to avoid a sitting shot, was sunk with two torpedoes, both of which went through the nets, either one of which would have been fatal, and in seven minutes the thing turned bottom up and sank. The report said the light surface craft which were there to protect the battleships from submarine attack were so thick that when they steamed toward the sinking craft to save the drowning crew the smoke from their stacks obscured the sun, and yet they never discovered from whence came the shots that destroyed the stricken vessel. The Queen Elizabeth, the Agamemnon, and the Lord Nelson, the most magnificent and powerful battleships affoat, were at that time at the Dardanelles to help the landing of the troops. They immediately steamed out of the harbor and sailed for home, and the next day every battleship of the English fleet that was there steamed for home-ran away from the one German submarine that was sighted. They then tried to build a kind of cordwood protection that would extend out quite a way from the side of the battleship, so that if they were struck the torpedo would ex-plode at a distance from the battleship and would not get to But battleships have been blown in two in the the vitals. middle by submarines. Capt. Sims says evidently that was the case in the Jutland Island fight, when each end of a stricken battleship was sticking out and the middle of the thing down. Admiral Beatty said it was destroyed by gunfire, but Capt. Sims said that that report was evidently made for military reasons and was not true.

Now, I want to read you from Admiral Grant.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CALLAWAY. In just a minute. I want to read from Admiral Grant, who is in charge of our submarine flotilla, as to their effectiveness. He says:

It is fairly well known, and the writer has received corroborative testimony recently, that Germany is building all her submarines of the offensive type, and that she still aspires with sufficient numbers of such vessels to overthrow Great Britain's control of the world's communications. With this accomplished, of what value will be the command of the sea? A great surface fleet can not be maintained indefinitely if this control is lost. It will defeat itself by its very inertia and expensiveness.

The defensive idea is now deeply rooted in our minds and has influenced our building program, our war games, and maneuver problems; in consequence the initiative is freely given to the enemy forces, our own being assigned a defensive rôle.

The submarine should be considered a weapon for the purpose of extending our sea frontiers. If we build submarines capable of keeping the seas in all ports of the Atlantic and Pacific, then the risk to an enemy expedition will become so great that few nations will accept the hazard involved.

Our industrial development and our great resources of material will permit this Nation building offensive submarines in sufficient numbers to prevent any one nation from controlling the seas against us; in fact, the development of an offensive submarine has struck a hard blow at the command of the sea by any one nation. A war ship or a fleet in any part of the ocean will be in constant danger of destruction from an invisible enemy.

That is Admiral Grant's statement against the statement of men here to-day that submarines are ineffective against battleships. They can blow out of the water anything that floats, and it has been time and again demonstrated.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. What I wanted to ask the gentleman was: Did Capt. Sims say that these ships that were blown up in the battle of Jutland were blown up by submarines and not by fire of the battleships?

Mr. CALLAWAY. Yes, sir.

Mr. OLIVER. Will the gentleman yield for a moment?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.
Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. OLIVER. Will the gentleman state to the committee who Admiral Grant is?

Mr. CALLAWAY. Who Admiral Grant is?

Mr. OLIVER. And whether or not the letter of Admiral Grant which you have read has the indorsement of the members of the General Board?

Mr. CALLAWAY. I will state that Admiral Grant is the admiral in charge of our submarine flotilla and is the only man who has had charge of our submarine flotilla since it was organized; and he wrote this letter to the Navy General Board in answer to an argument made by Capt. Rodgers, and this paper has the indorsement of the Navy Department.

Mr. HOWARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CALLAWAY. I will.

Mr. HOWARD. As a matter of fact, is not the statement refuted that has been made here this morning by a circumstance that at the beginning of the war in October, 1914, three English battle cruisers were sunk in 20 minutes by one submarine?

Mr. CALLAWAY. In 30 minutes.

Mr. SLAYDEN. In 50 minutes. Mr. CALLAWAY. The Hogue, the Crecy, and the Aboukir were sunk in 30 to 50 minutes by one submarine, and they did not know where the shots came from that did the work.

Mr. KELLEY. The gentleman may recall that when Capt. Sims was before the committee the question of submarines at the Panama Canal came up, and I asked him this question:

With a reasonable number of submarines at the canal an enemy fleet could not get very close, could it?

Capt. Sims. I think I took that question up with the committee when I was here before. You must understand that a submarine cuts no ice at all as long as your enemy has control of the surface in the area in which he wishes to operate.

Mr. CALLAWAY. He made that statement, and I thought possibly he was making it for the same reason that he said Admiral Beatty made the statement about the boats destroyed off Jutland, for military reasons, for he said the admirals regarded it as their right to make erroneous and misleading statements where it served a military purpose.

Mr. KELLEY. Just one other question. The gentleman, I know, regards Admiral Sims as among the very best authorities in the Navy

Mr. CALLAWAY. Yes, sir; I regard him as the brightest, frankest, and most capable man I have come in contact with in the Navy, but I thought possibly he made the statement referred to by Mr. Kelley for military reasons.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Did I understand the gentleman to say that one of the ships blown up at the Dardanelles was protected by steel screens, or otherwise?

Mr. CALLAWAY. The nets were down. They were protected by the surface craft, and the report said that the smoke was so thick from their smokestacks that when they steamed to the stricken vessel the sun was obscured.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Did they get through the net?

Mr. CALLAWAY. Yes, sir.

Mr. HENSLEY. There are ways in which battleships or dreadnaughts may be protected from submarines, are there not?

Mr. CALLAWAY. Yes, sir.
Mr. HENSLEY. But when they are so protected, what is the use of fleets of dreadnaughts or battleships?

The same as the battleships of England Mr. CALLAWAY.

and Germany during this war, in port bottled up.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I would like to ask the gentleman if he can explain how the enemy ships could control the surface at Panama if we had submarines to take care of it?

Mr. CALLAWAY. You would have to have an admiral that wants to preserve the grandeur, glory, magnificence, and expense of the Navy to explain that. [Laughter.]

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, in dealing with questions of international law we must regard them in the light of history. International law in time of war may be fairly defined as such rules of humanity as neutrals are able to enforce, and neutrals have to enforce these rules or the rules will not exist. International law is best seen in the behavior of neutral nations in history, and no more in that of any nation than in the behavior of the United States in 1798. At that time, Mr. Chairman, as now, all Europe was at war, and America was out of that war. At that time, as now, our shipping was suffering outrage upon the high seas, and principally from our old friend and ally, France, whose armed vessels were capturing our merchantmen by hundreds. In that and the next year we passed some 27 different statutes, a list of which I shall ask leave to add as an extension of my remarks, simply to show how much can be done by a nation in time of peace. We did not sever diplomatic relations. For two years and a half we had a vigorous naval war with France, and still part of the time we had our minister in Paris, and they had, or could have had, their minister with us, and we finally sent special envoys and negotiated a cessation of the strife on the ocean and a treaty of amity. It is interesting to see what the United States thought it had the right to do to prevent depredations. After providing for enlistments and munitions and for the building of ships, we passed a law by which our merchantmen should have the right to defend themselves against French armed vessels, to capture any ship that attacked them, to retake Americans captured, and to arm themselves for that purpose, and in order to see that our vessels should not do anything else they gave bonds before they left port that they would use their armament only against threatened hostility or real hostility of other armed vessels, or in the recapture of Americans that had been wrongly taken, and that they would not do any unprovoked violence.

That statute is quite long, and I shall put it in the RECORD as an appendix to my remarks to show what the fathers of our country thought could be fairly and well done by a merchant vessel carrying armament, this being in time of peace, so far as we were concerned.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield in that particular?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. In that particular?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Very well.

Mr. STAFFORD. Was not that a time when piracy was in vogue on the high seas and before the declaration of Paris, which negatived the right of piracy and inferentially the right of merchant ships to carry armament on their ships?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. This was not to defend them-selves against pirates. It was expressly in order that merchant ships might defend themselves against French armed vessels, and it is so stated in the statute. I will not take the time to read it, but will insert it in my remarks.

Now, under the conditions then prevailing a merchant vessel might go out armed. She may be a ship carrying heavy guns. Some merchantmen did carry heavy guns. She might be attacked by a cruiser of superior force, and in that case she would yield. She might be attacked by a little schooner or a galley or by small boats in a calm, and then she would use her There is perhaps no difference between those small boats and the torpedo boat or the submarine (for the submarine is only a torpedo boat), with one exception, and that is that the submarine approaches in secret under the water. Well, how does that differ in principle from the old surprise attack by a boarding party in small boats or the well-known practice by which a little schooner would shut up her ports, pretend to be a neutral vessel, fly a neutral flag, and then come up within shot and range, let down her ports, and get ready to begin a fight? The merchantman asserted the right then to defend itself against the adversary, whether it approached by stealth or otherwise, and in each of those cases the old rule of international law prevailed, that no attack should be made upon that merchant vessel without warning, because she was a merchant vessel; even though that attack was by a smaller ship or boat that might be sunk if it gave warning.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey has expired.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

There was no objection.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. "The then is the same as the now." The problems of international law, as stated so well by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Temple], deal with conditions that go through all ages. Now, in 1798 the next thing that we did-

Mr. DECKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?
The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New Jersey yield to the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I regret that I can not. I must go on with this statement. I am not stating principles but facts. Mr. DECKER. I have great faith in the gentleman's knowledge, from my acquaintance with him. This is what I would like him to dwell on-if not, then I will not interrupt him-and that is whether these principles of international law were established in time of peace or during war?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I am talking about a time when the United States was nominally at peace, Another statute is likewise mentioned in my list, and that was an act passed in July, while the other was passed in April. The act passed in July authorized the seizure of any vessels hovering on our coasts. No; that was in June. By statute in July, chapter 68, "An act further to protect the commerce of the United States," the President may order our ships to seize any armed French vessel found in the jurisdiction of the United States or elsewhere on the high seas, and may authorize privateering against the French by special commissions to private armed vessels. I will print a fuller abstract with my remarks. Under that authority our little Navy went out to protect our commerce, and in two years and a half they captured four regular French naval vessels. One was a frigate, after a severe battle, and three were corvettes, so called. We captured, be-sides these, 80 French armed vessels, most of them privateers.

Our Navy did no small thing, and we did it in defending our shipping in time of peace and without declaring any general war.

Now, that is history. The fathers of our country were not ignorant of the rights of international law. They believed in acting. They did not talk when they found our ships being destroyed. They sent forth our armed vessels to convoy our ships and to put down the destroyers. They did it without engaging in the land warfare that was ravaging Europe. They sent ministers to France. They said to France, "We believe you are our friends, but we can not suffer this, and we will defend our ships against it." I am not saying whether their course was right or wrong. I am not giving opinions, gentlemen. I am stating facts.

I only add one other fact that I have from good authority, which I will not name because I am not at liberty to do so. There is a ferry running between Sweden and Germany across the Baltic Sea. It carries whole railroad trains on powerful About half of those boats are German and half are Swedish, but it is a ferry from a neutral to one of the belligerents. The allied torpedo boats and submarines have threatened that ferry to an extent warranting the King of Sweden in placing his navy in constant convoy of that ferry, to protect its vessels, whether Swedish or German, against attacks that would not be authorized by international law, and to protect the citizens of Sweden. This is a fact. It is not in the newspapers so far as I know. Alas, that it should be true, that somehow or other we can not learn all the facts from the dispatches to this side of the water. It took a journey in 1915 to England and France to make me realize that millions of men were being trained in England without rifles on their shoulders. It could have been learned by reading between the lines, but we do not realize such a fact until we see it, and I have felt as if it was a duty, when they talk of our not going on armed ships—I have thought it might be a duty for some of us to go where we could see what this war really is-what we have to fear and what we have to do to keep out of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey has again expired.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I attach to my remarks the extracts to which I referred:

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that there is a

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that there is a rather practical question that ought to be asked at this time. We are making appropriations here for submarines. What use do we intend to put them to? What excuse do we expect to give for the construction of these submarines? For what purpose are we bringing them into existence? I caught the idea from the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] that they were not regarded as a very valuable war instrument to be used exclusively for war purposes, but will be an exceedingly valuable instrument for the destruction of commerce upon the seas, and that practically they could not destroy commerce on the seas unless they were permitted to do it without first being seen, without giving warning, without signals, without anything except the proximity of a merchant vessel, because in rising to the top of the water, so that the merchant vessel could see them, if it had a gun it could shoot and sink the submarine and thus save itself. I want to know if it is in the heart of or is the purpose of any gentleman voting for submarines for the United States Navy to use them for the ruthless murder of women and children in the future when in a conflict with any country-Japan or any other? We can not mention the name of any nation that in the past has ever done anything more ruthless, more barbarous, more heathenish, more savage than the sinking of unarmed merchant vessels full of defenseless women and children without the slightest premonition or warning or opportunity to save themselves.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. SIMS.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The whole difficulty, I think, could be obviated if we took the advice of Secretary Lansing in that letter of a year ago; that is to say, that no merchant vessel should be armed. That would compel the submarine to rise and capture it or be treated as a pirate. Just simply prevent them from arming, and then the submarine could rise.

Mr. SIMS. Let me appeal to the gentleman, because I know he has a magnanimous heart and a broad, humane view. Shall we refuse a man in the exercise of his just rights to carry a pistol to defend himself against a robber, because forsooth the robber might kill him if he is armed, in order to rob him, but if he is not armed will take his money and let him go? Now, the use of a submarine to take contraband from a merchant vessel can go no further than visit and search, and if it finds contraband aboard to dump it into the sea. But when it can not save the lives of noncombatants who may be aboard by transporting them to a place of safety, when it has no vessel besides itself upon which it can place those passengers, then shall we say that it shall be permitted to sink that vessel in the middle of the ocean, perchance giving women and children an opportunity to get into little, frail boats, far from shore, which means only a prolonged death, more unmerciful, more savage than to sink them to the bottom of the sea? Submarines should not be permitted to be used for such a purpose, further than visit and search and capture of cargo. But they are exceedingly valuable weapons of war, to be used for legitimate naval war purposes. If the United States is building sub-marines to use against armed battleships and cruisers or to fight back when they are attacked, then go ahead. We had better follow the advice of the most extreme pacifist that ever uttered a word upon the subject rather than convert this Nation into a race of barbarous, warlike savages because some other nation has pursued such a course.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. SIMS. Just wait a moment. Suppose that an army has captured a lot of prisoners of war from its enemy, but conditions are such that they can not be held. The German idea, as expressed by one of their great statesmen, is that "necessity knows no law," and inasmuch as the captors can not keep these men as prisoners of war and not do anything with them except to kill them, that they are permitted to do so on account of military necessity. They had the right under the rules of civilized warfare to take the prisoners. Now, to save themselves from further possible loss by turning the prisoners loose they kill them and charge it up to military necessity! The allies, in population, are several times greater than the central powers. They can keep on recruiting armies indefinitely. Suppose they should say that in order to end this terrible world war as soon as possible we will take no more prisoners, that such a course is a military necessity. It is true the central powers could refuse to take prisoners also, but in the long run the central powers would lose all their fighting men in death, while the allies would have great numbers left. Had not the allies better lose, and had not Germany better succeed than to adopt such a brutal and savage policy under the plea of military necessity? The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. SIMS. I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that his time be extended for five minutes.

Is there objection? There was no objection.

Mr. SIMS. We will disgrace ourselves in all history if we contemplate doing with our submarines that which we have already condemned in other nations and which we always expect to condemn.

I will vote against this bill with everything in it, with all the possibility confronting us of needing what it provides, before I will be a party to passing a law to create an instrument of war when it is contemplated that we will use it to murder defenseless women and children in the dead hours of night, when they are asleep in fancied security and know nothing about it. If we contemplate building machines to drop bombs out of the sky at the dead hours of the night on inoffensive women and children in unarmed and undefended cities, I say I would rather go down in defeat a thousand times than agree to such a course of savagery. I would rather be conquered by some other power than to voluntarily become a savage so black and so hideous as to make all past savagery look white and innocent by comparison. Now, I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I sympathize with the gentleman as to women and children, but I want to ask the gentleman whether it is better to have ammunition ships under the guise of merchantmen coming in with munitions of war to supply the means for shooting up thousands and tens of thou-sands of fathers of children and of husbands of wives left desolate? Is it better to have that or to have one submarine stop them on the way?

Mr. SIMS. That is asking a question and answering it. I said they had a right to stop them and search them for contraband, and pitch the contraband overboard, and if the sub-marine could take care of the passengers and save all noncombatant life, then they could sink the ship if unable to take it to port for action by a prize court.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Assuming the United States should be at war with one of the foreign powers, not naming any, and that one of the allies of the foreign power should be Japan—

Mr. SIMS. Oh, that Japan bugaboo does not scare me. Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. But suppose it should, and there should come across the Pacific Ocean a Japanese merchantman armed for defense only, but loaded with munitions of war for the enemy, landed on the Pacific coast, would the gentleman think it was the duty of the United States to have its little submarine come out and overhaul the merchantman and be destroyed by it, or would he tell it to fight?

Mr. SIMS The gentleman's question contemplates that the little submarine would be destroyed. Why should you send out a submarine when a surface craft could do all that it was lawful to do in the capture and destruction of contraband? Why use a submarine?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The armed merchantman is loaded with munitions of war to destroy men and women and children, and would have one gun, which would be sufficient to send a submarine to the bottom.

Mr. HAMIL/TON of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMS. Yes.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. If a man should send you

Mr. SIMS. Now, no hypothetical questions. Do you want to permit a submarine to murder women and children without warning?

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Will the gentleman wait until ask my question, and then he will know whether it is hypothetical or not.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time may be extended five min-

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Tennessee be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. I want to ask this question, because I think it bears on the present situation, and the gentleman can state if it does not so appear to him. If a man should send the gentleman word that if he, the gentleman from Tennessee, should continue to go peaceably down a certain street that he had been accustomed to go down he would shoot him on sight, would the gentleman from Tennessee stay at home or oll up his gun? [Laughter.]
Mr. SIMS. That is what I call a heavyweight question.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. I call it a pretty fair ques-

Mr. SIMS. Yes; it is so fair that it is very easy to answer. If I had a lawful right to go down that street, and I go down it, and a man murders me, is he any less a murderer?

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. But where are you? Mr. SIMS. I am dead. [Laughter.] But the man who killed me is a murderer.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Good-by. [Laughter.]

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, such questions illustrate nothing. We are making history for the future by which others will judge us; and let nothing be uttered in this debate that would lead others to believe that we under similar circumstances would do what we are condemning other nations for doing. If we will do no better than they are doing in the same circumstances, we should hold our peace and refrain from criticism. If these submarines we are authorizing in this bill are to be used chiefly for destruction of contraband goods, the great bulk of which is conditional, and we are going to blow women and children into atoms without notice, without any opportunity to save their lives in order to sink some ship loaded with Minnesota wheat with which the women and children of our enemies are to be fed—if that is one of the uses which we are going to make of these submarines, let us build no more now and forever. [Applause.]

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, the last speaker, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Sims] is opposed to the building of submarines unless their use is limited to attacks upon warcraft. The trouble with the gentleman from Tennessee and several other speakers who preceded him is that they are the victims of what the President of the United States re-cently called "legalistic reasoning." Some men do not dare Some men do not dare reach any conclusion unless they find some precedence, some authority, some fellow who has reasoned things out for them. These men always look for paragraph 2, section 5, subdivision 4, on page 297 of volume 2, or some other paragraph or section of a textbook. Why not come down to fundamental principles? I claim that there is an international law superior to the law written in the textbooks, superior to the law which grew up when nations of the world were ruled by kings and monarchs not responsible to the people. An ancestor of mine laid down some international and universal law when he handed the Ten Commandments to the world, with the injunction "Thou shalt not kill." [Applause.]

The question is not whether certain weapons of destruction shall be used, and whether their use shall be limited for certain purposes. The question is, Is war justifiable? If it is, then every means is justifiable as an incident to the war. Were this country invaded, I would be in favor of shooting down the stars if the falling stars would crush the enemy. would use any and all means—the more destructive the better. The broad question is, Are you justified in entering the war? And if you are justified use every means that human ingenuity can devise to inflict every damage you can upon the enemy you have to contend with. That is why no sane mind can indorse the idea of war, unless it be a war to repel invasion.

Come down to basic principles and stop quibbling, lawyerlike, about fine points in textbooks on international law. Carlyle calls it chop logic, which is no logic at all.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the attention of the committee for just a moment upon this controversy. agree entirely with what Dr. TEMPLE said about international law and his interpretation of the limits of the submarine in general. I think every Member must recognize that our embarrassment here is due to the fact that there is no international law covering the new weapon of warfare, the submarine, and while we have taken our position upon an adherence to international practice, the question is up to us whether we as a neutral power during the progress of war will attempt to change international law affecting the rights either of neutrals or belligerents in such a manner as to cover these new weapons, when we are aware that such change would be an unneutral act. That is a delicate question. I have exercised freedom of criti-cism upon the floor of this House of Great Britain for changing the laws of contraband during the war, which is not permitted under international law. I have criticized Great Britain for extending her blockade to neutral coasts, which is not permitted in international law. I have criticized Great Britain upon the ground that, while the blockade is in existence, it is not entirely effective, because she was using these markets in neutral coasts that were blockaded against us for the sale of her own goods, which is not permitted under international law. freely criticized the mother country for repudiation of the rule that neutral flags cover neutral goods. So what I say of the submarine is not because I am biased in favor of or against any particular nation. I think that all Members will admit that the belligerent nations are violating international law on both sides with little regard for the rights of neutral countries, and the question for the American Congress is, Shall we permit, if we can help it, the violation of American rights under international law? Knowing that international law does not cover these new methods, like the submarine, and realizing the delicacy of the situation, the very first thing that our Government did after the war opened, and it did it two days after the war opened, was to address a note simultaneously to both belligerents, asking them whether they would agree upon the declaration of London as the law of naval warfare. That was because the declaration of London had not been signed by some of these belligerents, including England, and it was thought if these belligerents would agree to the declaration of London we would cover the new methods by this agreement and thus avoid many troublesome questions. But, unfortunately, Great Britain de-clined to agree to it. It might be added that Germany agreed to Then we had to withdraw our solicitation, because abide by it. both of the belligerent powers would not agree. Another question came up, and it was upon the 19th of February, 1915. Government addressed a note simultaneously to both belligerents, asking if they would not agree upon a schedule of rights in naval warfare. Please note the second item of that suggestion:

That neither will use submarines to attack merchant vessels of any nationality except to enforce the right of visit and search.

It might be asked, Why did our Government address both sides upon that point? I answer, it was because the submarine is a new weapon, and it was thought if we would have to abide by old international law, the submarine would be virtually useless; and, therefore, not being covered by international law, our Government attempted to bring it under the agreement and thus define the rights of this new weapon. Germany came back with this answer:

The German Government would undertake not to use their sub-marines to attack mercantile of any flag except when necessary to enforce the right of visit and search. Should the enemy nationality of the vessel or the presence of contraband be ascertained, submarine would proceed in accordance with the general rules of international law.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FESS. It was on the 28th of February that this answer came from Germany. On the 1st of March, 1915, Great Britain answered our proposals, and her answer was to the effect that Germany was not using her submarines in accordance with international practice, and therefore Great Britain would not agree to be embarrassed by accepting the proposal of our Government. It must be admitted that the British Government was within her legal right to refuse our proposal. Since our Government could not induce the two belligerents to agree to defined procedure for the new weapon, it was left open to us to decide how we would consider the submarine as a war vessel. The question of arming merchantmen defensively against the new weapon came up. On the 18th of January, after two attempts upon the part of our Government to get the belligerents to agree upon a method of naval warfare, our Secretary of State addressed a confidential note, not to the belligerents, as I had unwittingly stated in yesterday's Record, but a confidential note to Great Britain, and at the same time the same note to Italy, to France, and to Russia, and six days later the same note to Japan. That is the famous January 18 note, and it was a suggestion not to the belligerent world, not to Germany or her allies, but a suggestion to Great Britain, who controlled the sea, that they agree upon certain rules for armed merchantmen; and in it the Secretary of State, speaking for our Government, informed them that we are considering the proposition of regarding armed merchantmen as naval auxiliary vessels. That is in It was a confidential note, a solicitation to the mistress of the sea to make certain modifications of naval customs to avoid possible consequences. It was not an invitation to all the countries, but a third attempt to get the ruler of the ocean to agree upon a program. That attempt was a recognition of our obligation to abide by international agreement unless a modification can be agreed upon.

Mr. Chairman, I am not inclined to defend the administration; on the other hand, I have freely criticized its economic policies, but there seems to me to have been read into the note of January 18 something that is not warranted. It was a third attempt upon the part of our Government to get the ruler of the sea to agree to either disarm the merchant vessel or to state under what conditions it should be armed and how the arma-This in itself was an admission that a ment was to be used. custom, though out of date, could not be forbidden without the agreement of the powers claiming its right to use it. Britain did not see fit to agree to the note. Unfortunately, the note was made public, and it is being quoted everywhere as the position of our Government as if publicly proclaimed to the world. It could not be the position of our Government, for this reason: If we stand on international law and demand of others to be so guided in their conduct as belligerents, then we can not change it in the midst of war without the agreement of the belligerent powers, and in case such agreement can not be reached as is the result of this armed-merchantmen controversy an armed merchantman will be accorded entrance to our ports as a merchantman, free of the restrictions of an auxiliary naval vessel, and must be accorded the right upon the sea, and our embarrassment is, what are we to do in case a submarine attacks American vessels or a belligerent merchantman carrying American citizens? If we hold to international law, then we are not free upon our own motion to change it in time of war without the agreement of the belligerents, which agreement we vainly sought; and, on the other hand, if we do not consider these defensively armed merchant vessels as auxiliary naval vessels, as under former practice they are not, then an American citizen exercising his right to go upon them, whether he should do it or not-and I express a wish that he would not subject his country to the frightful possibilities of what will follow, notwithstanding the fact that he has the right to do itsents the issue of national honor. The question which the Congress must answer is, What will we do when he exercises his right under international law, admitting it is a foolish thing to do, and goes upon the sea and suffers death? To announce that he goes on his own risk and his country will not protect him is an open acknowledgment of a surrender of our neutral rights, consequences of which will be hard to sound. To thus tie up the sea would produce untold suffering from many angles.

Mr. BENNET. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BENNET. Has the gentleman made any comment on the memorandum made by the State Department for the President, dated March 25, 1916, and made public April 19, 1916?

Mr. FESS. I have not made any comment, but I have the

Mr. BENNET. The gentleman is familiar with that?

Mr. FESS. Yes; I am familiar with the contents of the matter referred to. The point, though, I will say to my friend from New York, is that we are not free, without the consent of the belligerent powers, to make any change of the customs and procedure of international law while the war is on, I said before the gentlemen came in from your committee that we had made three vain efforts to induce the warring powers to agree upon a method of naval procedure.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. FESS. That being the case, fellow Members, I do not think the Government is subject to the criticisms in this par-ticular instance that have been offered. To command our undisputed rights in international practice and procedure and still maintain a strict adherence to neutrality and thus offer no offense to any nation is the duty of the Nation and is the problem now confronting us.

Mr. FREEMAN rose.

Mr. PADGETT. How much time does the gentleman desire? Mr. FREEMAN. Five minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent Mr. PADGETT. that all debate upon the paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that all debate upon the paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I object. Mr. FREEMAN. Mr. Chairman, while it is true that in most games the rules can not be changed during the progress of the game, yet it is equally true that in the game of war the rules of international law have been constantly changed by the proclamations and regulations of powerful belligerents, and also by the proclamations of powerful neutrals, and such changes have afterwards become recognized and well-established interna-The United States of America, a neutral nation, now has it in its power to make a most essential, a most beneficial change in the rules of international law. We have now the most available, the most necessary neutral ports of the It has always been true that war vessels of belligerent nations have been denied privileges in neutral ports, and it is true that the peaceful merchantmen of the belligerent nations have been granted certain privileges in neutral ports. It appears during the progress of this war that a merchantman inoffensively armed, in accordance with international law of the past, is now practically a battleship for offensive purposes against a submarine at the moment it emerges from the depths. It is most desirable for the United States of America to make full, efficacious, and yet lawful use of submarines in case of war with other nations. [Applause.] Therefore we should establish this rule, that our neutral ports shall not be open to an armed merchantman of belligerent nations. [Applause.]

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. FREEMAN. Our trade may be injured, our trade may be crippled, but if we can establish this principle that armed vessels shall no longer be considered peaceful merchantmen it will redound immensely to the protection and security of our Nation in the future.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. FREEMAN. I can not yield just at the present time. The submarine should have the right in perfect safety to come to the surface of the ocean and to challenge without danger a peaceful merchantman to stop. It should have the right in safety to visit and search a vessel held to by it. I hope the time will soon come when all nations will recognize that the submarine must allow the crew and passengers—men, women, and children—to proceed in safety, and I apprehend that at the conclusion of this war, and perhaps during it, the rule may be established that a submarine may without danger order the crew of a merchantman to throw overboard munitions of war and contraband and then must permit the ship to proceed in safety to a port if its destruction would endanger lives. We may, by taking a firm stand upon this matter, change the rules of international law even during the progress of this war, so that submarines may warn without danger, may search and visit, and may destroy munitions of war, and yet the lives of noncombatants may not be put in jeopardy. [Applause.]

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, there are certain statements made by the gentleman who has just preceded me I do not want to let go unchallenged either as statements of fact or of law. It is not true, in my judgment, that a neutral has the right to make international law during hostilities and by so doing that it can thus change the rights of belligerents or of itself. Any change of international law by a neutral that serves to inure to the benefit of either belligerent is in itself an unfriendly act and destroys the character of neutrality of the nation making it. [Applause.] Now, it is also not true, in my judgment, that under international law the arming of a merchant ship for defensive purposes deprives it of its character of a merchant ship with the right as such to enter the ports of neutral nations and to use those ports. For this Government to undertake to say that the arming of merchant ships for defensive purposes was sufficient to deny to those ships the privilege of our ports would be to do a most unneutral act that would be little short of an actual act of war, and for men to argue that we can change the rules according as we from day to day may consider it to our advantage, or to the advantage of the world at large, is to bring even worse confusion in the consideration of these questions than now exists. Now, there are certain things that must be remembered, and one of them is this: The fact that a new weapon is put into use at any period of time does not change the rights of neutrals and of innocent people who are noncombatants. Simply by having brought the submarine to its present use, you can not change the right of a noncombatant to have his life protected and not to have it destroyed at the will of one of the combatants. That is the real fundamental fact that underlies this whole controversy, and it should not be lost sight of in the interest of humanity and in the interest of the rights of neutrals.

A submarine has the right to visit and search. It has the right to capture an enemy merchantman or a neutral mer-chantman with contraband. It has the right to sink the merchantman if the merchantman undertakes to escape or to resist, but if it does not undertake to resist or to escape it can not sink that merchantman without making provision for the lives of the noncombatants aboard it. That is not new international law; that is old and existing international law. The fact that it happens to work to the disadvantage of one belligerent as against another may be unfortunate for them, but can not determine and should not influence the rights or the position of a neutral nation. All America has insisted upon and all this controversy centers around has been that the right of life of innocent passengers, noncombatants, shall be respected by bel-That right she never can afford to surrender. [Apligerents. plause.]

There is another thing. It is not true, and it never has been true, that travel upon merchant ships is simply at the caprice of men. Some men may travel when they had better stay at home, and should stay at home, but no nation engaged as we are in world business can long maintain itself which says to all its naturals, "You can not go outside the boundaries of the And so it is putting a false complexion upon things when you say that our citizens should stay at home in order to avoid all danger of complications. There have been hun-dreds of thousands of men abroad, Americans, that had to come home. There have been men here who have had to go abroad. For this country to say that we will not protect them in a plain right would be to abrogate the very essence of sovereignty. [Applause.]

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I have never allowed myself to become frenzied over the question of preparedness, but I consider the submarine, and an ample supply of them, as one of the most effective and necessary implements and instruments in our system of preparedness. Furthermore, all the knowledge I have gathered from reading history and law compllations and treaties I have found this fact, that interna-tional law, so called, is simply the actions, conduct, and proclamations of some warfaring nation that was strong enough to enforce it in war and make it a precedent for peace. I find, furthermore, that the present code of international law, so to speak, was compiled in a series of notes by Jefferson, Jay, Crittenden, and Marshall, and found its way into the common-consent customs of the earth, and is practically to-day our international law. We did not have any submarines then; we did not have any electric-current boats, and conditions are changed. We will suppose in this case that Germany is able to come out victorious in this war. She will establish the precedent that you have got to disarm your ships and put up a signal, or submarines will have the right to sink them and drown the men and women who are aboard. She will set a new precedent in the world's international law, and it will become an international precedent, hence international rule.

Now, the right of travel is absolute, and the right to trade is absolute, and long before Germany's submarine zone was laid England established a war zone, and dragged over 3,000 bales of cotton from neutrals, put it behind her veto line, dragged over 40,000,000 pounds of packers' meat behind it, in total disregard of law, and we did not raise any row with her, notwithstanding she willfully violated international law. Why? cause the power that controls the press in this country did not bring out a thousand headlines and call it an insult.

Friends, fellow citizens, this Government must recognize the theory of contributory negligence, and when some man gets on a belligerent ship armed for aggression as well as defense, armed for offense as well as defense, you need not expect a submarine to give it notice. To give it notice is to invite destruction, and the submarine commander will not voluntarily commit suicide for himself and his crew. Do you suppose that I in charge of a submarine boat would voluntarily commit suicide by notifying a ship that has a gun that can sink me in five minutes when I have no power to resist? No, sir. I will either stay under the water and run away and hide, or I will shoot a torpedo under it and make mincemeat out of its men and giblets out of its timbers. Those are the questions that confront us.

Now, what will America do under such conditions? I want the submarine and I want it for its most effective use, and I want us to establish a precedent that will allow us to use it honorably by forcing innocent ships to put up innocent signals. abolish all arms or be treated as enemies. My brothers, I thank you. [Applause.]

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Chairman—
Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I renew my request, with the consent of the gentleman, that with the conclusion of the gentleman's time, five minutes, debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that at the expiration of five minutes all debate on the pending paragraph and amendments thereto be closed. Is there objection?

Mr. HARDY. Will not the gentleman give me five minutes? Mr. PADGETT. Then I will say 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman amends his request by substituting 10 for 5 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Chairman, I very much enjoyed the statement of the distinguished gentleman from Kentucky a few minutes ago when he very cleverly showed one side of this armed merchantman proposition. We all know that there were two well-defined sides to the status of armed merchantmen when Congress and the country had that controversy up a little more than a year ago.

The Secretary of State first held that the arming of a merchantman with any guns sufficient to destroy a submarine or a destroyer or any other warship naturally made it an auxiliary naval war vessel.

Mr. GORDON. When did the Secretary of State hold that?
Mr. BRITTEN. In his first opinion.
Mr. GORDON. He did not do any such thing. He never held any such opinion.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will permit, the Secretary of State did not do that. He sent a note to certain Governments suggesting that line of reasoning, and asking whether they would agree to certain constructions; but the Secretary of State did not put that construction on the law, and he could not have done it, and if he had it would not have been binding.

Mr. BRITTEN. The Secretary of State did suggest that very thing, although it was never made effective.

But after all, Mr. Chairman, we have got to consider this matter from a fair and reasonable basis. When you put a 2 or a 3 or a 4 inch gun on a merchant ship you make it superior the submarine before it is sent out on the high seas loaded with millions of rounds of ammunition for the destruction of one of the belligerents. Is it quite fair to say that a single American passenger can insure the safe delivery of an enormous cargo of munitions of war to the other side, because we say to Germany, "You do not dare touch that ship; there is an American on it.

The distinguished gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Cooper] very cleverly exemplified that folly in the event of our being at war with Japan. Does any gentleman on the floor of the House say that if we were at war with Japan, and a great Japanese merchant liner was sending millions of rounds of ammunition to a base in Mexico to destroy our boys and it had on board three or four Chinese citizens, that our submarine commanders would say, "Don't sink that ship; there are neutrals on board"? If he did and allowed that cargo of ammunition to go into Mexico to find final resting place in the breasts of our boys, what do you think Congress would say of him? He would be immediately court-martialed. There is no question about that.

However, the inconsistency of the State Department on this whole matter is no worse than the inconsistency of the Navy Department, which now and always has been lopsided. me call your attention to one or two of the inconsistencies in the bill that is now pending before the House. A year ago Admiral Strauss came before the Committee on Naval Affairs and said, "We need more than a million dollars for anti-aircraft guns for naval-station defense; we have none." What do you suppose became of that appropriation? The Secretary of the Navy struck it out. He said it was not necessary, and out it came. To-day the Secretary asks for that very same thing. Was it not evident a year ago that they were necessary? His bureau chief said we had none. That is an evidence of the inconsistency and lack of business administration that characterizes the Navy Department.

Then, on the question of torpedoes. The Committee on Naval Affairs inspected the Government torpedo plant at Newport, R. I., the only one in the country outside of a private corporation, the Bliss Co. When we returned every member of the committee was impressed with the need of more torpedoes. We had only about 700 in the service, which would be about one and one-half to each torpedo tube. In other words, we are sending ships out on the high seas, ships whose destructive qualities are dependent entirely on the torpedo, and we put only two or three torpedoes on each of them. One and onehalf torpedoes per tube, and when they have shot those they must come home. They have no more torpedoes.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes.

I want to say that the gentleman is far, far, Mr. PADGETT.

far afield from the facts. [Applause.]
Mr. BRITTEN. Well, I will show the distinguished chairman of the committee how far afield I am from the facts. We on the committee have been calling for more torpedoes. We have been requesting larger appropriations. When I say "we" I am talking about the Republican side of the committee, for the Democratic side of the committee has always been under the thumb and subservient to the wishes and to the dictation of the Secretary of the Navy, and that is the reason why we have any number of requests before us to-day calling for emergency appropriations of millions and millions of dollars for things that are urgently needed by the Navy.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois

has expired.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Chairman, may I have five minutes

The CHAIRMAN. The time has been fixed by the committee

Mr. BRITTEN. I ask unanimous consent that I may have five minutes

Mr. PADGETT. I must object now, because the gentleman can have other time.

Mr. BRITTEN. I would like to have my remarks appear in continuity, because the chairman of the committee just indicated that my statement was not correct.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for five minutes more, notwithstanding the limit fixed by the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Illinois may proceed for five minutes more, notwithstanding the time limit fixed by the committee. Is there objection?

Mr. HARDY. Not to come out of those ten minutes? The CHAIRMAN. No. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BRITTEN. Now, then, the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee who presides over the committee-and I have the very highest regard for him and for his ability-indicated that I was wrong when I said there was a great shortage of torpedoes Let us see what Admiral Strauss had to say when in the Navy. he appeared before our committee last year and requested an appropriation of $3,285,000 for torpedoes and appliances, and then let us see what the committee gave him.

Mr. LONGWORTH. How much do they cost?

Mr. BRITTEN. Eight thousand dollars for the 21-inch and $6,000 for the 18-inch. Mind you, we have boats on the high seas, boats like destroyers and submarines, whose main means of offense is the torpedo, although they have small guns. out torpedoes they are practically useless. We have been sending them out on the high seas with only three or four torpedoes in them and nothing else but small-caliber guns. The Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance of the Navy, the best posted man on ordnance in the Navy to-day, Admiral Strauss, told us that his ordnance in the Navy to-day, Admiral Strauss, told us that his estimate of appropriations for torpedoes was $3,800,000, and the Secretary cut that down to $800,000, on the theory that we did not need so many. The result is that many of our cruisers and submarines continue to go about inadequately supplied with antiquated torpedoes, simply because the Secretary of the Navy did not want to spend the money.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes.

Mr. CALLAWAY. If they were in any danger at all they would not go with the torpedoes, would they

Mr. BRITTEN. If they would not go with their equipment of torpedoes they are useless in battle? Would you keep them at home? That is the point I am trying to make. The chairman of the committee says I am in error. I can prove that we have ships on the high seas to-day with torpedoes that can not go more than 2,000 yards.

Mr. CALLAWAY. We have not had any necessity for using even those yet.

Mr. BRITTEN. From the gentleman's viewpoint we will never sed any. Now, the Secretary of the Navy comes before Congress with requests for a dozen or more emergency appropriations, merely indicating the lack of foresight of the department. These matters have all been pointed out by experts in the service qualified to know. Why, the chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee will to-day or Monday request $800,000 for the Newport torpedo works. We have been talking about that for years, and getting nowhere; but now we see an enemy staring us in the face. We see the prospect of a fight. I hope to God the President will continue to remain too proud to fight; because an American life on the high seas should not be a bit more valuable to us than an American life in Mexico, and we did not fight there. So there will be no greater reason for fighting now.

Mr. SIMS. The President has never alleged himself to be too proud to fight.

Mr. BRITTEN. Pardon me, I thought he had.

Mr. HOPWOOD. I was present in Philadelphia and heard the President's speech, and he used those exact words.

Mr. SIMS. As printed it does not read that way. Mr. HOPWOOD. I was there and I heard the words "too proud to fight."

Mr. BRITTEN. What I want to bring to the attention of the House is not whether a man is too proud to fight or not. want to show the thorough inconsistency not only of the State Department but of the Navy Department. They are 50 per cent right on everything, because they are always on both sides of every question. The chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee is going to ask this House to incorporate in the present bill an $800,000 emergency appropriation for the Newport torpedo works—at a time when labor and material are almost prohibitive.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield just there?

Mr. BRITTEN. I will for a question, but not for something to be read out of the record. The chairman of the committee can have all the time he wants.

Mr. PADGETT. I want to correct the gentleman's statement.

Mr. BRITTEN. I got the figures, and I took them out of the hearings.

Mr. PADGETT. I want to read from the hearings of last year just what Admiral Strauss said.

Mr. BRITTEN. All right; the gentleman can read it in his own time, if he pleases.

Mr. PADGETT. All right, Mr. BRITTEN. During t During the consideration of this bill the chairman of the committee has presented what might be termed emergency appropriations running probably to $10,000,000, and the Lord only knows how many more.

Mr. BROWNING. Fifteen million dollars.

Mr. BRITTEN. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BROWNING] says $15,000,000. And what is the occasion? It simply means that the Navy Department up to the present time has been blinded by its pacifism, a pacifism of the Bryan type that will accept an authorization from Congress to-day and pray to God that they will not be able to spend it to-morrow, or any other time, in the hope that some happy millenium is [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me a little strange that so many gentlemen who apparently joined in applauding the sentiments uttered by the President on his last appearance before this body have to-day for some reason found it necessary to attack all those sentiments, and to present for a new discussion and again seek to approve the McLemore resolution which struction proclamation, that side as well as ours almost solidly indorsed and applauded him. Now a goodly number of Republicans are putting on a new and different front.

Mr. BRITTEN rose.

Mr. HARDY. I rose just for one thing, but I want to say to the gentleman who seeks to interrupt me that I have only five minutes, and I will not have time to reply to what was said by him. The gentleman [Mr. BRITTEN] seems to be affected by Danielsphobia. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I have never heard him make an argument here or address the House for five minutes without attacking Mr. Daniels, notwithstanding every statement of his attacking the Secretary has been denied and refuted, and notwithstanding the Secretary has been praised for his splendid service by Admiral Dewey, who has now gone to the reward of the greatest of our naval commanders. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Nevertheless the gentleman from Illinois persists and rises in his place upon all occasions to beslime and belittle the Secretary of the Navy. I do not think it is worth replying to. [Applause on the Democratic side.] What I rose to speak of is the proposition the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. FREEMAN] made a moment ago, that the duty of this Government is to deny our ports to the entry of every merchant vessel armed for defense. His statement was very deliberate and clear that merchant vessels armed for self-defense only ought to be treated by us as war vessels. Gentlemen, let me call your attention to the fact that perhaps 90 per cent of the merchant vessels that have been sunk by submarines have been unarmed, and that many of these have been sunk without warning and without providing for the safety of passengers or crews, while many armed vessels have been able to escape destruction. And finally let me call your attention to what I think the effect of such a ruling by our Government would be. It would destroy not only the commerce of the belligerent nations and starve England to death in a short while, but it would destroy the commerce of the United States herself, our surplus grain and cotton would rot in the fields and at the wharves, and America as completely shut off from the world as if we were blocked by enemies on all our sea coasts. And I want to tell you that if submarine warfare is to be conducted in the way indicated by the German note last issued America ought to arm every merchant vessel she sends upon the seas for defense, and there is no question they will be safer armed than unarmed.

If we wish to destroy our own commerce, let us adopt the rule that the gentleman [Mr. Freeman] suggested and send our merchantmen out unarmed, an easy prey and sure victim of the To make this clear, let me show you how it would act. The German submarine might be hunting and seeking to capture only English or French vessels, and might prefer to sink without warning only armed English or French vessels. But it is plain that any ship in danger of destruction will resort to any ruse for safety and will hoist any flag that might mean safety. So the English or French ship will hoist the American flag. It is clear also that when the German submarine sights So the English or French ship will hoist the American a vessel bearing an American flag she will not know whether it is an English or American—an armed or unarmed—ship and she can not know except by a search, and if she be not required to make this search but may destroy by a sudden and stealthy shot, what can you have except the indiscriminate destruction of all merchant ships on the ocean, just as we have been having since February 1? If it be sought to excuse or justify the destruction of a merchant ship bearing noncombatants-men, women, and children-without warning and by the method of the assasin, the stab in the dark, on the ground that that is the only way the submarine can effectively operate, the only way in which it can successfully win triumph for its nation, I answer that the same excuse or justification can be given for poisoning the wells and streams of an enemy country. The deliberate murder of sleeping or unsuspecting noncombatants can not be justified. I ought not to leave this question without saying that it seems to me the sinking of a vessel carrying munitions of war presents a different question. In my judgment, our noncombatant citizens not only ought to keep off such vessels but ought to be warned by our Government to keep off of them.

I will not elaborate this proposition, but I think any nation would perhaps resort to any method, open or secret, to stop or destroy a shipload or a trainload of rifles or shot and shell on its way to the enemy. If we would do it ourselves, we can not ask another nation to refrain from doing it.

But, to get back to the proposition of the gentleman from Connecticut, the gentleman ought to know that the very clear distinction, always recognized heretofore by all nations, between a war vessel and a merchant vessel armed for self-preservation I and protection is involved in the answer to the question. What do they do with their weapons?

If a merchant vessel, so called, armed for defense, adopts warlike measures by attacking the war vessels or the merchant vessels of an enemy or marauding on the seas, if she goes beyond her legitimate business as a carrier, then she becomes a war vessel; but so long as merchant vessels armed for defense confine their labors to the carrying and transporting of commodities and do not engage in war, they are entitled, under the laws of humanity and the laws of nations, to arm as strongly as they see fit in order to defend themselves from attack. Neither the size nor the character of her guns affect a vessel's right to defend herself. It is what she engages in, not how she arms herself, that affects her status. Her right is to defend herself. That right is absolute and unlimited by the law of nations, and that law can not ever be affected by the character of the vessel against which it is proposed to be exercised. Not only so, but by international law there are only three conditions under which a merchant vessel may be sunk: First, when she is resisting capture; second, when she is fleeing to escape capture; and third, when she has been captured and the safety of her crew and passengers provided. No nation has a right to sink a merchant vessel except under one of these conditions. And we as a Nation must assert our rights to defend our merchant vessels against the unlawful attack by any nation on the earth, whether we are at war with them or not, and must insist that neither Germany nor any other nation sink any of our merchant vessels except under one of the conditions I have named. That is, the proposition and the arguments that are being made here to-day seem to lose sight of the fact that we, as a Nation, are interested in this question as deeply as any nation in the world. Let us close our ports to vessels armed for defense, and what happens? We can not arm our own vessels for defense, and we must tamely submit if our ships are sunk without warning, as they will be. No, Mr. Chairman, I reach the conclusion that submarines, while useful in war, must confine their destructive efforts to war vessels and war vessels alone. Otherwise the time will come when America, although she be provided with submarines herself, must close her ports to the commerce of the world and cease to send out her commodities to the markets of the world. That is the proposition we must stand against. That is the proposition we stand against in adhering to the President's last message. We assert the right of merchant vessels to travel the seas over, and arm themselves to the extent that may be necessary in order to defend themselves against attack. To hold otherwise to-day is to hold that all the peaceful commerce of the world must stop, or else be convoyed by the battleships of the nations to which it belongs, and thus we bring all the presently neutral nations into the war to protect their commerce.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.
Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, in view of the statements made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Britten] I ask for five minutes, notwithstanding the rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks for five minutes, the rule to the contrary notwithstanding. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, in view of the statements made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Britten] a few moments ago, when I asked to read into the Record an extract, and at that time he declined to allow me, I want to read from the hearings of the committee last year, on page 1193, from the statement of Admiral Strauss, Chief of the Bureau of Ordnauce. He savs:

The torpedo situation is well in hand. We have now actually on hand or in process of manufacture torpedoes sufficient for the full allowance and reserve for every ship that we possess or has been authorized. The torpedoes being manufactured will be ready for the ships as soon as they are put in commission. In this year's estimate I did ask for a large sum of money to provide replacement torpedoes for the three battleships of the Ohio class, for six armored crubers, and for destroyers. The above-mentioned vessels now have 4,000-yard

He said 8.000-vard torpedoes-

And the 4,000-yard torpedoes will not be wasted, as they will be kept in stock for the present and future submarines, a class of vessels upon which such torpedoes would be entirely efficient.

The department cut this item out of the items. However, the payments include $800,000 that will be utilized for the manufacture of replacement torpedoes, principally to carry out a general scheme we have had in hand now two or three years by which the three dread-naught ships are to have their torpedoes increased in range. This money will complete that scheme and, I hope, will provide sufficient funds to give new torpedoes to the nine small submarines in the Philippines.

Mr. RELITTIEN. Will the resultance of the sufficient of the sufficient of the provided sufficient of the sufficient

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman, before he closes, tell the committee from what amount this $800,000 was deducted?

Mr. PADGETT. I do not remember. Mr. BRITTEN. The gentleman has it right there. million three hundred and forty-five thousand dollars, was it not? No; I think it was over three millions.

Mr. PADGETT. A greater amount was asked, and it was not given because it would not complete it.

Now, then, I want to state that the range fixed by the General Board for the submarine for fighting is 1,000 yards, and instructions have been given that the submarines are expected to get within 1,000 yards of the opposing ship in case of necessity. And yet they are provided with 4,000-yard torpedoes.

Now, then, gentlemen, permit me to speak of a little thing that occurred, in which I become a little reminiscent. The gentleman's continuous attacks brought to my mind an occurrence said to have taken place in the State of Virginia during the Civil War. The great and magnificent army of Gen. Grant was moving forward in grand and magnificent splendor and gran-Thousands upon thousands of infantry were marching forward, troop after troop of cavalry were going by. The can-non drawn by horses numbered in the hundreds and the great caravan of wagons containing stores were moving on. and then a wagon wheel might break down that would delay things for a little while, or a cannon might get mired in the mud and stop the procession a little while, but the whole great procession was moving forward in a grand and glorious phalanx. Little Johnnie was sitting out on the fence watching it all, and he had a little dog with a big name called Tige. Tige was running and jumping and snapping and snarling and growling and barking all up and down the fence. Little Johnnie got very much excited and cried out, "Dad, come here quick, Tige wants to bite the army." [Laughter and applause.] The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

All time has expired.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 21 for the purpose of offering an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to recur to page 21 of the bill to offer an Is there objection?

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the amendment reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Page 21, line 6, strike out "$100,000" and insert "$900,000."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman make some explanation as to the need of this increase of $800,000 in this item for machinery for torpedo factory

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I will state to the House that while we were passing this portion of the bill I received a request for this increase, but they have not given me any explanation or reasons for it. I did not offer the amendment at that time because I did not have at that time a full statement of the reasons. I passed it over without offering the amendment. Since then I have received from the Secretary of the Navy a letter explaining the situation, and, accompanying that letter of the Secretary, a statement from the officer in charge, Commander Robison, who is in charge of the manufacture of torpedoes at the Newport Station. I ask unanimous consent that the letter of the Secretary and the statement may be read, pending the reservation of the point of order, for the information of the House.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Chairman, before that is done will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. BRITTEN. Referring to the gentleman's little story, it looks as if Tige had bitten somebody. The request is here for $800,000 that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Britten] said was coming, and if there is any reason for this request now for $800,000 or $900,000 for a torpedo plant, why did the committee, controlled by the distinguished gentleman, have only $100,000 when he brought the bill into the House?

Mr. PADGETT. Because that was the amount that was submitted at that time, and new conditions have arisen since then which have changed the situation.

Mr. BRITTEN. What are the new conditions? Mr. PADGETT. The gentleman has been discussing them

Mr. PADGETT. The gentieman has been discussing them very largely here this morning.

Mr. BRITTEN. I thought they might have had something to do with the gentleman's little dog Tige.

Mr. PADGETT. I do not think that the bark had anything to do with it. [Laughter.] Mr. Chairman, I ask that the letter of the Secretary and the statement of Commander Robison be read for the information of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unantmous consent that the Clerk read the statements referred to. Is there objection?

There was no objection. The Clerk read as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, February 7, 1917.

Washington, February 7, 1917.

Hon. Lemuel P. Padgett, M. C.,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

My Dear-Mr. Padgett: I am sending you a request from the torpedo station that shows how it is possible by spending $800,000 for the improvement of that plant to save the Government $2,000,000 on an initial order for torpedoes. The average price of torpedoes purchased under current contracts is a about $8,300. The estimated cost as given by Commander Robison for torpedoes manufactured at the torpedo station is not more than $6,000.

As regards patents, the E. W. Bliss Co. holds certain patents as estimated by the Bureau of Ordnance is not more than $250. As the Bliss Co. has the free use of a good many features developed by naval officers, there has been in the past a free interchange between that company and ourselves in the use of patents. Whether this condition will continue, of course, I can not state; but we certainly would not pay them a cent of royalty without litigation.

In view of the circumstances I recommend and request that to the appropriation bill be added a special appropriation under the Bureau of Ordnance of $800,000, to be immediately available, for extension of facilities at the torpedo station.

Faithfully, yours,

JOSEPHUS DANIELS.

NAVAL TORPEDO STATION, Newport, R. I., February 7, 1917.

To: Navy Department (Via Chief of Bureau of Ordnance), Subject: Torpedo manufacturing project.

To: Navy Department

(Via Chief of Bureau of Ordnance).

Subject: Torpedo manufacturing project.

1. The torpedo station has recently completed the manufacture of $3.370.71 each. The "red ink" charges of this lot of torpedoes amounts to $931.39 each, making the gross unit cost to the Government $4,302.30. The "red ink" charges above referred to include all known costs not legally chargeable to the invoice price of the torpedo, such as officers' pay and allowances, leave and holiday, clerks, draftsmen, planners, disability, storekeeping costs, experiments, maintenance and repairs of plants, insurance, depreciation, interest, pay of enlisted men used in tests, and maintenance of test barge and launches.

2. The rate of manufacture of torpedoes during the month of Janufacture of torpedoes the compacture of torpedoes the torpedo station is now under contract to manufacture is 610. Deliveries extend to December 31, 1918.

3. It is possible approximately 450 torpedoes per annum. The total number of torpedoes that to December 31, 1918.

3. It is possible approximately to double the present output of the torpedo station without by any means doubling the plant investment, Detailed study of the conditions shows that approximately $800,000 will be required for this development. This is in addition to the usual sums that it is understood are included in the pending naval appropriation bill. It includes an allowance for all outlays necessary, such as buildings and machine tools to give the torpedo station a normal output of a complet torpedo each four hours, or approximately 750 torpedoes per annum (10-hour day). This normal increased output can be further enhanced by purchase of a very considerable number of the further enhanced by purchase of a very considerable number of the further enhanced by purchase of a very considerable minute of the furt

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I would like to inquire as to the percentage of torpedoes that will be furnished by Government plants when this equipment is provided?

Mr. PADGETT. It would enlarge the percentage, but I can not tell the gentleman just how much would be awarded to private contract and how much would be manufactured by the Government. This letter states that if the enlargement is made they can manufacture 1,000 torpedoes by the end of 1919.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman has no idea as to what percentage will be manufactured in Government establishments as compared with those manufactured by private plants?

Mr. PADGETT. We are manufacturing now about a hundred a year at the Washington Gun Factory here in this city, and in the bill, as already approved by the committee, we have made provision for about doubling that, so that they expect to make 200 here at the gun factory

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. PADGETT. Yes.
Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman spoke of eight submarines in the citation from Admiral Strauss, in the Philip-

Mr. PADGETT. I believe it said nine, if I remember right. Mr. GARDNER. I thought it was eight. Can the gentleman tell us how many torpedoes each one of those submarines in the Philippines can carry when it leaves its base?

Mr. PADGETT. I have forgotten the number of tubes those submarines have—whether it is four or two.

Mr. GARDNER. I thought the A boats had two tubes. Does the gentleman remember how many torpedoes there is room for in those A and B boats?

Mr. PADGETT. They carry a certain number. They have never indicated publicly what they carry. They have told me personally, but I do not feel at liberty to disclose it.

Mr. GARDNER. It is a fact that all of the earlier types of submarines do not carry in excess of four torpedoes, is it not?

Mr. PADGETT. Per tube.

Mr. GARDNER. Two in the tubes and four extra, is the only type; or is the gentleman not at liberty to say?

Mr. PADGETT. I would not want to say the exact number.
Mr. GARDNER. Then I will ask the gentleman another question. How long would it take to make a single torpedo if you had your plant all ready? How long would it take from the time the work started to make one of the 21-inch torpedoes, if we had an unlimited plant?

Mr. PADGETT. Well, you could make a great many in the same time

Mr. GARDNER. I understand that.

While you are making one. Mr. PADGETT.

Mr. GARDNER. I understand the operation.
Mr. PADGETT. I think the time of construction, as I remember heretofore, has been something like a year.

Mr. GARDNER. For instance, suppose our Newport torpedo station were to be blown up and that we built a new one and got all the machinery in. From the time we got that machinery in how long would it be before we could turn out the first torpedo?

Mr. PADGETT. I think it has been taking about a year on the eight-hour basis.

Mr. GARDNER. Suppose we were to speed up?
Mr. PADGETT. If we were to speed it up it could be made, should say, in six or eight months. There is a great deal of that that is very delicate machinery.

Mr. GARDNER. I know it is.

Mr. PADGETT. The gentleman understands that. Mr. GARDNER. And I am not criticizing; I am trying to get information on this.

Mr. PADGETT. I think that it would take something like six, seven, or eight months.

Mr. GARDNER. Then, after you have got your machinery all ready and your material all assembled, the gentleman thinks it would take from six to eight months to manufacture, say, 100 torpedoes, provided the manufacturers were not restricted to an eight-hour day?

Mr. PADGETT. Something like that, if I remember correctly. The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I object.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois objects.
Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I just want to submit another request.

Mr. MANN. Has the gentleman put his statement in the RECORD?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir; I filed everything I had. unanimous consent to return to page 25 to insert a new provision, which I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to be reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to return to page 25 to insert an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 25, line 6-

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to lose any of my right to reserve the right to object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman does not lose any right. The Clerk read as follows:

Page 25, line 6, after "$50,000" insert "clothing factory, $300,000." Page 25, line 6, strike out "$257,000" and insert "$557,000."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object——
Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, pending the reservation I desire to say this is a supplemental estimate that came through the Treasury Department and which reached us just a few days ago. It is not a committee amendment which I offered, but I am offering it myself because it came after the committee considered the bill. I ask to have read a letter of the Secretary and also a statement from Admiral McGowan, Chief of the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts, pending the reservation of the point or order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the matter indicated.

The Clerk read as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, February 3, 1917.

Maintenance and repairs, Naval Academy_____

With reference to the requirements of act of June 22, 1906 (34 Stat., 449), the necessity for the submission of these estimates at this time is due, as to the first item, to the lack of time between the passage of the last naval act and the submission of the regular estimates in which to draw up a tentative design for the proposed building and to estimate its cost. The increase in personnel authorized in the last naval act created the need for additional facilities for the manufacture of clothing. The Naval Academy items grow out of the necessity for providing temporary quarters for the additional midshipmen authorized by the act of February 15, 1916. The matter of quarters for midshipmen has been under consideration for several months, and no decision had been reached at the time of the submission of the regular estimates. The other recommendations on this subject are covered by House Document No. 1930.

Very respectfully,

JOSEPHUS DANIELS,
Secretary of the Navy,

Josephus Daniels, Secretary of the Navy.

The SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
BUREAU OF SUPPLIES AND ACCOUNTS,
Washington, D. C., February 5, 1917.

Pursuant to your oral request of yesterday, the following comparison of prices of clothing manufactured at the Charleston clothing factory and the cost of manufacture of these articles before the Charleston factory was established is furnished:

Item.	Cost at New York before es- ablishment of Charleston factory.	cost at
Jumpers, dungaree	$0.63 .80 1.05 .254	$0.553 .516 .764

The average prices at Charleston since the factory was established is much higher than the average for the first year. This is due to the large increase in the cost of material, but it will be noted that in only one case—that of dungaree jumpers—is the average cost of manufacture higher than it was prior to the establishment of the Charleston factory. Were it not for the increased cost of material, the actual cost of these garments would be less now at Charleston than during the first year of the factory's operation.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, we have recently had reported to the House a bill to authorize the construction of a factory in connection with the Atlanta Penitentiary for the manufacture of textiles. I do not know that that necessarily contemplates the manufacture of clothing, but it is for the manufacture of textiles for the use of the Government, textiles for mail bags, and so forth, and another provision for the construction of a furniture factory at the Fort Leavenworth Penitentiary. The Attorney General of the United States is very much in earnest in the hope that Congress will do something which will permit the inmates of the penitentiaries to be engaged in some occupation manufacturing things for the use of the Government, so that they will not more than necessary come in competition with trade outside of the Government.

There was an investigation made last year under the authority of Congress. A commission was appointed to make a report with reference to these matters, and they made their report recommending a bill, and that bill was introduced, I think, by the gentleman from Kentucky, who is taking an active interest and at whose instance the commission was appointed, and the Judiciary Committee has reported that bill. Now that the Attorney General is extremely anxious to have that bill passed at this session of Congress and become a law so that these men who are in prison may not be compelled to remain in idleness, it seems to me at first blush that if we need a new factory for the manufacture of clothing we could not do better than have the penitentiary inmates make that clothing in a factory at the penitentiary, and, believing that it ought to receive further consideration in that direction, I am going to take the privilege of objecting to the request, and therefore I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois objects.
Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 14, line 17, and consider the amendment which I offered a few days ago and to which the chairman said there would be no objection to returning.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida asks uanimous consent to return to page 14 of the bill in order to offer an amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. BUTLER. Let us hear it read first.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, let the amendment be reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Sears: Page 14, after line 17, insert:

"Naval training station, Florida: Maintenance of naval training station, Key West, Fla.; labor and material; building and repairing wharves; dredging channels; repairs to causeways and sea walls: general care, repair, and improvements of grounds, buildings, and wharves; wharfage, ferriage, and incidental expenses necessary thereto; purchase of live stock and attendance on same; wagons, carts, and all necessary implements: tools and repairs to same, and maintenance of same; fire engines and extinguishers; gymnastic implements; models and other articles needed in instruction of apprentice seamen; printing outfit and material and maintenance of same; lighting; stationery, books, schoolbooks, and periodicals for increasing the efficiency and perfecting the present fortifications; fresh water and washing; packing books and material; and all other continued expenses; lectures and suitable entertainments for apprentice seamen; suitable vessel or battle cruiser for training naval militia; in all, $100,000: Provided, That the sum to be paid out of this appropriation under direction of the Secretary of the Navy for physical training, instruction, and messenger service, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, shall not exceed $6,000."

Mr. PADCETT. Mr. Chairment

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman—
Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object—
Mr. PADGETT. I told the gentleman I would not object to his returning, but that I was opposed to his amendment, and I wished to reserve a point of order against it.

Mr. STAFFORD. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. It has not been offered yet.
Mr. STAFFORD. I would like to know whether there is any difference in the item now proposed from the item presented the other day when the gentleman from Tennessee made the point of order against it?

Mr. SEARS. It is the same amendment.
Mr. STAFFORD. It was not submitted at that time. It had the opposition of the chairman of the committee.

Mr. PADGETT. And the chairman of the committee refused at that time, and said he would take it up at a later time and would resist the amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman recognizes it is subject to a point of order?

Mr. SEARS. Yes, I do. Mr. STAFFORD. Has he any additional data to submit than he submitted the other day?

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to take up much of the time of the committee as I discussed the amendment the We are appropriating approximately $365,000,000 in this bill and to consume much of your time would be pre-sumptuous on my part. But I believe that this House wants to prepare. I believe they should prepare. The only fear I have in securing the passage of my amendment is because of the small amount that I am asking. It is so easily grasped when you mention $100,000 and so hard to grasp when you mention $10,000,000. I simply want to call the attention of the House to the location of Florida from a strategic point, which perhaps you are no doubt familiar with. But here is Florida [indicating on map], located here is Key West, and the Secretary of the Navy has stated in a letter, which I desire to read again because I think it is important:

The Navy Department fully appreciates the importance of Key West as an offensive and defensive base, and all the department's plans include Key West.

Its primary use would probably be as an operating base for torpedo boats, destroyers, and submarines used to close the Florida Straits side.

and Yucatan Channel to the enemy, thus protecting the whole of the Gulf coast from enemy attack.

Now, from that letter of the Secretary it does appear to me that if you want to prepare there is no better place for you to locate a training station for submarines, torpedo-boat destroyers, and torpedo boats than Key West, because if you did so it would be absolutely impossible for the ship of an enemy to get into the Gulf of Mexico. And you would protect Galveston, Mobile, or any other place situated on the Gulf. I believe that base should be established there. While I realize this amendment is subject to a point of order, I do not believe any Mombon will relieve it. I stated the other day that I made my Member will raise it. I stated the other day that I made my few remarks in order that the Members of this House might look into it, and I want to say now, as I said then, that after studying it, if you do not believe the appropriation should be made, it is your duty to vote against it. But if you do believe, as I earnestly believe, that it is in behalf of preparedness and protects the Gulf, and also will be a protection to the Panama Canal and places along the Atlantic coast, then it is the duty of the Members of this House to vote for the appropriation. I want the amendment to stand on its own merits, and I ask the Members to vote for it if they decide that it is a meritorious request.

I do not care to take up more of your time, because you so kindly gave me 10 minutes the other day. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida to return to the page indicated?

Mr. STAFFORD. I object. Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the Clerk read: The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

INCREASE OF THE NAVY.

Of the vessels authorized in the act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes, approved August 29, 1916, the construction of the following vessels shall be begun as soon as practicable at a cost, exclusive of armor and armament, not to exceed the following amounts: Three battleships, $15,500,000 each; 15 battle cruiser, $19,000,000; 2 scout cruisers, $6,000,000 each; 15 destroyers, $1,300,000 each; 1 destroyer tender, $2,300,000; 1 submarine tender, $1,900,000; 18 coast submarines, to have a surface displacement of about 800 tons each, $1,300,000 each, and the limits of cost for the 4 battle cruisers and for 3 scout cruisers authorized and appropriated for in said act but not yet contracted for are increased to not to exceed $19,000,000 each for the battle cruisers and $6,000,000 each for the scout cruisers, exclusive of armor and armament, and the construction of said vessels shall be begun as soon as practicable.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the chairman.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the chairman of the committee-

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for just a moment? I wanted to ask if we could agree upon a time

I wanted to ask it we could agree upon a time limit for discussion and debate upon this paragraph.

Mr. BUTLER. I think a half hour over here will suffice. The gentlemen have discussed some of the features involved in this bill.

Mr. BURNETT. What feature of it? Mr. PADGETT. The paragraph on page 58 that embraces authorizations for the increase of the Navy

Mr. MANN. Is there likely to be much discussion of the other items under increase of the Navy?

Mr. PADGETT. I think not, sir; if the paragraph on page 58, beginning with line 6, is agreed to, there will be very little discussion upon the remaining portion. There is one item in there that perhaps might provoke some discussion, but the others are matters of calculation. There is a provision carrying an appropriation of $12,000,000 for the enlargement of the activities of the navy yards in construction.

Mr. MANN. How much time is wanted on your side?

Mr. BURNETT. Does the gentleman know what amendments may be offered? How can you agree unless we know?

Mr. PADGETT. We have had it under general discussion this morning about three hours, anticipating coming to this.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, this is the most important paragraph in the bill, and will possibly elicit more amendments and more discussion than any other paragraph in it.

Mr. PADGETT. I just withdraw the request for the present and will let it proceed under the five-minute rule.

Mr. KITCHIN. I suggest to the gentleman that I would not do that yet.

Mr. PADGETT. How much time does the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER] want?

Mr. OLIVER. I think, so far as those who signed the minority report are concerned, that 30 or 40 minutes would be enough—say 40 minutes.

Mr. PADGETT. Do you think that 40 minutes will be sufficient for you?

Mr. OLIVER. For those who signed the report.

Mr. BUTLER. We will have to have 40 minutes on this

Mr. PADGETT. All right; and 40 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER]. And will they then give me 10 minutes to close?

I would like to have 10 minutes. I want to Mr. BURNETT.

offer an amendment.

Mr. KITCHIN. I suggest that we agree that the discussion on this paragraph end at 5 o'clock, and that the time be divided equally between the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Padgett] and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER].

Mr. PADGETT. No; the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr.

BUTLER] wants some time,

Mr. KITCHIN. I mean on your side. Mr. MANN. Why not give the gentleman from Pennsylvania 40 minutes and the gentleman from Alabama 40 minutes and take 10 minutes for yourself and 10 minutes for the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Burnert]?

Mr. PADGETT. That is all right.

Mr. BUTLER. Make the request.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I make the request that in the discussion upon this paragraph of the bill that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] may control 40 minutes of the time for debate, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Oliver] 40 minutes, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Burnett] 10 minutes, and that I may have 10 minutes, and then that the debate upon the paragraph and all amendments thereto close.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Padgett] asks unanimous consent that all debate upon the pending paragraph and amendments thereto shall be closed at the end of 1 hour and 40 minutes, 40 minutes of that time to be controlled by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER], 40 minutes by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER], 10 minutes by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Burnett], and 10 minutes by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Padgett]. Is there objection?

Mr. SEARS. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, I do not know that I shall use the time, but I may want 10 minutes

Mr. MANN. Do like a lot of the rest of us do.

Mr. SEARS. Just get into it anyhow? [Laughter.]
Mr. MANN. No; do without. [Laughter.]
Mr. SEARS. I have been doing without pretty well during the session.

Mr. BUTLER. Well, I have served 20 years on this committee, and I have not used 7 minutes in this debate.

Mr. SEARS. The gentleman has been giving us very valuable information.

Mr. BUTLER. No; I have left that for others who are better informed.

Mr. SEARS. I do not know that I shall want to use the time, but-Mr. MANN. If the gentleman does not know that he wants to use the time, let it go.

Mr. SEARS. What I have in mind may be covered by somebody who speaks. Mr. BURNETT. The gentleman can extend his remarks on the west side of the RECORD. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PADGETT. I will ask, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Butler] use their time first, because I want to reserve my time to close.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr.

BUTLER] is recognized.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I will yield 10 minutes to— Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Chairman, I think I had 10 minutes before this unanimous-consent agreement discussion started.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman was taken off the floor the discussion. The time has been limited. To whom by the discussion. does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield?

Mr. BUTLER. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. Humphrey] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I offer an

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. Humphrey of Washington: Page 58, in line 16, strike σ ut "eighteen" and insert "fifty."

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is to increase the number of submarines

I am not going to enter into any discussion about the efficiency That has been discussed a good portion of the What I want to call the attention of the committee to is that it seems to me to make appropriations for only 18 submarines is wholly inefficient. It is a well-known fact, that has been published in the newspapers, that a certain body that we are not permitted to call by name-one party of that body, at least-has already agreed in caucus that we should have a hundred submarines go into this bill. If that is the fact, that we ought to have a hundred in the bill, we at least ought to put 50 of them in the bill over here.

But what I want to call attention to now is the condition that exists on the Pacific coast. We never had a battleship squadron on the Pacific Ocean except once, for just a few days, and we probably will not have another any time soon. We might as well face the fact that whatever battleships we have are going to be kept on the Atlantic. As a man who lives on the Pacific coast, while I regret it, I realize that this is true. Every Secretary of the Navy since I have been a Member of Congress has stated to me that he would send the battleship squadron to the Pacific, and none of them has ever kept that promise. They are not going to keep it in the future. We might as well face the fact now that we shall have to have practically two battleship squadrons, two navies, or else abandon the Pacific coast entirely.

You talk about sending the battleship squadron through the Panama Canal in case of necessity, but if you take down your map and look you will find that that is impracticable. about 1,500 miles farther from Philadelphia through the Panama Canal to Puget Sound than it is from Yokohama to Puget Sound. It is almost exactly the same distance to a mile from Seattle to Panama that it is from Seattle to Yokohama. In other words, to put it in a different form, a battleship squadron would have to be through the Panama Canal out in the Pacific Ocean in order to be on equal terms going to Puget Sound as If they traveled at to distance with one starting from Japan. the same rate of speed, the one from the Panama Canal and the other from Japan, they would reach Puget Sound at the same time. If a battleship squadron started from Philadelphia and passed through the Panama Canal and up the Pacific coast to San Francisco it would get there from 10 days to 2 weeks after a squadron leaving Japan at the same time.

So, leaving out the question whether it is policy to have battleships going through the Panama Canal to the Pacific, taking all the chances, which we all realize are very great, even on the supposition that the canal could not be obstructed, they could not be used in time of emergency quickly enough to protect the Pacific coast; so that it seems to me, if we are going to make any preparation at all, unless we are willing to abandon the Pacific coast and leave it wholly unprotected, the cheapest and most effective way is to give us at least a limited number of submarines to be kept on that coast while the battleship squadron is to be kept on the Atlantic coast.

I do not know whether there are any submarines in the vicinity of San Francisco or not. There may possibly be. There are none, so far as I know, in the Puget Sound country; neither can Puget Sound be protected by mining. The water is too deep; the current is too swift. We are entirely unprotected, so far as naval vessels are concerned. You take all the naval vessels that are to-day on the Pacific coast, and they could offer practically no resistance against a single battleship. Our whole coast at this time could be ravished by a single first-class battleship. Our fortifications are not constructed so that they can defend themselves from a land attack, and in addition to that fact, so far as the Puget Sound is concerned-I do not know whether it is true with regard to San Francisco or not, but I believe it is-and I know that it is true in regard to Puget -we do not have a first-class modern gun in any of our fortifications there; not one. There is not a gun in all the forts of Puget Sound that has a range exceeding something over 11,000 yards, as I recall.

Mr. FARR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. In a moment. I know, when I visited the fort and talked to the commander, talking to him about the range of the largest guns he had, he informed me that their range was about half that of the largest guns on a modern battleship. Or to put it in another way, I asked him the question, "According to your statement, a modern battleship can batter these fortifications to pieces without coming within 5 miles of the range of the best gun we have?" And he said, That is true.'

Now, we have no modern fortifications. We have no battleships, we have nothing, and I want to ask this committee if they think it is to the best interests of the country that in this emergency and in this hour, with the coast entirely unprotected, that they should build only 18 submarines? We ought to have upon that coast at least 50 submarines, to give us some protection, because when we are attacked, if we should by our weakness invite attack, it is true that the Pacific coast will suffer first, but the rest of the country will suffer with us, and when that time comes, if unfortunately it ever should come, I have no doubt but what the Atlantic coast and the whole central portion of this country would rally to the support of the Pacific coast just as loyally as they would if an attack should be made upon the Atlantic; so that after all we are all equally interested in having some defense on the Pacific.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question? Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Yes. Please make it as brief as you can.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Why does the gentleman prefer submarines to battleships

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I would much prefer a battleship squadron, but I know we can not get it. I have lost all hope for that. As I said a moment ago, every Secretary of the Navy since I have been a Member of this House has promised me personally that he would send a battleship squadron to the Pacific, but not one of them has kept that promise, and none of them will.

Mr. SLAYDEN. If you were defending the coast of England just now, would you rather have battleships or submarines?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I think I would prefer battleships. While the submarines would furnish defense, I think if you should wipe out England's battleship squadron Germany would ravage the commerce of the world and would have England on her knees in 24 hours.

Mr. SLAYDEN. With her surface ships?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Yes; but the reason I am asking for submarines is because if I should ask for a battleship squadron I would be asking for something that I know we can not get, but when we ask for submarines, that the number of them be increased, so that we may have at least some defense, I think I am asking what appeals to the patriotic sentiment of the members of this committee.

Mr. KELLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman—where is the chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee? Mr. MANN. He does not want to use his time.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. BAILEY). The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington [Mr.

HUMPHREY]

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. My understanding was that all of these amendments were to be pending during this discussion and that that was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. There was no such understanding as far as the present occupant of the chair knows. The question is on the amendment. Those who favor it will say aye, those opposed [The question was taken.] The ayes have it, and the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. OLIVER. I ask for tellers on that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama demands tellers.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. Mr. SLAYDEN. Let us have the parliamentary status.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, the amendment which I have sent to the desk has not yet been read.

What about the other amendment? What Mr. SLAYDEN. are we voting on?

The CHAIRMAN. On the question whether this vote shall be taken by tellers, on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. Humphrey].

Mr. CALLAWAY. I ask that the amendment be reported.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Oliver] demands tellers. [After counting.] Tellers are ordered and the Clerk will report the amendment—Mr. MANN. That amendment can not be reported again except by unanimous consent.

Mr. McARTHUR. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard. The vote will be taken by tellers.

Mr. FOCHT. How can you do that when it has already been adopted? I object.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. Was it not the understanding that the discussion was to proceed for an hour and forty minutes, and that these votes were to be taken at the conclusion of the discussion?

The CHAIRMAN. as the Chair is aware. There was no such understanding so far

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER] and the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] will take their places as tellers.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be read. Members of the House do not know what they are voting on.

Mr. SAUNDERS. It was certainly my understanding that the vote was to be taken at the conclusion of the debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] asks unanimous consent that the amendment be again reported. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FOCHT. The question was taken on the amendment of the gentleman from Washington, and it has been adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington-

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, let us get straightened out on this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. We will get it straightened out if the gentleman will please be seated for a moment.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Just wait. All this is by unanimous consent-

The CHAIRMAN. Oh, no. Tellers have been ordered, and by unanimous consent the Clerk will read the amendment.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I understood that under the agreement there was to be an hour and forty minutes of debate, and then we were to take up the amendment.

Mr. SAUNDERS. That is the proposition that I propounded to the Chair a moment ago. That was my understanding of the situation.

There was no such agreement. Mr. MANN.

Mr. SAUNDERS. That was my definite understanding of the agreement.

Mr. MANN. There was no such agreement.

Mr. SAUNDERS. That was my understanding, or I would have objected if I had thought otherwise.

Mr. MANN. And I would have objected if any such request had been made.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well. That puts it up to the Chair. There was no such understanding, so far as the Chair is advised. The present occupant of the chair was not in the chair at the time. He was on the floor, however, and heard the discussion. He does not recall that there was any understanding or agreement in regard to that.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I understood there was an agreement. Mr. PADGETT. I understood that the request submitted was that there would be so much debate-The CHAIRMAN. That is true.

Mr. PADGETT. So much to be controlled by one gentleman and so much by another, and none of it was to be controlled by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY].

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina resumed the chair. The CHAIRMAN. The agreement reached by the committee was that the debate on the paragraph and amendments thereto should proceed for 1 hour and 40 minutes, 40 minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Butler], 40 minutes by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Oliver], 10 minutes by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Burnett], 10 minutes by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Padgett]. The gentleman from Pennsylvania, using 10 minutes of his time, yielded to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. Humphrey]

Mr. SAUNDERS. Now, Mr. Chairman, I wish to propound a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SAUNDERS. My inquiry is if that does not carry with it necessarily that the debate should proceed uninterruptedly, and that at the conclusion the voting should take place? was the understanding of the gentleman who propounded it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that there was absolutely nothing said-

Mr. SAUNDERS. If the Chair will pardon me, I am asking the Chair to interpret the understanding-if that was not what it necessarily meant.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Virginia wants the Chair to read something into it that was not there.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is not called upon to make a ruling on that point. The Chair is informed that one amendment was offered and a vote was being taken upon it. If the present occupant had been in the chair he would not have permitted the vote.

Mr. MANN. If that is the case, Mr. Chairman, there will be no other agreements of this kind entered into in the House. Here was an agreement fixing the time for debate and apportioning the time between the Members. Nothing was said about Mr. KITCHIN. We have demanded tellers.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I certainly understood it that way myself. when amendments should be offered, and there was no authorized the second amendment while the first was pending. when amendments should be offered, and there was no author-

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would hold that all amendments were to be offered and voted on after debate.

Mr. MANN. There could not be an amendment offered after the first except to perfect it.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendments could be offered for information.

Mr. MANN. Information; that is another thing.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Chairman, may I say a word to show that the interpretation of the gentleman is not correct. The gentleman from Tennessee expressly said that the limitation of time for debate should apply to the paragraph "and all amendments thereto." That necessarily carried with it the under-standing that amendments could be offered during the progress of debate.

Mr. MANN. And voted upon as offered.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Otherwise there could be no amendment offered at all, since at the conclusion of the debate, we would be compelled to vote on the proposition itself, which would be the That would be the inevitable conclusion. If under that agreement you could offer one amendment, then you could offer two, or three, or more, all of them however to be voted upon after the debate was concluded.

Mr. MANN. If that is the conclusion of the parliamentary proposition, there will be no more agreements to limit debate.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Let that conclusion follow, if it is necessary to the proper interpretation of the pending agreement. I make the point of order that it was out of order to take the vote on the amendment, at the time it was taken.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, may I suggest to the Chair that from my observation the custom has been, whatever the parliamentary ruling has been, that when you agreed upon a limit of time for debate concerning any paragraph and amend-ments thereto to offer the amendments for the information of the House and vote on them at the conclusion of the debate; and the reason for that is very good, it seems to me. For instance, if you are going to occupy your time in debate for an hour and a half, as in this instance, undoubtedly that time ought to be kept for debate and not consumed in the consideration of amendments. If you take an amendment, as has been offered in this case, calling for tellers, the result is that the hour and a half will be extended into three hours of general debate. Moreover, when you agree on a limit for debate, say an hour and a half, gentlemen have left the Hall knowing that for an hour and a half they will not be called upon for a vote. So that the reasons are twofold, the custom, whether good parliamentary law or not, and the fact that Members have left the Hall with the impression that there would be no vote.

Mr. MANN. The custom does not exist. I have had some little parliamentary experience in the House, and that is not the custom

Mr. GARNER. I take issue with the gentleman. It is, from my observation and recollection. Mr. MANN. It is not a custom of the House unless it is specially agreed upon.

The CHAIRMAN. Not wishing to trust my own memory alone, I have asked for the reporter's notes, and they show that 1 hour and 40 minutes was allowed for debate on the paragraph and amendments thereto. It was divided just as the Chair stated, 40 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Butler], 40 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER], 10 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Bur-NETT], and 10 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT], the debate then to close on the paragraph and all amendments thereto.

The Chair thinks and holds, having in mind the procedure of the past and what was in the mind of the Chairman, at any rate, and what he believes is good procedure, that during this time amendments were to be reported for information, and at the end of the time fixed for debate the vote should be taken on the amendments to the paragraph, and the Chair so holds.

Mr. MANN. I think, Mr. Chairman, the ruling of the Chair is erroneous. Of course, it gives an advantage to the majority side of the House. A lot of amendments are offered during general debate and no one knows what they are. The majority side can be absent during the consideration and come in at the end and vote down all amendments. It is not orderly procedure; it is not the custom of the House, but one that has rarely been agreed to, and then only by unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has his remedy.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin, Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. While the present occupant of the chair was absent from the room the gentleman from Washington [Mr. Humphrey] moved to amend, increasing the number of submarines to be built from 18 to 50. After debate that motion was put by the then occupant of the chair, who announced, after calling for the ayes and noes, that the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Washington had been carried. The Chair then recognized the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER], who presented another amendment, and started to discuss it. Then a point of order was made by the gentleman from Virginia. Is he not too late?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed that the then occupant of the Chair did not recognize the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Gardner] but that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] took the floor, and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER] was really recognized by the Chair to demand tellers, and tellers were ordered.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DYER. What will become of the proceedings that have been had? A vote was taken upon this amendment, and the then occupant of the Chair announced that the amendment was agreed to. That is a part of the Record made so far to-day, and I take it that a point of order will not change that record. There has to be a vote, I take it, to vitiate the proceedings where the vote was taken, before the point of order was made.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order was not too late on that vote, the Chair will say to the gentleman, in the opinion of the Chair, and the Chair will say further to the gentleman that at the end of this general discussion, as agreed to by the committee, the vote will be taken upon the amendment of the gentleman from Washington, as upon all other amendments.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. the notes of the reporter show that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Gardner] was recognized and that the amendment and all business pertaining to that had been finished, and the vote announced-

The CHAIRMAN. But the gentleman is supposing something that is not correct. The notes will not show that.

Mr. FOCHT. Let us hear them.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the notes will be read to the House. The Reporter will read his notes, they not having yet been transcribed.

The Official Reporter read as follows:

The Official Reporter read as follows:

The Chairman. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. Butler. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman.

Where is the chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee?

Mr. Mann. He does not want to use his time.

The Chairman, The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. Humphir].

Mr. Burnett. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. My understanding was that all of these amendments were to be pending during this discussion, and that that was agreed to.

The Chairman. There was no such understanding as far as the present occupant of the chair knows. The question is on the amendment. Those who favor it will say "aye"; those opposed "no."

The question was taken.

The ayes have it, and the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. OLIVER. I ask for tellers on that.

The Chairman. The gentleman from Alabama demands tellers.

Mr. Gardner, Mr. Chairman, i offer an amendment.

Mr. Slayden. Let us have the parliamentary status.

Mr. Gardner, Mr. Chairman, the amendment which I have sent to the desk has not yet been read—

The CHAIRMAN. That is sufficient.

The CHAIRMAN. That is sufficient.

Mr. MANN. That is far enough. I think that is right.

The CHAIRMAN. The vote did not reach a conclusion. Therefore the point of order came in time, and the Chair sustains the point of order. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER].

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman-The CHAIRMAN. For what

For what purpose does the gentleman from Pennsylvania rise?

Mr. BUTLER. I shall now make my second attempt to yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Gard-NEE].

Mr. OLIVER. I yield to the gentleman. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] yields to the gentleman from Massachusetts 10 minutes. and the gentleman from Alabama is not now recognized.

Mr. GARDNER, Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which will be reported for the information of the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 58, line 12, beginning with the word "three," strike out all down to and including the word "each," in line 18, and in lieu of the language stricken out insert the following:

"Four battleships, $15,500,000 each; 2 battle cruisers, $19,000,000 each; 4 scout cruisers, $6,000,000 each; 20 destroyers, $1,300,000 each; 1 destroyer tender, $2,300,000; 1 submarine tender, $1,900,000; 18 coast submarines, to have a surface displacement of about 800 tons, each $1,300,000; 9 fleet submarines, $1,850,000 each."

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, that amendment, if adopted, will restore the program recommended last fall by the General Board of the Navy. This program was cut down by the Secretary of the Navy and by the Committee on Naval Affairs, on the ground that the building facilities of our yards, public and private, could not take care of a program so large as that contemplated by the General Board. If the amendment of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] is adopted, before I offer my amendment I shall change the proposed authorization of new 800-ton submarines from 18 to 50. I do not expect my amendment to be adopted, and I should not take up the time of the committee if I did not wish to say a word or two about this submarine question. The fact is that nobody knows whether submarines are good offensive weapons We know this about the submarine, that there is a continual race going on between improvements in submarines and improvements of methods of defense against submarines. We know that it is a very long time since any submarines have managed to destroy any appreciable number of war vessels. We therefore must assume that there has been developed a satisfactory defense for war vessels against submarines. do not know how many submarines are being destroyed.

We know that the Dcutschland, which was due here some time ago, has disappeared. Most people believe that something has happened to the Deutschland, just as most people believe that a large number of German submarines have been captured or sunk; but, in reality, we know nothing about the matter. do know this, however, that during this week the daily number of vessels sunk by submarines has been very large indeed. The greatest record for any single day this week was, I think, 22 vessels. If I recollect rightly, those 22 vessels which were sunk had a tonnage, all put together, of 33,000 and some-odd tons. Thirty-three thousand tons is just about two-thirds the tonnage of one single ship, the Vaterland. In other words, the total tonnage of all 22 vessels was only two-thirds of the tonnage of the Vaterland alone. So far as I have noticed in the newspapers, the largest vessel which has yet been sunk in the new submarine campaign is the California, of between eight and nine thousand tons. Is it not more than likely, Mr. Chairman, that extraordinary efforts are being made to protect the large cargo carriers, whereas the smaller ones must at the present time be left to shift for themselves in default of sufficient means to protect the entire merchant fleets of the world? I have read a number of statements to the effect that it is because the larger cargo carriers are armed that they escape destruction. Unquestionably that has an influence, but I have heard experts suggest that the larger ships are given escorts while they are within the danger zone. If so, Mr. Chairman, it looks as if a way is being found for the larger ships to avoid the submarine attacks, which have seemed so extraordinarily successful in the last few days.

If I am correct in supposing that the entente allies are protecting their larger vessels with destroyers, it is obvious that their next move will be to convoy large numbers of cargo carriers with large numbers of destroyers. I believe that this will prove to be the case. I have heard this prediction made by others. I do not know myself, but I think that it sounds probable. I am told that the periscopes of the largest submarines only project high enough above water to permit the observer to see a horizon 3 miles off. So if a cargo carrier is more than 3 miles off from a submarine, it can not successfully be attacked with a torpedo from a submerged vessel. As a matter of fact, most people believe that accurate torpedo range is not as much as 1 mile. If, therefore, a ship is outside accurate torpedo range, the submarine must come to the surface and shell the cargo carrier with its gun or guns. But, obviously, no submarine commander in his senses will bring his vulnerable ship to the surface for the purpose of shelling a vessel which not only is armed itself but is also convoyed by armed destrovers.

In spite of the fact that I do not believe that the submarine has altogether fulfilled the expectations of its admirers, nevertheless I am one of those who believe that it is absolutely necessary for our immediate defense to build great numbers of submarines at the present time. I by no means think that the battleships of Great Britain have lost control of the seas or that Germany's submarines have gained control. On the contrary, I know that Great Britain's fleet controls the seas, even trary, I know that Great Britain's neet controls the seas, even though it may be shut up in some harbor. If it were not so, it would be Germany, not Great Britain, which would be receiving the world's wheat and the world's copper and the world's supplies in general. It would be Great Britain, not Germany, which would plead for the milkless babies. Every one of you know that if you post a letter addressed to London it is delivered within two or three weeks. Every one of you know that if you post a letter addressed to Berlin it is not delivered at all. How could that be so if the submarine had wrested the control of the sea from the battleship?

If I had my choice, I would rather trust the protection of this country to battleships and destroyers than to submarines. But I have not my choice. We have not our choice. Battleships take four years to build. Submarines can be built in a hurry. Ultimately for our defense we must depend on a mighty fleet of battleships and battle cruisers. Temporarily we must build swarms of submarines while our battleships are under construction.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. BUTLER. How much time has the gentleman consumed, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. Fifteen minutes.

Mr. BUTLER. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, we have just witnessed, it seems to me, a rather remarkable exhibition of partisanship in the House. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. PAGE] is in the chair as Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. He was temporarily out of the chair. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAILEY] was in the chair. Demand was made for a vote on an amendment. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Burnett] rose and questioned as to whether that was the proper time to vote. The gentleman then in the chair held it was. The vote was taken. That vote was adverse to the majority side of the House represented by the gentleman who always occupied the chair. A demand for tellers was made, and at the time there were not enough Democrats on the floor of the House to get tellers. Then a point of order was made that we could not have the vote at all. It had already been ruled upon by the Chair, a vote had been taken, and then they hurried the gentleman not then occupying the chair back to the chair who reversed the ruling already made before and a vote had been taken; he reversed it after the vote was taken because the vote was adverse to the majority side of the House. I never have witnessed such a partisan decision or movement before in the House in my service.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN].

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I regret the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has taken such a partisan view of this matter, and no doubt he is very much exercised over what took place, because perhaps the Chair did not entirely agree with Now, the proposition which the gentleman from Illinois submitted was that it was the custom-or, rather, the question arose between the gentleman from Texas and the gentleman from Illinois as to what was the custom and rule under such a unanimous-consent agreement as we have had. I think the gentleman from Illinois was entirely mistaken as to the custom, and that the gentleman from Texas was entirely correct. It has been the custom ever since I have been here that under a unanimous agreement, such as we had, no vote is taken on an amendment until the debate is closed according to the agreement. It has taken place a dozen times in the discussion and the reading of this very bill that we are on now. We have had just such agreements for the last two or three days, and under all of them proceeded just as we contend we should proceed under the present one:

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield in that partic-

Mr. KITCHIN. One second. When we make an agreement that the debate on the paragraph of a bill and amendments thereto shall close at a certain time, no vote is taken, and never has been taken, on an amendment until the debate has closed accordingly, and we have had a dozen instances during the consideration of the pending bill where it was not taken until after the debate was over.

Mr. STAFFORD. I recall distinctly that when the battleship proposition was under consideration at prior sessions the time was limited to consider it under the five-minute rule, and the agreement always embodied by unanimous consent that the vote was not to be taken until the debate was closed.

Mr. KITCHIN. I do not recall a single instance in which the custom has been any other than that which was contended for by the gentleman from Texas and that which I just stated. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] makes the charge-I know he really does not intend, and which in his cooler moments he will regret making—that the majority side here, seeing that they were defeated on the motion of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREYS], deliberately took the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAILEY] out of the chair and put the gentleman who now occupies it in the chair for the express purpose of holding that the vote on the amendment was out of order. There was no such intention or effort on the part of anyone here. The fact is that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Balley] was temporarily called to the chair. He was not in the chair when the agreement as to the time when debate on the paragraph and amendments should close was made, and declared from the chair that he knew nothing of such agreement. The present occupant, who has presided over the Committee of the Whole during the consideration of the bill, was in the chair when the agreement was made and knew what it

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAILEY] therefore desired the present occupant to return to the chair, because he the present occupant-was in the chair when the agreement was made. It must be understood, too, that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] is mistaken in stating that the point of order was made while Mr. BAILEY was in the chair against voting on the amendment.

Mr. MANN. I did not make the statement. The trouble with the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] is he is not entirely accurate himself. I said the question was raised by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Burnert].

Mr. KITCHIN. And the Chair ruled against him, you said. Mr. MANN. We just had that read to us.

Mr. KITCHIN. But the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Burnett] simply asked if that was not the agreement awhile ago, and Mr. BAILEY said he did not know anything about the agreement and then put the question.

Mr. MANN. He said he was on the floor at the time.
Mr. KITCHIN. The notes, I think, just read sustain what I stated. However, while Mr. Balley was in the chair the question was raised, tellers were demanded, and the Chair declared them ordered, division having been asked.

Mr. MANN. Division was not asked for.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. BALLEY said that a sufficient number rose for tellers

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes. He said that a sufficient number rose for tellers and declared tellers were ordered.

Mr. MANN. They came in.

Mr. KITCHIN. Now, the present occupant went to the chair and simply held that since the amendment had not been disposed of-that it was in the process of being voted on-the point of order did not come too late.

But what I rose to say was that I do not think the gentleman from Illinois really intended to reflect upon the present occupant of the chair, or really intended to reflect upon the membership on this side, in making the charge that we deliberately did that to overrule the viva voce vote; that is, to defeat the amendment of the gentleman from Washington. I hope he did not. We wanted it voted on at the proper time and in Mr. MANN. I repeat it. I am not excited about it.

Mr. KITCHIN. If you do, it is unworthy of you. [Applause on the Democratic side.] We thought, as is often done in this House, in the heat of debate, by myself and the gentleman from Illinois, and all of us at times, that the gentleman made the charge in the excitement of the moment, which he would not have made in a cooler time. I want to say that there was no intention on my part or on the part of gentlemen on this side such as the gentleman from Illinois imputes to us.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Page of North Carolina). The occupant of the chair would ask unanimous consent of one of the gentlemen who controls the time to yield to him two minutes. The Chair desires to make a statement. The present occupant of the chair, after asking the gentleman from Pennsylvania to relieve him for a few moments, was standing in the back lobby talking to some newspaper correspondents who had asked to see him. A message came to him to the effect that there was a misunderstanding on the floor of the House. When he resumed the chair he did not know what the contention was about or what had taken place. He did not know the vote, what the amendment was, or what the vote which had been taken viva voce had resulted in, or what the gentleman who occupied the chair had declared it to be. The present occupant took up the situation on resuming the chair just as he found it, without any idea of what had taken place, and without the slightest idea of whether that side or the other side had won in the vote on the amendment. I felt that the Chair was entitled to make that statement for himself. He decided it upon the record as taken by the Official Reporter of the House as to what the agree-

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS].

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Chairman, I wish to contribute a have some knowledge of parliamentary law, at least I have had a good deal of experience in other parliamentary bodies as well as in this. These agreements are often made and I believe I understand their meaning as well as the average Member of this House.

It is true that there were hardly any Democrats on this side at the time this vote was being taken. How did that come to pass? I can state how it came to pass so far as many other Democrats as well as myself were concerned. We had figured out the time at which the vote would be taken on the amendments and on the section, which would have been about 10 minutes to 5 o'clock, and a number of us had made ready to leave the House, indeed were leaving to go to our offices, under the belief that no vote would be had until the time arrived that had been fixed upon. I had gotten my hat and coat and, was in the very act of going out of the Chamber, with the clear understanding on my part, from such knowledge of parlia-mentary law as I possess, that under the agreement the vote would not be taken on any of the amendments until the debate was concluded.

When this question came up, things developed very rapidly. I was one of the Members who asked for a ruling from the Chair, in fact propounded a parliamentary inquiry. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Balley] did not decide any point of order. He said that so far as he, the then occupant of the chair was concerned, he was not advised of the terms of the agreement, or words to that effect. Then after some further contributions to the situation by the Members, the permanent Chairman of the Committee of the Whole [Mr. PAGE] arrived. From that time forward he has correctly given the facts. Whatever was done toward taking a vote, was certainly done under a misapprehension.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there for a question?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Yes.

Mr. DOWELL. Is it not a fact that no point of order was raised until the amendment was submitted?

Mr. SAUNDERS. That does not alter the question at all. Things proceeded so rapidly, and unexpectedly that the Members who wanted to raise the question of order did not have the opportunity to get in any sooner than they did. It has always been my experience in the House that when a Member is seeking to avail himself of his rights as rapidly as may be under the circumstances, the Speaker is not disposed to rule him out.

Mr. DOWELL. But the fact, nevertheless, is that the question was not raised

Mr. SAUNDERS. The gentleman is not familiar with the practice of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I sent up an amendment. Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, will the Chair recognize me? The CHAIRMAN. Of course the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BUTLER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] desires two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for two minutes.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Saunders] just stated that the chairman of the committee, Mr. BAILEY, of Pennsylvania, did not decide the question. He did. The question submitted to the Chair was whether it was in order to take a vote at the time, and the Chair not only decided it but put the question to the House, which in itself was a decision if he had said nothing further.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. MANN. No.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I just wanted to ask who made that point of order and then referred to the minutes to see what took place?

Mr. MANN. The Record itself will show what took place if nobody changes it, and I shall not. The question was put at the time to the Chair, and he said he had no knowledge of any agreement to postpone the voting. But he put the question. That was a decision of the parliamentary inquiry, if it was a parliamentary inquiry. It was a decision of order. Afterwards the vote was taken, and then the present occupant of the chair was called to the chair and reversed the decision made by the man occupying the chair when he had the right to make a decision.

I have nothing to retract from what I said before about it. The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Burnett] brief statement of the facts of this situation. I think that I offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BURNETT: Page 58, lines 12 and 13, after the word "amount" in line 12, strike out "three battleships, $15,500,000 each." and insert in lieu thereof the following: "One battleship, $15,500,000, and 30 coast submarines, $1,300,000 each."

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to be unreasonable in my views in regard to this battleship program. I know I have been regarded and characterized as one of the "small-Navy men." I believe in an adequate Navy, and I believe in it now more than I ever have before, but every time we build an immense dreadnaught we are making an inadequate Navy instead of an adequate one.

Developments within the last two years indicate the impotency and incompetency of battleships for action on the surface of the seas.

I believe we need more submarines, because developments have shown that they are active and effective instruments in the warfare now going on between nations that are far in advance of us in improvements along that line. I believe we are lacking in aircraft. But that is a question that I have studied but little, and hence I know almost nothing about it. I believe that in three particulars—in improved and increased aircraft and in improved and increased submarines and destroyers—we are deficient, and that we need appropriations for these instruments of warfare.

But, Mr. Chairman, we are spending the people's money for immense dreadnaughts that are almost useless. I believe that our brethren on the other side of the aisle are just as patriotic as we are, and I hope that they and we will look at this matter as a cold business proposition. It is a trust fund that we are administering. Suppose a guardian that had intrusted to him thousands of dollars of his ward's money should spend that money in a profligate and unbusinesslike manner. He would be regarded as a criminal. You gentlemen on the other side are just as much guardians of the people's money as we are. It is just as much a fiduciary capacity that you occupy toward the people as that which the Members on this side occupy. Hence, it is equally the duty of Republicans and Democrats to guard jealously the money of the people that is intrusted to our care. Then, if we all agree to the proposition that it is a misapplication of money to continue to build these immense surface crafts while we are suffering for the undersea craft, it is an expenditure of trust funds that is not warranted and ought not to be made. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I do not wonder that gentlemen who are in the localities of great navy yards look at these expenditures as they do. It is no imputation against their integrity, either, since a man is to a great degree a creature of environment, and these gentlemen have lived in that naval atmosphere until they have actually absorbed it and have been imbued with the idea that this country is absolutely dependent on battleships. They are honest in it, but those of us who are not subject to that monomania ought not to catch the hysteria that big business has been trying to spread all over the country, a hysteria that those who are financially interested have labored to bring about artificially by means of the great metropolitan press. We ought to look at these matters in the light of common sense and reason. We ought not to spend the people's money on an ignis fatuus. We talk about battleships. What are they doing now in the war? How many of these submarines have they destroyed? The gentleman who has just spoken says many of them have been captured, and he understands it is because aeroplanes have sighted and pointed them out, but nobody knows how many, and certainly, Mr. Chairman, every time they have destroyed one submarine they have sowed the dragon's teeth and a dozen more have sprung up for the effective work which they are doing. What do we need? Is it big ships which by their exposure make the Navy more inadequate than the one we have now? It was shown by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Callaway], who spoke this morning, that on many occasions submarines have destroyed battleships of the largest kind. Submarines are constantly being improved, constantly growing larger and more efficient, and why waste our money for more ships, why have more naval boards, for the purpose of having men swinging on swivel chairs, wearing epaulets, and encouraging armor-plate manufacturers to go all over the country making people believe that we are in the midst of a war. Oh, but some gentleman said this morning the people demand it.

Let us be leaders of men and not followers of the multitude to do wrong. Let us show the people that we are right, and we can go to them, and they will stand by us. I believe that with the American people, whenever the right is pointed out, right makes might with them. They do not want to be swept off their feet, and yet we here are responsible to a great extent for the very hysteria that is abroad all over the country.

If we are convinced by reason and common sense that we need better preparedness so far as aircraft, submarines, and destroyers are concerned-and I concede that-are we going to fritter away $28,000,000 on each of the three immense battleships when we need these other things worse? It seems to Mr. Chairman, that our Naval Affairs Committee has allowed itself, at least so far as the leaders of the committee are concerned, to be swept off its feet by those who want to keep up the gorgeous paraphernalia, the faufaronade, the show and tinsel and glitter of warfare, but who do not want to go, as the Scripture says, down to the sea in boats themselves. They want to remain on the surface, and a great many of them want to be on the surface here in Washington and nowhere I understand from the chairman of the committee that this bill carries an appropriation of $54,000,000 over the one of last year that many of us believed then to be an outrage upon the people, and yet I learn that the bill reported by the Military Affairs Committee is $20,000,000 less than the one we passed last year. Does not that show that this bill is unjust and excessive. If we do not need those immense increases for the Army, is it not an absurdity and monstrous for us to spend $54,000,000 more on the Navy than we did last year, and $28,-000,000 on each of three battleships? Let us be men and not sycophantic trucklers to public opinion and to those in power. [Applause.]

Send a few of the barnacles around the ship of state out in the submarines and the destroyers and see whether their thirst for gore is not appeased.

A few years ago the entire naval appropriation bill was less than $100,000,000, while this bill carries nearly $400,000,000, and the Lord only knows what it will carry when it gets back from the other end of the Capitol. Of course, some gentlemen will make a feint at opposition to these big additions, but they will soon surrender to the Navy Board.

will soon surrender to the Navy Board.

Of course, some of the feather-leg brigade will throw up their hands in holy horror, but they will soon bow their necks and help pile up the burdens of taxation that their outraged people will have to bear.

Think of it, gentlemen from the South, every one of these three useless battleships that this bill is providing for will cost 300,000 bales of cotton to construct it and then 13,000 bales per year to maintain it after it is built.

Think of it, gentlemen from the West, you are throwing away 17,000,000 bushels of your farmers' wheat every time you construct one of these dreadnaughts, and then 650,000 bushels more each year to maintain it.

Where are you going to get crews to man all these big ships? You can not get them to enlist voluntarily, and you gentlemen who are to-day sponsors for all the battleships when they are completed are sure to be called on to vote for compulsory enlistment to man them. We are drifting right in that direction. You declare now that you will not stand for it, but when the Navy Board orders you to do so, you will complacently obey. They will then implore you by the shades of John Paul Jones, "Don't give up the ship," and you will vote amen, and your farmer-boy constitutent will be dragged from his home to do the fighting while you stay here to make laws to take him from his weeping mother's arms.

We have listened to the heralds of war on this floor till we can almost hear the call to arms, see embattled legions in the death grapple, hear the booming cannon and the roar of musketry, see the ocean red with the blood of heroes, hear the groans of the dying, see litters bearing the dead from fields of gory glory, catch the last bloodcurdling shrieks of human victims offered up on the altar of the god of war.

Gentlemen, let us turn our thoughts from bloodcurdling stories of war and try to be fairer to our constituents at home.

Let him whose voice is raised for war go join the army of the nation that he loves better than America, whether that nation be German or British. It will be happy riddance to those who would like to have a surcease of battle on this floor. Let him who thinks all peace lovers are cowards show his own brave heart by casting his fortunes with men who dare to do and die, or else forever let him hold his peace.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, you appropriated for four capital ships five months ago, which are still uncontracted for, and if the bill now reported by the committee is passed you will have four additional capital ships to construct after this Congress adjourns. Some of the members of the committee felt that there were important facts which should be presented to the Members of this House, believing that you would give to such facts a careful and business-like consideration, because those facts are not opposed to the authorized program which you passed about five months ago, but point out a speedier and more economical construction of such program. I will ask that the two amendments sent to the desk be now read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the amendments offered by the gentleman from Alabama,

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. OLIVER: Page 58, line 13, after the word "each," insert: "But contracts for the construction of battleships shall not be let until the construction of the battle cruisers heretofore appropriated for shall be first provided for."

Mr. PADGETT. I reserve a point of order on that. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman reserves a point of order on the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Second amendment by Mr. OLIVER: After the word "practicable"

"Provided, That in any contract made and entered into for the construction of any vessel herein appropriated for the period of final completion shall not be extended beyond 38 months."

Mr. MANN. A parliamentary inquiry. Is this amendment being offered now?

Mr. OLIVER. Simply read for the information of the committee in my time.

The CHAIRMAN. It is read for information.

Mr. PADGETT. I reserve a point of order.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman can not reserve a point of order

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will have his opportunity to reserve his point of order when the amendment is formally offered.

Mr. OLIVER. The prime purpose of one of these amendments is to insure the rapid construction and completion of that type of capital ship, namely, the battle cruiser, which all of the naval experts have stated to the committee is now most imperatively needed in the fleet. I might refer you to the speech made by the chairman of the committee about five months ago in which he undertook to summarize the opinions of our naval officers on this subject, and so convinced was he that he advised the construction of five battle cruisers and recommended the postponement of additional battleships until the immediate and early construction of these cruisers were assured. It is passing strange that he has so quickly changed his attitude on this subject, although the opinions of naval officers in reference to this subject remain the same. You can not hasten the building of battle cruisers so long as you feed shipbuilders with new and large offers for battleship construction.

The profits are much larger on the battleships.

The second amendment is intended to secure the construction of those capital ships within the time that we were told by the shipbuilders they could easily be completed in, 38 months having been the maximum time limit fixed by them in letters to the committee. Now, I am not unmindful of the fact that there have been many statements made to the effect that the reason why the shipbuilders now demand from 48 to 52 months to build these ships is because the shipbuilding labor in this country is limited and is now being worked to its full capacity. I want to call your attenton in this connection to some facts written by these same shipbuilders into our hearings. Before these ships were appropriated for they stated, and you will find it in the hearings, that they could construct any number of capital ships, far more than you have authorized or will authorize, within 38 months, and yet they said, "Our plants now are busier than ever before and are now being worked to their full limit." The same conditions prevailed then that pre-The same conditions prevailed then that prevail now as to congestion of business and as to the limitations upon the shipbuilding labor available for the construction of

After ships were authorized and appropriated for, we heard for the first time that it would require from 48 to 52 months to build them. Shipbuilders were speaking at one time for an authorization, and after this purpose was accomplished they were speaking for terms promising the largest profits and a supply of work for probable dull times in the long future.

Some reference has been made to the fact that one of the shipbuilding companies, namely, the Fore River, of Quincy, Mass., stated that they had lost much of their labor during the past year. They said they had 5,000 men last spring, and in July afterwards only 3,000, and now 4,000. That same company stated that they were now rapidly increasing their expert labor, and in less than a year they would have 6,500 men on their rolls. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Tague], who lives near the plant of the Fore River Shipbuilding Co., stated to the committee the other day, last Saturday, I think, that he understood this company had probably sent some of their expert labor into Canada, where the same company had business activities. Now, there happens to be another shipbuilding company, owned and controlled by the Bethlehem Steel Corporation, just as the Fore River Shipbuilding Co. is, and that other company is out on the Pacific coast. This Pacific company, so the gentleman from California [Mr. Nolan] tells us, instead of having fewer men now than they had last year. when the committee was assured by the Bethlehem Co. that these ships could be constructed within 38 months, have more than double the number of skilled artisans in this trade than they had last year. He further said that this Pacific subsidiary company had at this time from $85,000,000 to $100,000,000 worth of private work and more than 10,000 laborers, although last year they had less than 5,000 laborers. Now, I want to say that if you will examine the facts submitted to our committee and to this House, you will find that this claim of shipbuilding com-panies that because of scarcity of labor they are unable to promise construction within the limit of time previously fixed by them is unwarranted. They simply want long time on present high-price basis and the right to finish that work at leisure. Private work is now abundant and very profitable, and such contracts require comparatively short time for completion; so they argue we will employ our men on these and hold onto Government contracts, secured at high prices, for the dull days to come. You had in January, 1916, 20,000 men in Government navy yards, and on January 1, 1917, and now you have more than 25,000 men in these same yards.

You were told by the shipbuilding companies and by some who have sought to make it appear that the navy yards are not fair to their employees that Government yards have been losing employees because you were not paying as much as private shipyards were paying. And yet, when you examine the solemn facts, you find that in 12 months you have increased the employees at Government navy yards from 20,000 to more than 25,000. We also know from the statement of Mr. Nolan that the Union Iron Works Co., owned by the Bethlehem Steel Co., have increased in the last year their number of employees by more than 5,000. If these are the facts, who on this floor can justify giving more than 38 months to private shipbuilding companies to construct these capital ships? And yet unless you fix this limit of time you impliedly authorize 48 months to be given for completion.

It so happens that one ship that you ordered last year of the scout-cruiser type was contracted for within the limit of your appropriation and likewise within the time limit. The Seattle Construction & Dry Dock Co. contracted to build one of the scout cruisers, with heavy penalty for failure, in 30 months, and for less than the $5,000,000 appropriated therefor. Yet these other shipbuilding companies are now demanding 42 months' time on the same vessels and $6,000,000 as the price therefor. Are you willing to let the contracts to them on such terms?

It happened that when the shipbuilding companies in the East ascertained that you were willing to pay a certain flat sum for construction of a capital ship in 38 months and 20 per cent additional for speedier construction, as provided in your bill of last August, these same companies, instead of offering to build them earlier than 38 months, said: "We will demand not only the full flat price plus the 20 per cent for earlier construction, but will insist on an additional time limit of from 10 to 14 months for construction." I wonder if the Members of this House, acquainted now with the facts—and I defy the chairman or any member of the committee to deny their correctness-realize that you propose in this bill to appropriate for four additional capital ships, when you know that in doing so you are thereby impliedly saying to the Secretary of the Navy, "You are authorized to pay these abnormal prices and give this extension of time to the private shipbuilding companies."

The minority, feeling that you would like to be informed of the true facts, have undertaken to do so in their short report, and to suggest remedies to prevent this unwise and unjust expenditure of public funds, and I challenge any member of the committee to deny the correctness of any facts therein stated.

The chairman of the committee the other day said he could not understand why anyone should even ask for the postponement of the authorization of capital ships since five months ago we made solemn contracts with the people of the Nation that we would build within three years the program authorized in August last. I say to him that when you named the number of ships, you likewise coupled with it a promise to build them in a sane and reasonable way, both as to time and amount; and the facts before the committee, showing how this could be accomplished, were no doubt alluded to by the chairman of the committee, as well as others who discussed in public the large program. No doubt the people were told that this number of capital ships would be added within 38 months, and if shipbuilders accepted the 20 per cent bonus, they would be finally completed sooner. How now do you propose to keep the faith? Let 48 and 52 months answer? Then, in reference to the scout cruisers, you doubtless said they will be finally completed certainly in 32 months, and one has actually been already let for completion in 30 months. If the bonus of 20 per cent is earned, they will be completed sooner.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. What is the gentleman's remedy provided they will not enter into a contract?

Mr. OLIVER. The minority report discusses that fully and I will allude to it later. When the Secretary of the Navy recognized that he was being held up, he asked for an appropriation to fit up the Government navy yards. The minority report shows that these Government yards can be equipped as quickly as the private yards to construct the battle cruisers. We suggest that as one method to insure competition in the letting of this large program. We further suggest that to delay the building of the battleships, herein asked to be appropriated for, in addition to those appropriated for last year and not yet contracted for, you will find that some of the shipbuilding companies rather than have all your cruisers built in Government yards will make offers within the limits that they appeared anxious to get them for before the authorization was made last August. Stop feeding shipbuilders with battleship contracts, if you want your battle cruiser built. Remember that many naval officers have strongly recommended that all energies should be concentrated on the battle cruisers and scout cruisers, even though it postpone for the time being the further building of battleships.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, how much time did the gentleman consume?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama has 18 minutes remaining.

Mr. BUTLER. I will yield to the gentleman from Iowa five minutes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I very much regret that, at the point when we have reached the most important portion of the bill, so much of our time should be devoted to a discussion of matters that have nothing to do with it. With reference to this controversy which has unfortunately arisen, I have nothing to say but this, that although I have not been in this House long I know the distinguished gentleman who at present occupies the chair sufficiently so that when he makes a statement with reference to his own personal action it will be absolutely accepted by me. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, several days ago when we entered upon the discussion of this bill for the first time, it was suggested by some gentlemen upon the floor, for whose opinion I have high regard, that it should be voted upon at once, and without further discussion. I think that would have been a mistake, and I think it is a greater mistake that we have not more time now to devote to the discussion of the particular items under consideration, as to which I believe the House is insufficiently in-Mr. Chairman, this portion of the bill provides among other things for the construction of three battleships at a cost, exclusive of armor and armament, of lifteen and one-half million dollars each. The total amount of the new construction lion dollars each. program is $174,000,000. The additional cost of armor and armament upon each of these battleships will be something over $8,000,000, making their total cost over $24,000,000 each. are in reality authorizing a program of something over $250,-000,000 if we include the cost of armor and armament which will have to be put upon these ships. If I am correctly informed, and I think I am, the largest amount ever authorized in time of peace by the greatest naval power upon earth—England—for new construction was $38,000,000. By this bill we are authorizing five times that amount, and in what manner do we propose to expend it? When the amendment was offered by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. Humphrey] for the construction of more submarines, and another amendment in the same direction by the gentleman from Alabama, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] rose in his place and stated that we did not know anything about submarines; did not know what they could accomplish; and did not know what they were worth. It is true that we do not know the limits of the power of the submarines, nor their exact value; but if they are not of value for the defense of our harbors or the defense of any harbor, then all of the naval experts of the world have been badly mistaken. What do we know about these immense leviathans we are going to construct by this bill? It is contemplated that we shall build ships of 42,000 tons displace-

The largest we have ever built before have been of 32,000 tons. No naval power in the world has ever constructed such mam-They are to be driven, as we understand, by moth vessels. what is called the electric drive. I have no opinion as to the value of the electric drive, or that it is practicable, and if I had one every Member in the House would say it was not worth anything, and he would be right about it, but there are a large number of engineers who do know about this matter, and, as I understand it, the majority of the engineers say that this drive will not be practicable, and that it will not make for ships of the greatest defensive power and value. In order to put it in these ships they will have to put half the boilers or more above the protected deck. It will increase in the battle cruisers the cost by $1,300,000 and the tonnage by 1,000 tons. In the battleships it will increase the cost about $300,000, and increase the tonnage something like 200 tons. No effort has been made to submit this question to anyone, as I understand it, except to some of our naval experts, for experts they doubtless are, in our own departments, who have favored this kind of construc-It has been put in one comparatively small ship, the collier Jupiter, a vessel of about 7,000 tons.

Mr. Chairman, not only is this electric drive an experiment but these monster vessels are an experiment. I do not object to the experiment being made with one ship, although if we build only one and it proved a failure we would lose nearly $30,000,000. As it is, we are proposing to risk about $100,000,000 in an untried field into which no other naval power in the world has ventured. Common sense would seem to dictate that it was dangerous to put so many eggs into one basket—to put so many millions into one vessel which a single torpedo, discharged from a submarine far enough away so that its periscope could not be seen, would send one of these vessels and costly fortresses to the bottom of the ocean. And what a target these immense structures will provide for torpedo craft. What a fine mark they will make for the aviator upon which to drop his bombs. We are to contract for them also when material and labor is so high that their cost will exceed by one-third the expense in normal times. We can not hope to have them ready for action in less than four or five years. It will take one year simply to build the ways on which to construct them, and by the time they are constructed the danger will be passed. I am in favor of the motion of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. Hum-PHREY] to construct 50 submarines instead of 18, and if this was done I would be willing at the same time to cut down the number of battleships to one. Submarines can be constructed in six months. The battle cruisers, however, should not be reduced nor the scout cruisers. The battle cruisers have made the armored cruisers obsolete, and we will be fortunate if by the time we get the battle cruisers constructed they are not also obsolete.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY].

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, I wish to add just a similar statement to that of the gentleman from Alabama in his threeminute talk. Three years ago I became interested in the question of the effectiveness of the submarine. I read with care a long letter from Sir Percy Scott, constlered the greatest naval expert of England, in which he stated at that time that any port properly guarded by submarines would be free from attack by the battleships of an enemy. Recently I read this article referred to by another gentleman, written by Mr. Lake, one of the original builders of submarines, and he states that he can build a submarine that will carry 5,000 tons of dead-weight which on the sea will be an efficient weapon of offense against the biggest battleship that might be built. I feel as sure as that to-morrow morning's sun will rise that in 10 years from today the submarines of the navies of the world will not be simply a match but an overmatch for the battleships. [Applause.] I know that to-morrow if we authorize four battle-ships in this bill there is no possibility of having one of them completed in less than four years, and if we need a battleship, if we need any kind of ship for our defense, we are going to need it in the entanglements that will arise out of the present war. Submarines may be built in time for our emergency, but battleships can not be. [Applause.]

Now, there is not a man in this Hall who will deny that we will either need our warships inside of 3 years or not within 25 years. We can not get one of these big battleships we propose to order now inside of 3 years, and any one of them will be junk inside of 25 years. Why not, then, spend all the money we do spend for vessels we may have some reasonable hope of getting inside of 3 years. Yes; inside of 1 year, for in my opinion we will need them within 1 year, if ever. Mr. Chairman, the submarine is not an evolution; it is a revolution in naval warfare. Two things are coming to the front—the submarine and the explosive shell-and they are being used together. A shell can be thrown from a submarine that contains enough explosive to crush like an eggshell the thickest It has been done, not once but many times. are still spending millions for the old armor-piercing shells that will not be used at all in a few years. Leige and Namur were destroyed by explosive shells. The English battleships were sunk at the Dardanelles by explosive shells. Why not learn something from what has happened and is happening? German battleships have been bottled up for nearly three years and will remain so for three years more if the war lasts. What use are they? English battleships are not so thoroughly bottled up, but they would be if she had only one base of supplies and one outlet. Her battleships only get out when the coast is clear of submarines. She would do as well with half her battle-ships in the present war. If all of Germany's Navy and half of England's were to engage and sink each other, their naval warfare would stand just where it does now. If Germany had no battleships, her naval war condition would be just what it Situated as she is, England can seize without sinking the merchant ships of her enemy, if they had any. If England and America had war to-morrow, each could prey upon the merchant ships of the other, and that is all they could or would do. Neither could invade the other. It would be the same as between us and Germany. Why, then, are we goaded into authorizing now a hundred millions more of big battleships and urged to make contracts for them now, when prices are skyhigh? Back of all this hurry and flurry there are millions of profits. If the country could see the conditions as they actually are, they would order us simply to speed up the building of the battleships already authorized, and which may be completed in three years, and put all the rest of the money we spend into submarines, aeroplanes, and other vessels that can be completed in less time and that can be used with telling effect if we get into war. We should not authorize a single twenty or twentyeight million-dollar ship that can only be contracted for now and not completed in four years.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas

has expired.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Chairman, further replying to the question asked by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MILLER] some minutes since-and I know he is deeply interested in this subject, because I read with pleasure a speech he inserted in the Record yesterday calling attention to the large sums of money recently appropriated for the construction of battle-ships—I desire to say this: The Naval Committee will submit for your consideration an amendment to this bill empowering the President to commandeer private shipbuilding yards and other supply plants, if in his judgment an emergency arises making necessary the speedy construction of these ships already appropriated for and not yet contracted for, as well as any other ships heretofore authorized. The committee proposes to place at the disposal of the President, in the event such an emergency should arise, a large fund to insure the speedy construction of the authorized program and such additional naval small craft as he may deem necessary and urgent. adopt this amendment to be proposed by the committee you would place it in the power of the President to use all private shipbuilding yards exclusively for the construction of Government ships, and when the energies of these yards are devoted to this one end you can construct capital ships in from 24 to 30 months, just one-half the time demanded by these private companies from the Secretary of the Navy now. These facts are alluded to in the minority report. If this authority is to be conferred on the President in times of emergency, why, then, now make large appropriations for additional capital ships and thereby impliedly direct the Secretary of the Navy to give long time to shipbuilders at exorbitant prices? The gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY] well stated that if we now need capital ships we need them speedily, not four years from now, and the expert testimony of private shipbuilders, like the Bethlehem Co., shows that these capital ships can be constructed in large numbers within 24 months. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Butler] elicited this information from the presidents of these companies in the hearings before our committee.

Now, these same companies further say that to-day the cost of these ships is from 33½ to 50 per cent in excess of what it will be when the European war ends. In other words, that just as soon as peace is restored there will be a horizontal drop in the cost of battleships from 33 to 50 per cent? Is there any reason, then, for us to appropriate these large sums of money to be expended, probably the largest part of it, after the war ends and there is a reasonable, if not strong, probability that it may end within the next 12 months? Why unwisely spend a large sum of money out of the National Treasury when you know that from private shipbuilders you can not secure a contract to add a single capital ship to your Navy for four years? If an emergency arises making immediate construction necessary, the President can be clothed with power to accomplish this end. Why add to the seven ships now uncontracted for seven additional ships of the same type, and thereby, to use a common expression, "bull your own market"? The probabilities are that if you will exercise a little good judgment now, you will save money and time in the completion of the building program authorized last August.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLIVER. I will.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. May I interrupt the gentleman, because I am interested in his remarks? The gentleman stated that this emergency legislation was favorably agreed to by the whole Naval Committee.

Mr. OLIVER. And a rule making it in order will be submitted later

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. That is the bill, H. R. 20779, which the gentleman from Tennessee introduced?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. If that should be adopted, and I favor it as emergency legislation, would it enable us to get ships cheaper than under the building program?

Mr. OLIVER. I am not prepared to say you would get them cheaper, but unquestionably it will enable you to get them sooner, and I think all will agree that if 24 months in the construction of capital ships can be saved it would be a very satisfying economy, and for that reason the minority report claims that if its suggestions are followed you will probably save both money Let me briefly allude to a statement recently made by some gentlemen in reference to the rapid development in battleship construction. Do you know that five months ago you appropriated a large sum of money to build a battleship of 32,000 tons displacement, and that now-five months thereafteryou are discarding that standard or type of ship, perhaps rightly so, and are authorizing the expenditure of a much larger sum for the building of a 42,000-ton displacement battleship? Not only that, but you have discarded the 14-inch gun that you placed upon the battleship authorized five months ago, and are now proposing a 16-inch gun instead.

Each 16-inch gun costs approximately $100,000 in excess of the 14-inch gun. And it is but fair to state to you that Admiral Strauss, whom many, capable of judging, feel is the best expert on ordnance we have in the country, and who is recognized elsewhere as well, believes that the 14-inch gun is superior to the 16 inch. Admiral Sims, the head of your War College, also concurs in this opinion, and so do many other naval officers. Even the General Board have not made this change in reference to the caliber of your gun upon your battle cruisers, and if you will read the hearings no one undertakes to explain why a 16-inch gun should be placed on battleships and not on battle cruisers. The military purposes to be served by these two types of ships are essentially different, and it would seem that the larger and more powerful gun should be placed on battle cruisers, if on any, since this type of ship, because of its great speed, can choose its own battle range; and at a great distance, say from 16,000 to 18,000 yards, it is not more vulnerable-Capt. Plunkett, the head of target practice, tells us-than a battle-This is explained by the fact that the decks on both are lightly armored, and the shot at that distance, likely to do damage, will be a plunging shot falling on the deck.

I mention these facts not by way of criticism, but that you may understand that the evolution in the building of battle-ships is so rapid that the department now comes to us with essentially different recommendations from those made about five months ago. I am violating no confidence in saying to you that even while you are now considering the building of a 42,000-ton displacement battleship reliable rumor says that plans are being drawn for a battleship of far greater displacement and carrying twenty-four 16-inch guns or twenty 18-inch guns, and with a speed of more than 24 knots. So, perhaps if you should be called back in two months' time, instead of building the type of battleship you are now asked to appropriate for, you may be called on by naval experts to build a ship greatly superior in destructive power and speed to anything building or contemplated in this present bill.

Did you read that very interesting statement which the chairman inserted in his remarks, showing the relative military value of the different battleships heretofore authorized in the last five, seven, or eight years, and how one ship of the type you are now asked to recommend has a military value of three of the older types? If to-day you are facing a condition where just a little delay in appropriating for battleships may probably save both time and money, why not take the chance of securing at the same time greater efficiency by building later only the type that the experts then advise is best? A few months adds wonderfully to the storehouse of expert information on fighting craft of all kinds, large or small, and this is not strange since we know we are living at a time when experts of highest ability are pressed to the study of these subjects and questions by a threat of national extermination if not wisely solved.

Gentlemen, do you think we are open to the charge made by the chairman, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Padgett], of breaking a sacred covenant made with the people of the Nation last August, when you adopted the three-year building program, simply because for the reasons set forth in the minority report a postponement of further appropriations for capital ships is suggested until you can devise some plan for constructing seven heretofore appropriated for and not yet contracted for? Why, it is a singular fact that last year, when, as the gentleman from Illinois and others have said, so many thought that the need of additional ships of all types was so imperative, this same Congress, this same naval committee, presided over by the same chairman, were 9 months engaged in holding hearings on and considering the bill passed on the 29th day of last August, which constitutes the sacred compact to which the chairman referred and charged bad faith to those of us who made some sane and wise suggestions in the minority report as to how to hasten the carrying out of the program heretofore authorized, and practice sound economy. seemed to think that by taking 9 months then to consider what types of ships should be authorized and immediately appropriated for, that we were unpatriotic or that we were endangering the safety of the Nation.

The bill was brought in after extended hearings and quietly passed on August 29, 1916. You were then led to believe that all of the ships you appropriated for could be completed in 38 months', and less, time, and with this you went before the country. Yet, when six members of the Naval Affairs Committee in five months after you passed this large authorization, the largest ever made by any country at one time, now undertake to suggest and prove that you can not build these ships heretofore appropriated for within the time you impliedly promised, if you allow shipbuilding companies to dictate their own terms, and pointing out how this can be avoided, the chairman under-takes to indict us for not keeping the faith and of violating a solemn compact made with the people.

I now remind the chairman of the committee, who makes this charge, that the essence of that compact—if it be a compact made with the people of the Nation was not only that we would construct the vessel so authorized, but that we would build them within a certain time and at a fixed stipulated sum.

If this be a solemn compact, from whom has permission been secured to extend time of completion and cost of construction?

I have long since learned that where you have something to build, which you claim is urgently needed, that the most important element of a contract therefor, yea, its very essence, is time of completion, and he who ignores or forgets that important element has himself violated the very contract which he professes to carry out, and violated such contract in its most essential particular. That is why the minority have felt that this House should know the facts and understand that you can not build these ships within a reasonable time, which you are asked to appropriate for, unless some plan is provided for hastening construction.

The minority report first suggested what the majority seems to have entirely overlooked, as to advisability of empowering the President to commandeer private shipyards if an emergency should arise.

Now, in conclusion, let me say I recognize the force of the statements made by many as to the value of submarines. you have read carefully the statement that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Callaway] placed in the Record this morning from Admiral Grant, you will see the great possibilities of the sub-marine, and no one can foretell to what extent it may some day challenge, if you please, the command of the seas, even as against battleships and battle cruisers.

Yet, I do not belong to those who at this time believe that we should postpone the construction of additional battleships and battle cruisers and build submarines instead. If you are convinced, however, that it is not wise to order the building of three battleships at this time, until you can be first assured of their early completion, either through authority conferred on the President to commandeer the shipyards in an emergency, or by an appropriation to speedily equip your navy yard so as to make them available for building additional capital ships, then in my opinion it would be wise to increase your appropriations for submarines so as to insure the early construction of 50 submarines of the type specified in the pending bill. plause.

Mr. Chairman, I will insert in the RECORD, under leave to extend, the following editorial from the February 3, 1917, issue of the Scientific American, which shows the necessity of guarding against the demands of private companies both as to time and price:

THOSE ARMOR-PIERCING SHELLS.

ing against the demands of private companies both as to time and price:

THOSE ARMOR-PIERCING SHELLS.

We have so often in the past feit called upon to criticize certain features of Mr. Daniels's administration of the great department of which he is the head that it is with very real satisfaction that we extend our approval to his recent action in awarding a contract for armor-plercing shells to a foreign manufacturer. The Secretary's errors were in no small measure due to a system, in which a civilian with no previous small measure due to a system, in which a civilian with no previous continually called upon to pass judgment on matters of a highly technical character. Not even the most severe critic of the Secretary can deny that in the past year or so he has shown evidence of increasing appreciation of the inner spirit of the New, a more comprehensive grasp of the fundamental principles and the broad technical problems.

The award of the contract for shells to a foreign maker has aroused an inevitable and bitter protest on the part of our own manufacturers; and in sheer self-defense the Navy Department has felt called upon, through its Secretary, to make known to the public certain inside facts in an unassallable position by showing thes have placed the Secretary in an unassallable position by showing thes have placed the Secretary in an unassallable position by showing thes have placed the Secretary in an unassallable position by showing the havy with 10-inch and 14-inch armor-plercing projectiles. The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, may I have the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs? Does the gentleman from Tennessee propose to finish this debate to-night?

Mr. PADGETT. I wanted to. I wanted to vote on these amendments.

Mr. BUTLER. To-night?
Mr. PADGETT. Yes.
Mr. BUTLER. Then you will have to get a pretty big quorum here. I am pretty tired. I have sat here and listened for six hours to this debate. I do not want to listen any longer.

Mr. PADGETT. There are 31 minutes remaining, as I understand.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; 31 minutes remaining, of which the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Butler] has 16 minutes, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Padgett] has 10, and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Burnett] has 5.

Mr. PADGETT. Suppose that at the end of the debate the committee rise, and vote on the amendments on Monday?

Mr. MANN. That will be an intelligent method. Still I will not object to it. Nobody knows now how the amendments stand. They will know no better on Monday. Still I am not objecting to unintelligent methods, so long as the other side controls. fLaughter.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. Platt].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. PLATT rose

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman from New York begins, for the benefit of the House I will state that after the expiration of the debate, which will be about 30 minutes from now, I will move that the committee do rise. That will leave pending all these amendments that will be voted

Mr. MANN. While the gentleman has the floor, may I ask him a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes. Mr. MANN. If a rule is brought in and agreed to, providing for the offering of amendments covering the commandeering of shipyards and the condemnation of the aeroplane patents, when will those amendments be offered?

Mr. PADGETT. I was going to offer the commandeering one at the end of line 19, on page 59.

Mr. MANN. That is the next page?
Mr. PADGETT. Yes; that is the next page. Then it would come up early? Mr. MANN.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes. Then, the other one is on page 5 of the bill. I offered that, as the gentleman may remember, and he reserved a point of order, and we passed over it with the understanding that I might return to call it up.

Mr. BURNETT. Does the rule provide that there shall be debate on the amendments?

Mr. PADGETT. The rule provides that it shall be made in order under the rules of the House in the Committee of the Whole, and it will be open to debate and amendment.

Mr. BUTLER. It will be open to amendment, but I guess it will be impossible to amend it.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes. Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Will the gentleman say again at what time he proposes that the committee rise?

Mr. PADGETT. About 30 minutes from now.

That will leave all amendments pending.

Mr. LONGWORTH, For Tuesday morning?

Mr. PADGETT. Monday morning. The final vote in the House will be Tuesday morning. We will finish the debate on Tuesday.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask the same privilege.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks the same privilege. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, finding that there was a little time going to waste, I asked for five minutes of it, not because I know very much about the Navy, but because it seems to me that I know quite as much as some of the gentlemen who have spoken, and I wanted to utter a little protest against the extravagant ideas that people have of the value of submarines.

The submarine is a new and spectacular affair, and everybody seems to think if we have submarines we do not need battleships or anything else at all. Now, it seems to me that submarines are not worth as much as aeroplanes, and an aeroplane carrying only one or two men can fly over the water and find a submarine and destroy it, or lead to its destruction; and if you have a big fleet of aeroplanes, with only one or two men in each one, handled as easily and with less danger, perhaps, than submarines, you can kill off the submarine menace in a comparatively short time. It seems to me that the proper balance of the different classes of vessels in the Navy, battleships, destroyers, cruisers, and submarines, is something we must leave to the naval experts. I believe they are all valuable. If were going to go blind on my own ideas, I should be inclined to build more destroyers, believing the destroyer a much more valuable ship than any of the others in proportion to its cost. It is fast, and if we should get involved in the present unpleasantness on the other side of the ocean, or if we are going to try to protect our merchant vessels, the destroyer is the ship that we want to do it with. The submarine always runs from a de-stroyer. The destroyers hunt out and destroy the submarines with considerable regularity, apparently.

Mr. ADAIR. May I ask the gentleman a question for information?

Mr. PLATT. Yes.

Mr. ADAIR. I should like to ask the gentleman, Is England making an effort along the lines the gentleman suggests to destroy the German submarines by aeroplanes?

Mr. PLATT. I will say to the gentleman that I was talking with an official from the Navy Department awhile ago, and I asked him what information the Navy actually had as to how many submarines had been destroyed by the British Navy, and he said that exact figures could not be gotten at, but, so far as they knew, at least 100, and possibly 150, and that one of the ways they had of destroying them was by means of aeroplane scouting. The submarine at that time was of a smaller type, which would go and lie in shallower places, in estuaries, and so forth, and it was easy enough to see them by flying over the water, and then go and notify the destroyers to come up and draw a net in front of them, or lure them out and destroy them or capture them. In smooth water I understand they can be seen to a considerable depth below the surface by flying over them.

Mr. BUTLER. A hundred feet below the surface, Mr. ADAIR. In other words, they fly over them and discover them, and then, when they know where they are, they take means to destroy them.

Mr. BUTLER. They can discover them a hundred feet under the surface of the water.

Mr. PLATT. They say they can be seen a hundred feet under the surface of the water. I do not suppose that can be true if the water is very rough.

Mr. BUTLER. No. Mr. PLATT. I understand they make a certain amount of wave on the top of the water, even when they are quite a little distance below the surface, with their periscopes entirely submerged. Of course, when they are sailing with their periscope submerged they can not see anything. When they are sailing with their periscopes above water they can see only about 3 miles, as the gentleman from Massachusetts stated.

Mr. ADAIR. If the gentleman knows, has England destroyed many of them since this new order went into effect, and has she used aeroplanes to do so?

Mr. PLATT. That, of course, is so recent that nobody can These new and larger submarines have a longer radius and go farther out from the shore. Consequently, an aeroplane has got to fly over longer distances. Most of the older submarines, I think, were discovered quite near the shore, in comparatively shallow water, but they can be seen away off.

Mr. ADAIR. And that is the method employed to locate and destroy them?

Mr. PLATT. Yes, so I am told by those in a position to know

Mr. BURNETT. As I understand, only a few have been destroyed by battleships.

Mr. PLATT. I should think a battleship would be the worst kind of a weapon against them. Mr. BURNETT. Have any been destroyed by battleships?

Mr. PLATT. Possibly; but battleships are usually accompanied by destroyers for protection against submarines. The only advantage a battleship could have is that with its higher top it might be able to see a periscope with a good glass farther than the periscope could see the battleship, although I do not know that that is true and should greatly doubt it, unless in very clear weather.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. FREEMAN].

Mr. FREEMAN. Mr. Chairman, in these three minutes I want to say a few words in behalf of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts. In my humble opinion, we should consider the stern lessons of the past, because they point out unerringly the clear duty of the present. It is our plain and manifest duty as a Nation that desires only to defend and protect itself to maintain the greatest Navy of any nation in the world. Consider for a moment the history of the world. When Spain was the most powerful military nation Philip the Second and his Armada did not put a single Spaniard on the shores of England. When Louis the Fourteenth, with the genius of Condé and Turenne, was overrunning the Rhine Provinces and the Low Countries, he could not put a single French soldier upon English soil. Napoleon Bonaparte rode as a conqueror into every capital of Europe, but he was not permitted to land even as a captive on the shores of England. To-day Kaiser William of Germany is pushing his army into Poland and Russia, into Servia and Roumania, into Belgium and France, but he has not placed a single German on the shores of England. Now, my fellow Members, the conclusion is obvious. This rich and resourceful Nation of ours should proceed to build at once and continue to maintain forever a navy sufficient to prevent any other nation in the world from transporting troops across either the Pacific or the Atlantic Ocean. [Applause.] I yield back the remainder of my time.

[Mr. BURNETT addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Chairman, at the request of Mr. BUTLER, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. EMERSON]. Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Chairman, in these times when we are preparing for national defense by means of submarines and submarine destroyers and torpedo boats and battleships, it is well for us to call to mind that there are other means of national defense than the implements of destruction. Engraved upon the stone over the tomb of the late John Hay, in Lakeview Cemetery, Cleveland, Ohio, is this inscription:

The fruit of righteousness is sown in peace to them that make peace.

Would it not be well if we had in the councils of this Nation to-day such men as the late John Hay, the Secretary of State

some years ago? [Applause.]
Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER].

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I do not agree with some of my colleagues who would make much further increases in this bill. I do not agree with those who would take away any portion of the present bill. I believe that the Committee on Naval Affairs has given to this great and important work the best possible service, and I think the bill meets fairly well the wishes of the people and also the present needs. I trust that I am as patriotic as the average American and the average Member of this House. I trust that I want to do the very best that it is possible to do for my country. I have endeavored to do that in service in this House and I endeavored to do it when this coun-

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DYER. Yes.

Mr. GORDON. Do you undertake to measure men's patriotism by the amount of appropriations voted out of the Public Treasury, regardless of whether they are needed or not?

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I do not think there is anything in what I have said that warrants such a question, but I will say that I do not, of course.

Mr. GORDON. Then how is it pertinent here how much patriotism you have as a Member on this question of appropria-

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman from Ohio will observe the rules of the House in his interrogatories of the gentleman who has the floor.

Mr. DYER. Oh, we are accustomed to the gentleman from Ohio and his method of procedure, which is contrary to all precedent in the House; but, Mr. Chairman, we in this country to-day are hysterical about the whole situation. We find that the public press has been misled in many instances and false and misleading statements have gone out to the country. We find that the departments of the Government, some of them, are in hysteria, so much so that you can not go to the Departments of the War and the Navy, and probably others, without being identified. Even Members of Congress must be identified who go there upon official business, because of the scare that affects the administration and those in power.

Mr. Chairman, there ought to be no need for that. There ought to be no need for any outrageous appropriation for the Navy or for the Army. I think we ought to have a good Navy and one equal to all emergencies that are likely to arise. We have no trouble so far as this country is concerned now or in the near future, as I can see it, except what appears with Germany, but if we can bridle, and I think we ought to bridle, the few insane Americans that we have who are anxious to travel in the dangerous zone where the submarine warfare is raging and I see in the newspaper to-day where an American who had booked for sailing on an American liner canceled it and intended sailing on a British ship going to the war zone. Mr. Chairman, there may be no way that we can prevent them. There may be no way under strict parliamentary law and the laws of nations that justify us in stopping them, and yet that person may be the one who will bring us to the most disastrous war, whether we win or lose in the end. It means great loss, and a man like that ought not to be permitted, regardless of what law there may be in this country, to sail upon a British ship under those conditions. [Applause.] We ought to have the power, and it ought to be exercised by somebody in stopping that man the same as we stop a man rushing into a burning building, where he would surely lose his life. In the latter case that is permitted in the name of humanity. There ought to be a way, too, to stop fool Americans at this time from going to Europe on belligerent merchantmen or ships. Insanity ought to be lodged against them so they can be detained, for they are either crazy or they are in a criminal conspiracy to get the United States into this horrible war.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BUTLER. How much time, Mr. Chairman, have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has three minutes remain-

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, as we all remember at the last session we authorized a certain program. We appropriated for one-half of the program at the time. This appropriation is for one-fourth of the program, or one-half of the half of that which was left. Whether or not we will be able to construct it within the time I would like to see it constructed, I do not know. That it can be very greatly expedited I do know, and it might be interesting for the few of us who are here considering a paragraph in the bill that will involve something like $100,000,000, to know that one shippard has already put three shifts on the Idaho, which was 60 per cent completed last week, and we hope to see her launched within 40 or 50 days, and completed so that it may be used within three months' time. I believe that with the disposition shown by the manufacturers in the United States, spoken of in the newspapers we read whenever we open a paper, this program and whatever the country may need in the way of national preparedness may be procured at quite an early date and on terms quite satisfactory. It is true that the prices have advanced, that labor has increased, not in its demands but in what it deserves, and I do not believe that it receives more than it ought to have in view of the advance in prices of living. I do not know whether the program can be completed within the estimated sum-$588,000,000-which we anticipated it might be completed for, or whether it will require more money. I suppose it will.

The question will be given us perhaps Monday next to determine whether or not we shall go on and build the balance of these ships and enlist the Navy up to its authorized strength; I do not know whether we shall ever need this great strength; I have my own views. I have not time now, but before this bill is completed I expect to make some remarks that are strictly personal. I do not know what the country should have in the way of national preparedness, but I do know that the duty has been placed by the Constitution upon Congress to provide for the national defense, and that in preparing the defense at this time we have the approval of the President of the United States, the Secretary of the Navy, and all of those charged with the responsibility of using the defense. I do not know whether the test of patriotism is measured by merely voting for large appropriations. I do know, however, that there are plenty of men patriotic enough to die, convinced they have done what is right, and the only approval they receive is from God Almighty, who is the only witness to their heroism. I do not believe it is

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. BUTLER (continuing). To face cannon amidst the roar of great guns in order to show patriotism; an equal reward is due to men who do what in their consciences they believe is right to do for the cause of their country. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.
The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Padgett] is recognized for

10 minutes

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, this afternoon I took the precaution to announce that we would not have any votes this afternoon, fully realizing that the Members would avail themselves of the privilege and the pleasure and the opportunity of leaving, and that I would have only those who were so kind and generous as to remain to hear what I might have to say.

As stated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Butler], the ranking member of the minority upon the committee, only a few months ago, in August of last year, we passed the naval appropriation bill in which we, after due consideration, after long hearings, full discussion here and in the Senate, and sidered in conference, adopted a definite program providing for so many battleships, so many battle cruisers, so many scout cruisers, so many torpedo destroyers, so many submarines, and certain other additional ships auxiliary in their character. adoption of that program received almost the unanimous vote of both sides. It was an overwhelming majority. In the bill last year we made appropriations for a certain proportion of that program, which it was provided should be begun within three years. In the bill now before the House we have taken substantially one-half of the remainder of the program from the appropriation of last year, leaving half of the remainder, or, as stated by the gentleman, about a little more than one-fourth of the total three-year program for next year. That was a solemn pledge that we made to the people of the country. The Congress of the United States could not in any more definite way plight its faith and its honor to the American people than was done by the legislation participated in by both sides of the Chamber in the last session of the Congress.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman be kind enough to yield? Mr. PADGETT. Yes. Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman object to having it stated in his remarks here that when this legislation was first passed through the House 363 gentlemen voted for the measure; that Mr. Browning, of New Jersey, voted against it because of reasons he stated at the time; that Mr. Graham, of Pennsylvania, voted against it because he objected to one portion of the bill, which included Government ownership; and that Mr. London, of New York, and Mr. RANDALL voted against it? There were 4 votes in opposition and 363 votes for it.

Mr. PADGETT. So that I was correct in stating that it was substantially a unanimous declaration of the House

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Chairman, I was included in the ones that voted for it, not the three-year program, which was the first proposition that came in here, but I did not vote for it because it was necessary.

Mr. PADGETT. This was the last one; the one when you were not here

Mr. BUTLER. The one that passed the bill.

Mr. CALLAWAY. I wanted to say that I voted for that program with the understanding with some members of the committee who were in favor of a larger program that they would do everything to keep it down to that-the first proposition that was brought in.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Does the gentleman advance the doctrine that support of a measure this year pledges a man to support it next year or next week-a bigger one or the same one?

Mr. PADGETT. I take the position that having pledged our faith and our honor to the American people in August that we put our hands to the plow, and I do not propose to look back.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Will the gentleman answer my question? Mr. PADGETT. Yes; I answered.

Mr. SLAYDEN. If he votes for a measure this year, does that commit him to vote for this same measure next year, when conditions may be different?

Mr. PADGETT. Conditions may be different, but they are not different in the sense of going back but different in the sense of going forward. Mr. SLAYDEN. The gentleman is advancing an opinion now. Mr. PADGETT. The gentleman calls it an opinion.

Mr. SLAYDEN. That is a statement; that is not reason. Mr. PADGETT. The gentleman calls it an opinion; but on the front page of every newspaper in this country for the past week has been incontestible and undoubted evidence of changed conditions that call not only for wise and patriotic consideration of public questions but for intelligent action and for keeping faith in that program with the American people. [Applause.]

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman—
The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman yield? The CHAIRMAN.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Did not the gentleman from Tennessee, on his motion to recommit, vote against substantially this thing?

Mr. PADGETT. No; that motion to recommit was a far different proposition, and if it had carried would have put in this bill this year at least $50,000,000 more than it will carry when it becomes a law. I voted against that because it was a very different program.

Mr. SLAYDEN. It makes no difference whether it was fifty or one hundred millions more.

Mr. PADGETT. It is a different proposition. I am in favor of, and, as I have stated on other occasions, I had much to do with originating, the continuous program. I was for a five-year program. I tried to get it through my committee, but when I could not I withdrew it. But when the three-year program came from the Senate we submitted it to this House, and this House approved it by a vote of 393, I believe the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Butler] said.

Mr. BUTLER. No. That was the House bill. There were 52 or 54 votes in the House against the conference report. I gave the chairman the House bill vote.

Mr. PADGETT. Then I was mistaken in saying to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Callaway] a moment ago that that was the vote that he did not participate in. He did participate in that vote in which there were only 5 in the negative.

Mr. BUTLER. The gentleman from Texas voted against recommitting the bill.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir; so did I.

Mr. BUTLER. He was paired in favor of this bill, according to the RECORD

Mr. BURNETT. No. It shows that he voted for it. That was the first time, I will say to my friend, and for the reason that he just stated; but the inference left, as I understand it, was that when it came back from conference there were only votes against it.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee yield to the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir. Mr. GORDON. What do you mean by your statement about the front pages of these newspapers? They have no seats on the floor of this House, have they?

Mr. CALLAWAY. Yes; the biggest seats here. [Laughter.] Mr. PADGETT. I have shown that those who occupy the seats in this House read the front pages of the newspapers.

Mr. GORDON. But you do not undertake to say that our official action should be controlled by what is on the front pages of the newspapers, would you?

Mr. PADGETT. No; but I would say that when the front pages of the newspapers record facts that address themselves to our intelligence and our patriotism we should heed them. [Applause.]

Mr. GORDON. Well, that is a very important qualification. [Laughter.]

Mr. PADGETT. Now I move, Mr. Chairman, that the committee rise

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee moves that the committee rise. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the Chair, Mr. Page of North Carolina, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 20632) making appropriations for the Naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows

To Mr. Gregg, for one week, on account of important busi-

HOUR OF MEETING ON MONDAY-11 O'CLOCK A. M.

Mr. PADGETT rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Tennessee rise?

I wanted to ask unanimous consent that Mr. PADGETT. when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock a. m. on Monday. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PRIVATE CALENDAR.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Monday evening a session of the House be held to consider bills on the Private Calendar, the session to commence at 7.30 o'clock and to sit not later than 10.30 o'clock. I might say I make that request after having consulted gentlemen on both sides who are interested in the matter; and I make the further request that the House stand in recess until 7.30 Monday evening from the time it finishes its work on Monday afternoon.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Delaware asks unanimous consent that next Monday afternoon, when the House stops business

Mr. BENNET. Would it not be a good idea to make that 6 o'clock or any hour prior to that?

Mr. KITCHIN. Make it "if the House should sooner adjourn.

The SPEAKER. No; not "adjourn." The gentleman from Delaware asks unanimous consent that on next Monday there shall be a night session, to begin at 7.30 o'clock and extend to not exceeding 10.30 o'clock.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, has the gentleman consulted the leader on our side?

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. I made a statement that the gentleman possibly did not hear, that I consulted the leaders on both sides.

Mr. BUTLER. Very well.
Mr. KITCHIN. To consider unobjected bills on the Private Calendar

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Yes; unobjected bills on the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER. Now, as to the time of taking the recess, we got into a tangle about that the other day.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw that part of the request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. RAKER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman at what point he proposes to commence the consideration of those bills?

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. I presume, unless unanimous consent is given otherwise, they would start at the beginning of the calendar.

Mr. RAKER. Why can we not make an agreement now to start at the beginning of the calendar, and then that will end any question about it at that time?

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. If the gentleman wants to do that, it is satisfactory to me, although the calendar would be started at the beginning unless changed by unanimous consent.

Mr. RAKER. Yes; I ask that we commence at the beginning of the Calendar for Private Claims.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] asks to begin at the top of the calendar. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. Miller] as modified by the amendment of the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER]?

There was no objection.

LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, I make a similar request. The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objec-

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the House, under its previous order, adjourned until Monday, February 12, 1917, at 11 o'clock a. m.

ELLIOTT W. MAJOR.

By the governor:

CORNELIUS ROACH, Secretary of State.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the governor of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, transmitting a certified copy of a concurrent resolution of the general assembly pledging support to the President. The communication will be printed in the Record and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The communication is as follows:

HARRISBURG, PA., February 10, 1917.

The PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE: Washington, D. C.

Sir: I have the honor to herewith inclose a certified copy of a resolution of the general assembly of this State assuring the United States Government of the loyal support and full cooperation of Pennsylvania in every national undertaking which may be necessary to protect and vindicate American rights, dignity, and honor, wherever or by whom they may be endangered.

I have the honor to be,

Very respectfully, yours,

MARTIN W. BRUMBAUGH.

Concurrent resolution of the General Assembly of Pennsylvania.

Concurrent resolution of the General Assembly of Pennsylvania.

Whereas the President of the United States has informed the Congress that a very grave crisis exists in the international relations of the country which, in his opinion, may lead to the necessity of defending our national rights, dignity, and honor by force of arms, all other reasonable and honorable means having failed after patient and forbearing negotiations: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved (if the house concur). That the Senate and House of Representatives of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, sitting in general assembly at Harrisburg, do send to the President and Government of the United States assurances of the loyal support and full cooperation of Pennsylvania in every national undertaking which, in their wisdom, may be necessary to meet the situation and to protect and vindicate American rights, dignity, and honor, wherever or by whom they may be endangered; and be it further

Resolved, That the general assembly calls upon the people of Pennsylvania to give to the President and the Federal Government in all ways their patriotic support and assistance in whatever plans or measures may be required in the present emergency, as they have done in the past in every crisis in the Nation's history; and be it further

Resolved, That the governor of the Commonwealth be, and he is hereby, requested to forward copies of these resolutions to the President of the United States, and to the presiding officers of both the Houses of Congress.

H. M. Kephart, Chief Clerk Senate.

H. M. KEPHART, Chief Clerk Senate. The foregoing resolution was concurred in February 6, 1917.

THOMAS H. GARVIN, Chief Clerk House.

Approved the 9th day of February, A. D. 1917.

MARTIN G. BRUMBAUGH.

OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF THE COMMONWEALTH OF PENNSYLVANIA, Harrisburg, February 9, 1917.

I, Cyrus E. Woods, secretary of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, having the custody of the great seal of Pennsylvania do hereby certify that the foregoing and annexed is a full, true, and correct copy of the original concurrent resolution passed by the General Assembly of Pennsylvania, and approved by the governor on the 9th day of February, A. D. 1917.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the great seal of the State to be affixed the day and year above written.

[SELL.]

CYRUS E. WOODS,

Secretary of the Commonwealth.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a telegram which will be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The telegram is as follows:

The telegram is as follows:

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN., February 11, 1917.

Hon. Thomas W. Marshall,

Vice President of the United States, Washington, D. C.:

We, American citizens, assembled in mass meeting at the call of the mayor of Minneapolis, beg to address the President and the Congress of the United States as follows:

1. We appreciate the difficulties confronting the administration in the conduct of our foreign affairs. We are grateful that our beloved America is not a party to the awful war which is devastating Europe and pray that you will use your great influence and authority to keep our land in peace.

2. We desire to respectfully recall the fact that in the election of November the citizens of this country strongly favored our keeping out of the war in Europe, and the administration then elected was committed to a policy of peace. To now abandon that policy and plunge us into war, we hold, is to make a solemn mockery of the great American principle of the consent of the governed.

3. We denounce the attempt of a large portion of our press to stampede our great Nation into war; and, therefore, we believe that the time for the citizens and the Government to take counsel is now, for as loyal men and women of America we shall stand by our country, but as thoughtful men and women we realize and repeat the time of sane counsel is now, for when the fateful plunge is taken our lips must and shall be sealed.

4. We favor the use of the influence of this country in every proper way to end the horrible conflict in Europe, reminding the world that we stand for the American principle of equal justice to both sides, fair play to all. To that end we favor a conference of all the neutral nations to consider peaceful ways and means of terminating the war at the earliest possible moment.

5. We urge all American citizens and believe it their duty in behalf of their country to keep out of the barred zones of Europe of all belligerents.

6. We believe that those citizens who object to being dragged into of their country to keep out of the barred zones of Europe of all belligerents.

6. We believe that those citizens who object to being dragged into fighting other nations' batties are not lacking in patriotism for America, and we denounce the idea promulgated by the press that the only desire for war is the test of loyalty.

7. We hold to the principle laid down by Washington, Father of his Country, to avoid entangling alliances with European countries, and in our dealings with other nations to deal justly by all and make favorites of none; and if during this awful war our Nation in its dealings with either or any belligerent has done anything that savors of favoritism to any country we do not approve of it and we hope and pray all such things shall cease, so that our beloved land may stand before the judgment bar of history without a stain upon her flag, the flag we love.

Resolved, That copies hereof be forwarded to the President and Congress of the United States and the press.

I hereby certify above resolution was enthusiastically and unanimously adopted by meeting of 3,500 citizens, limit of hall capacity. Seven thousand more could not gain entrance. Kindly present to Senate.

Charles A. Dalby, Chairman of Mass Meeting.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a telegram from Edwin Fuller Torrey, secretary of the United States National Lawn Tennis Association, of Clinton, N. Y., which will be printed in the RECORD.

The telegram is as follows:

CLINTON, N. Y., February 12, 1917.

PRESIDENT UNITED STATES SENATE, Washington, D. C.:

Washington, D. C.:

Whereas our country is facing a grave international crisis; and whereas we, the assembled delegates of the United States Lawn Tennis Association, represent directly and indirectly more than a million tennis players throughout the United States; be it Resolved, That we heartly indorse the action of President Wilson in severing diplomatic relations with the German Empire; that we pledge to the President and Congress of the United States our utmost support in whatever further steps they deem necessary to maintain American rights against lawless aggression, and to that end we place the services of the association and its national organization absolutely at their disposal; and be it further Resolved, That the secretary be, and hereby is, directed to transmit a copy of this resolution to the President and the Congress.

In accordance with instructions and power with which I am clothed I therefore transmit such message.

EDWIN FULLER TORREY,
Secretary United States National Lawn Tennis Association. Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the dairy interests of New England are very much disturbed over the proposition that is pending in some form to reduce the tax on oleomargarine. beg to request in this connection that the two following telegrams be read from the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read.

The Secretary read the two telegrams, as follows:

NASHUA, N. H., February 10, 1917.

Hon. Jacob H. Gallinger, Washington, D. C.:

One hundred Holstein breeders, members of the New Hampshire Holstein Friesian Club, at their annual meeting request you to make a vigorous endeavor to prevent the passage of the Underwood amendment to place a tax on oleo at 2 cents and removing all other restrictions.

Amendment if passed will be blow to dairing.

P. A. Campbell, Secretary.

DERRY, N. H., February 10, 1917.

Hon. JACOB H. GALLINGER, Washington, D. C .:

The dairy interests in the United States should be protected, and the New Hampshire State Grange is emphatically opposed to the Underwood amendment or to any change in the law which will lessen the present tax on oleomargarine. This amendment would be a blow to producers and consumers alike.

WESLEY ADAMS, Master of the New Hampshire State Grange.

Mr. GALLINGER. It will be remembered that on a previous occasion I had placed in the RECORD a protest from the commissioner of agriculture of the State of New Hampshire on this same subject.

Now I ask to have placed in the RECORD a concurrent resolution adopted by the Legislature of New Hampshire assuring the President of the United States of their approval of the step he has taken in severing diplomatic relations with the German Government:

STATE OF NEW HAMPSHIRE, 1917.

Whereas the German Government has notified the Government of the United States that it is the purpose of Germany to sink, without warning, all merchant ships found within certain prescribed zones regardless of the rights of neutrals to the freedom of the seas, and regardless of all humanitarian considerations; and Whereas the President of the United States on April 18, 1916, notified the German Government that unless that Government immediately abandoned its frightful and inhuman methods of submarine warfare as applied to neutrals, the Government of the United States can have no choice but to sever diplomatic relations with the German Empire; and
Whereas the President of the United States, in accordance with this warning to the German Government and the subsequent declaration of that Government that it will no longer regard the rights of neutrals and the dictates of humanity in conducting its submarine warfare, has broken off diplomatic relations with Germany: Therefore be it

Resolved by the New Hampshire House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That we approve the action taken by the President of the United States, and that we pledge to him the united support of the people of this State in all his efforts to maintain and defend the dignity, integrity, and rights of this country.

Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be forwarded to the President of the United States and to our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

Mr. Gallinger, Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. GALLINGER presented a petition of the Dartmouth National Bank, of Hanover, N. H., praying for a reduction of 5 per cent of the reserves required of country banks in the Federal reserve bank, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

He also presented a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Dover, N. H., praying for national prohibition, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I present to the Senate and ask to have printed in the RECORD telegrams from two of the largest ship-owning companies of Savannah, Ga., tendering the use of their wharves and of their vessels to the Government if any occasion should require it.

There being no objection, the telegrams were ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

SAVANNAH, GA., February 9, 1917.

Hon. Hoke Smith, Washington, D. C .:

We hereby give you full authority to tender to the Government, without compensation, the services of our organization, to be used in any manner desired in event declaration of war or in preparing for such emergency.

STRACHAN SHIPPING CO.

BRUNSWICK, GA., February 9, 1917.

Senator Hoke Smith, Washington, D. C .:

Washington. D. C.:

With reference telegram sent you by our Savannah office, this office not only heartily concurs but further desires to point out that not only the machinery of our shipping offices at Brunswick, Savannah, Charleston, and Fernandina are at the disposal of the Government, but also our outside physical organizations, including wharf, superintendent, clerks, stevedore foreman, etc., at various ports mentioned, who are thoroughly experienced in physical handling of vessels, their cargo, heavy and weights are similarly tendered, but such physical work desired would necessarily be on the basis of actual pay rolls.

F. D. M. STRACHAN.

F. D. M. STRACHAN.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, under the conditions which have been brought about by the European war a great impetus has been given to the shipbuilding industry. That is especially true in the Northwest, and at Seattle, in the State of Washington, there are quite a good many ships of very large tonnage being constructed. Most of those ships are being constructed for foreigners who are largely citizens of neutral countries, and especially for Norwegians. A bill has been introduced in Congress to amend the shipping act which was passed at the last gress to amend the shipping act which was passed at the last session of Congress by providing that no vessel shall enter the navigable waters of the United States unless it is owned by American citizens. I have here a couple of telegrams from Seattle, showing what those people think will be the effect of such legislation upon the shipbuilding industry, especially at Scattle. I select that the telegrams may be read and referred to Seattle. I ask that the telegrams may be read and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

There being no objection, the telegrams were read and referred to the Committee on Commerce, as follows:

SEATTLE, WASH., February 11, 1917.

Senator W. L. Jones, Washington, D. C .:

Metal Trades Council of Seattle and vicinity is informed that an amendment has been introduced to H. R. 15455, providing that no vessel now being constructed or hereafter to be constructed in United States shall enter navigable waters of United States unless owned by citizens of United States. This council, representing more than 10,000 workingmen engaged in shipbuilding industry, wishes to vigorously protest against passage of this iniquitous bill, for the reason that if it becomes a law it will virtually kill said industry in Seattle and other Pacific coast ports, where more than 90 per cent of vessels now under construction are for foreign owners. Twenty-five million dollars of work in Seattle alone would be affected. Before European war American shipping interests bought, practically ignored American shipbuilding, as you are well aware. They now seek by this legislation to throttle industry, built up without their aid. We have taken this matter up with metaltrades councils in all coast cities and urgently request your immediate aid to defeat this unjust and discriminatory legislation.

Seattle Metal Trades Council, Dan P McKillop, President.

A. E. Miller, Secretary.

SEATTLE, WASH., February 10, 1917.

Hon. Wesley L. Jones, United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Reported here emergency bill pending on method of requisitioning ships provides that no vessel now or hereafter constructed in American yards shall enter navigable waters unless owned by citizens. Please investigate and do your utmost to have bill amended so as to do justice to all parties. As it apparently stands millions of dollars' worth of vessels being built in Seattle yards for Norwegians could not even be launched until acquired by American citizens, and yet neutral foreign buyer who has already paid partial or entire cost of construction is given no protection as to figure at which he must let go. On other hand, American owners specifically protected by price arbitration. Treemedous development Puget Sound shipbuilding capacity, all of which available to Government in extreme emergency, has been made possible not by Americans but by Norwegians and other neutrals who let contracts and paid for ships. Their interest obviously is entitled to full protection against confiscation.

S. H. Piles.

S. H. PILES, Chairman National Affairs Committee, Seattle Chamber of Commerce.

Mr. WORKS. I have a number of memorials in the form of protests signed by students of Columbia, Cornell, Elmira, Mount Holyoke, and Goucher Universities, protesting against the enactment of any legislation providing for compulsory military training. I ask that the body of one of these petitions, which is very short, may be printed in the Record without the names.

There being no objection, the body of one of the petitions was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

To the Senate Committee on Military Affairs:

We, the undersigned students of Columbia University, believing that compulsory military training is a peril to enlightened education, a menace to individual and social development, and a potential force for the enthronement of military ideals and militaristic institutions, respectfully request that no such principle be embodied in any national legislation.

Mr. SHIELDS. I send to the desk and ask to have printed in the RECORD a telegram from Noah W. Cooper, a distinguished citizen and lawyer of Nashville, Tenn.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NASHVILLE, TENN., February 9, 1917.

Hon. John K. Shields, United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Please do your utmost to influence our Government and all citizens to exercise that Christian forbearance and charity which suffereth long and is kind, is not easily provoked, thinketh no evil, and overcomes evil with good. Saint Paul, exercising that charity, has done more for peace and humanity than all warriors and wars. Let us as a Christian Nation imitate Saint Paul, for thus we will most surely lead the world into all peace and perfection.

NOAH W. COOPER.

Mr. FERNALD. I present a resolution adopted by the National Canners' Association at its meeting in the city of Cleve-land, on February 5 to 9, 1917, which I ask to have read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolution of indorsement unanimously passed at the meeting of the National Canners' Association, held in the city of Cleveland, February National Canners Association, held in the city of Cleveland, February 5-9, 1917.

The President of the United States in his determination to maintain the honor and dignity of our beloved country has severed diplomatic relations between this Nation and a foreign power, the breaking off of which may force the United States to defend itself against an oppressive and deplorable war, while burdening the President with grave and perplexing responsibilities: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the National Canners' Association and its allied industries, the Canning Machinery and Supplies Association and the Canned Foods and Dried Fruit Brokers' Association, in convention assembled in the city of Cleveland, record their confidence in the loyalty and patriotism of the President of the United States in his firm stand for the liberty and rights of every loyal American citizen; and be it further

Resolved, That this association, together with its allied industries, composed of American merchants and manufacturers, will unflinchingly conform to every act, steadfastly adhere to every decision, and valiantly obey every command, as we rally to the support of the President in defending the integrity of the Nation, with the same spirit and zeal which dominated our ancestors when they offered on the altar of this country their lives, their fortunes, and their sacred honor; and be it finally

Resolved, That having unbounded faith in the loyalty of the Congress of the United States to immediately ratify and confirm every human effort and lawful means set forth by the President to guard, protect, and defend the peace-loving citizens in this "land of the free and the home of the brave," we declare and reaffirm unalterable allegiance to our country, and to every principle for which it stands.

Mr. CUMMINS. I present a resolution passed by the General Assembly of Iowa touching an illegal combination among the manufacturers of cement, and requesting an investigation by Federal authority. I ask that it be printed in the Record, and lie on the table for future action.

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

on the table and to be printed in the Record, as follows:

Concurrent resolution of the Thirty-seventh General Assembly of the State of Iowa providing for an inquiry as to the existence of an illegal combination of the manufacturers of cement used in highway, bridge, and culvert construction, directing the attorney general to make an investigation and report as to any violation of the State antitrust law, and requesting an investigation by the Senators and Representatives of the State in the Congress of the United States as to violation in that connection of the Federal statutes.

Whereas the people of Iowa are engaged at this time in a State-wide movement for the improvement of the highways of the State and particularly for the construction of permanent bridges and culverts costing millions of dollars to the taxpayers of Iowa; and Whereas in such construction an enormous amount of cement is demanded as to a very substantial portion of which the counties of the State have the right to, under existing law, and must of necessity purchase for all bridge and culvert construction which is to be done by day labor; and
Whereas pursuant to statute the boards of supervisors are granted the further right in certain contingencies and in the event of rejection of bids made by contractors to do all such construction work by day labor, such provision operating by the intention of the statute to secure lower bids by the contractors than would otherwise obtain; and by day labor, such provision operating by the intention of the statute to secure lower bids by the contractors than would otherwise obtain; and

Whereas it is of the utmost importance that the counties, as arms of the State and as responsible purchasers, shall be able to make any necessary purchases of cement at the lowest market price and at such times as will best secure that end; and
Whereas facts have come to the knowledge of the General Assembly of the State of Iowa which tend to show the existence of a combination among the manufacturers of cement to increase and maintain prices thereof in this and adjacent States, and whereby the boards of supervisors of the various counties of the State are refused the right to purchase cement in stated amounts for delivery through the season for work which such counties may desire or find necessary or advisable to do by day labor, unless such counties shall first designate the particular structure in which such cement is to be used, the amount of cement needed for each structure, and with the further restriction that each such structure shall consume at least a minimum carload of 106 barrels of cement; and
Whereas many such structures consume much less than such minimum carload, and it being impossible for the counties in most cases to know beforehand or designate the particular structure or structures that it will desire to thus build or find necessary to build by day labor by reason of rejection of exorbitant bids, the result is the imposition of impossible conditions upon the public and to compel the counties to buy their cement at retail at the season when prices are highest, and tends to throw the bridge and culvert work into the hands of contractors to the great detriment of the taxpayers of this State; and
Whereas price of concrete construction has advanced in Iowa from $11.06 per cubic yard in the first half of 1915 to $16.24 per cubic yard in the second half of 1916, an increase of about 47 per cent; and

Whereas prior to 1916 the said manufacturers made no such restrictions as are set out above, but sold to the counties such amounts of cement at market prices and at such times and for such adelivery as was desired by the counties, but have refused to continue so to do, notwithstanding the repeated written protests and demands of the State highway commission, as shown by correspondence on file with the department, to the effect that such prices are exorbitant, and that such restrictions operate squarely in the interest of the contractors and are against public policy and the best interests of the taxpayers of the State: Now, therefore, be it

*Resolved by the house (the senate concurring): First. That the attorney general of the State of Iowa be, and he is hereby, directed and authorized to inquire into the existence of such combination to maintain prices and to inquire as to whether there are sought to be imposed upon the taxpayers of Iowa illegal restrictions by said cement manufacturers in restraint of trade and in violation of law and public policy and to the detriment of the public interest and to report his conclusions to the general assembly by written opinion; and in the event such combination and restrictions contrary to law are found to exist to proceed with the prosecution of the guilty parties, and that in such investigation the attorney general be, and he is hereby, empowered to compel the production of documents and to call and examine witnesses under oath as to the facts.

Second. That an engrossed copy of this resolution be forwarded to the Senators and Representatives of the State of Iowa in the Congress of the United States with request that an investigation be made as to violation in this connection of the Federal statutes and for such action by the legal department of the Government as may be deemed necessary in the premises.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I send to the desk and ask to have read, following the resolution of the Lawn Tennis Association, the following, from the Federated Trades Council of Milwaukee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

MILWAUKEE, WIS., February 10, 1917.

MILWAUKEE, Wis., February 10, 1917.

Hon. Robert M. La Follette,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: The inclosed resolution was adopted at a regular meeting of the Federated Trades Council of Milwaukee, Wis., held February 7, 1917.

The object of the resolution is to be helpful in an advisory way, as patriotic citizens, ever ready to serve and protect our country, in outlining a plan by which we believe the present crisis confronting our country, and may cause us to enter the present European war, can be avoided.

Yours, very truly,

The Federated Trades Council,
By Frank J. Weber.

THE FEDERATED TRADES COUNCIL, By FRANK J. WEBER, Corresponding Secretary.

Whereas the Government of the United States has broken off relations with one of the central powers of Europe and our country stands upon the brink of the abyss into which all the civilization of Europe is in danger of disappearing; and
Whereas we know that if war is declared by the United States it will be declared only to safeguard the shipments of ammunition, war supplies, and food to foreign countries; and
Whereas the workingmen of America do not want to submit to being murdered or to murder others in order to protect the profits of our greedy enemies within our own Nation: Therefore be it
Resolved by the Federated Trades Council, representing the trades unions of Milicaukec County, That we are for peace and against taking away our food to feed the soldlers of Europe; that we protest against any declaration of war against the central powers or any other powers; and that we protest against the murderous and inhuman agitation of the capitalist press for war; further be it
Resolved, That we demand that American citizens and American ships be forbidden to enter the war zone except at their own risk; and be it also Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to President Wilson, the two United States Senators from the State of Wisconsin, the two Congressmen from Milwaukee County, and also to the daily press of Milwaukee for publication.

The Federated Trades Council,

THE FEDERATED TRADES COUNCIL, By FRANK J. WEBER, Corresponding Secretary.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I have received hundreds of letters and telegrams from loyal American citizens, representing every section of the country, if not every State, bearing upon the tense international situation in which we find ourselves.

With a single exception, these communications one and all deprecate the severing of diplomatic relations with Germany and protest against pushing our country into war to enforce the right of our citizens to enter the blockaded zone in pursuit of pleasure or profit.

I have not presented these letters and telegrams for publication in the Record, but I have before me a letter from Prof. William Ellery Leonard, of the English department of Wisconsin State University, now visiting professor of English at New York University.

This letter clearly defines the real issue and admirably states our responsibility for the acute situation which confronts us.

I send it to the desk and request that it be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read the letter, as follows:

NEW YORK UNIVERSITY, UNIVERSITY HEIGHTS, New York City, February 6, 1917.

Hon. R. M. LA FOLLETTE,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR LA FOLLETTE: The present crisis seems to many Americans the inevitable culmination of our foreign policy of the last two and a half years. That policy has stood for the security of American rights, but that policy has not been enforced with equal stringency against both the belligerents; if, for instance, we had exacted from England an abandonment of her illegal blockade and her illegal contraband list conjointly with our exacting from Germany an abandonment of her reprisal against that blockade and that list by illegal submarine warfare, we would not find ourselves to-day face to face with war. That policy, again, has stood for American rights at times with an abstract and technical severity, guided by an abstract and technical conception of American prestige less than by a realizing sense of concrete reality and the utterly unprecedented nature of the world situation. But the past is past. We are in the present and are facing the future. We must all be Americans.

But is it un-American to hope we may learn from the past? Is it un-American still to hope that we may avoid the incalculable disaster of being drawn into the European war? It is so incalculable a disaster that, with the evidence before us of the unforeseen development already of one tragic entanglement and debacle after another in Europe, we might well fear it would mean—whoever were "victorious"—the collapse of all modern civilization. With this awful possibility before us, of what moment are our formal rights of to-day? At the worst we lose "prestige" for an hour—to keep our sanity and our health and our helpfulness for to-morrow. Do we not possess, as a Nation, funded spiritual resources beyond the hour? It is not a time for the patriotism of pride, but a time for the patriotism of intelligence, for the patriotism that visualizes the concrete realities of the present and the concrete possibilities of the future. Is it too late to warn our fellow citizens not to make use of their formal prerogative to sail through a zone of fire, which has been created not as an attack upon America but as a desperate measure against a foreign foe? Is it too late to cooperate with neutra for peace, in the interests of America and the rest of the neutral world?

But supposing it to be too late, and supposing we enter the war. Infallibly we must imperil ourselves and mankind if we make any alliance whatsoever with the entente. It will be essentially a dispute between Germany and America concerning an American prerogative. Let us not delude ourselves longer, in the midst of the lawlessness and ruthlessness of both sides, with such phrases as "morality," democracy, "humanity"; we will serve morality, democracy, humanity truly, indeed, only if we do not so delude ourselves. We will be fighting solely for an American prerogative—not for the return of Alsace to France, not for the incorporation of German Africa into the British Empire, not for a Russianized Constantinople. Unless we keep the issue a strictly American issue, unless we preserve our right to make a separate peace solely upon that American issue, it will be all but impossible. I fear, to create a truly united America out of an American citizenry composed of men and women whose racial and spiritual affiliations with all the peoples now at war are so complex and so profound. Face to face with the tragic conflict of sympathies and convictions, they will still battle for the defense of America, whatever their doubts as to the wisdom of our antecedent foreign policy and whatever their faith in the cause of Germany versus the entente; but they will not willingly battle, even in legions or squadrons under the American flag if they feel that they are battling essentially for the aims of the entente.

I am not a statesman, not even a publicist. But I think I reflect.

American lag it they feet that they are batching essentially for the alms of the entente.

I am not a statesman, not even a publicist. But I think I reflect the point of view of many millions whose stake in America is ultimately their all.

Sincerely,

William Professor of English from Wilson and WILLIAM ELLERY LEONARD, Visiting Professor of English from Wisconsin.

Mr. McLEAN. I have here a very brief communication from the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury with regard to contemplated public buildings at Manchester and South Manchester, Conn. I ask that the communication be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

There being no objection, the communication was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, Washington, February 10, 1917.

Hon. George P. McLean,

United States Senate.

My Dear Senators: In compliance with your telephonic request of the 9th instant inquiry was made of the Post Office Department in regard to the space which would be required in a Federal building designed to accommodate the postal business for both Manchester and South Manchester Comp.

to the space which would be required to accommodate the postal business for both Manchester and South Manchester, Conn.

It appears that the receipts at Manchester for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1906, were $4,226, and for South Manchester, during the same period, $12,208. The corresponding receipts for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, were $11,758 and $26,290. The annual rent now being paid at these places is, respectively, $425 and $900.

It is estimated that to provide a building of sufficient size to accommodate the postal business for both of these places would require an increase of $10,000 over the amount—$40,000—provided in the public-buildings bill recently passed by the House of Representatives for a Federal building at Manchester alone.

Respectfully,

JAMES L. WILMETH,

Acting Assistant Secretary.

Mr. LODGE. I present resolutions adopted by the Millville Order of United Workmen indorsing the action of the Presi-dent in severing diplomatic relations with Germany. I ask that the text of the resolution be printed in the RECORD without read-It is very brief.

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to be printed in the Recorp, as follows:

MILLVILLE, MASS., February 8, 1917.

Hon. Henry Cabot Longe,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Sir: Last evening this lodge, fully conscious of the possibilities that may attend the severance of diplomatic relations with Germany, unanimously voted to indorse the action of our President on Saturday last, and, while praying that the country may be spared the horrors of war, realizes the country's honor can not permit curtailment of our rights on the high seas at the dictation of an autocratic power. It was voted to communicate this indorsement of President Wilson's stand to the senior Senator from Massachusetts.

As a voter of New Jersey, paying substantial annual premiums and life insurance policies, and as a life underwriter representing policy-holders paying premiums on several millions of insurance, I appeal to you to oppose the passage of that portion of the emergency revenue bill which imposes a tax of 8 per cent upon the life insurance companies.

JOS. R. ROBBINS.

NEW YORK, N. Y., February 9, 1917.

Hon. James E. Martine, Washington, D. C.:

You have previously opposed heavy taxes on life insurance, and I am sure you will oppose the 8 per cent tax in the emergency revenue bill now before the Senate. A tax of this kind merely adds an additional charge to the cost of some poor fellow's life insurance. The Government should encourage life insurance and not discourage it. I live at Westfield, N. J.

GENERAL EDUCATION BOARD.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I have two letters here of very great importance, I think. One is from the State superintendent of education of South Carolina transmitting a communication from the superintendent of schools of Wisconsin. I ask to have them read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair

The Secretary read as follows:

STATE OF SOUTH CAROLINA, DEPARTMENT OF EDUCATION, Columbia, February 10, 1917.

Senator B. R. TILLMAN,

Washington, D. C.

Dear Uncle Bennie: Herewith I am sending you a circular letter which came to my desk this morning from Mr. J. W. Crabtree, of River Falls, Wis.

If possible, I should like to secure a copy of the report made by the Senate committee investigating these foundations and their activities. It is a well-known fact among schoolmen that the present Commissioner of Education was urgently recommended by these agencies. If some sort of tax could be placed on these foundations, endowments, or whatever other names such corporations are called by, it would help to clarify the educational atmosphere. Their subsidized agents are almost invariably selected because of their willingness to support policies originating and emanating from these money sources.

Some of their activities may be observed in South Carolina. In some respects they are helpful and desirable, while in others they are insinuating and dangerous.

Yours, respectfully,

J. E. Swearingen.

P. S.—I can not close this letter without congratulating you on your

RIVER FALLS STATE NORMAL SCHOOL,

River Falls, Wis., February $, 1977.

My Dean Friend: I presume you are aware of the fact that the United States Senate has clipped the wings of the educational foundations by its decision to oust from service in the Federal Bureau of Education all educational specialists receiving pay directly or indirectly from the great educational foundations. According to the views expressed by Senators in their speeches, this action was taken because of the belief that these foundations were making a conscious attempt to affect the thought and ideas of future citizens and to direct the public-school policles of the Nation.

This action should not be construed as a personal criticism on our national Commissioner of Education. Commissioners before him have likely had help from the same source. The public approved fully of accepting this help until it became evident that these great foundations were definitely planning to shape public sentiment and to direct public-school policles. The elimination of these free services places an obligation on Congress to provide ample funds for the use of the Bureau of Education, and this will naturally follow the action recently taken. Certainly the Bureau of Education can have an independence in thought and action when it has funds of its own quite impossible so long as it is forced to depend upon foundation help.

This drastic action on the part of the Senate was perhaps hastened by the public announcement of the beginning of a great movement under the auspices of the foundations to revolutionize elementary and secondary education in the public schools of America. The resolution freeling the Federal bureau from contact with the foundation agents was the direct result of an investigation of the activities of the foundation by a committee of the Senate.

The action taken by the Federal Government will doubtless interfere with foundation plans of surveying State normal and other teacher-with foundations as a most serious menace to democracy in education in

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. In this connection I think it just to have printed a communication addressed to me from the Secretary of Agriculture on the identical subject, which I ask to have read.

The VICE PRESIDENT, Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read.

The Secretary read the communication, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY, Washington, D. C., February 9, 1917.

Hon. E. D. SMITH, Acting Chairman Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, United States Senate.

Acting Chairman Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

United States Senate.

Dear Senator Smith: I note that a somewhat extended discussion took place on the floor of the Senate yesterday regarding cooperation between certain organizations and the Department of Agriculture. In this connection I desire to bring to your attention the following facts:

There was cooperation between the Department of Agriculture and the General Education Board from 1906 to June 30, 1914. In the Agricultural appropriation act for the fiscal year 1915 the appropriation for farm demonstration work in the South was increased by an amount equal to that formerly contributed by the General Education Board in order that the work might be financed entirely from Government funds, and the following provise was attached to the appropriation:

"Provided, That the expense of such service shall be defrayed from this appropriation and such cooperative funds as may be voluntarily contributed by State, county, and municipal agencies, associations of farmers and individual farmers, universities, colleges, boards of trade, chambers of commerce, other local associations of business men, business organizations, and individuals within the State."

On August 5, 1914, the Senate of the United States adopted a resolution calling upon certain heads of departments to furnish information as to the relation, if any, of the General Education Board and the Carnegie Foundation to the work of their departments. On August 12, 1914, I had the honor to write the following letter to the President of the Senate:

"Referring to Senate resolution 437, a copy of which is hereto attached, I have the honor to inform the Senate that the organizations referred to in the resolution are not in any way connected with the work of the Benate:

"Referring to Senate resolution or the Carnegie Foundation; and that, so far as I know, there are no administrative officers in this department whose salaries are paid in whole or in part with funds contributed by the Rockefeller Foundation

This statement applies in all particulars to this department at present, and has applied since the date of the action of the Congress.

Very truly, yours,

D. F. HOUSTON, Secretary.

NAVAL OIL SUPPLY.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I have a short letter from the Secretary of the Interior relative to the general land-leasing bill, which I ask to have read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The Secretary proceeded to read the letter, but was interrupted by Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, how much more is there of this letter?

The VICE PRESIDENT. There are two lines, the Chair is informed.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, it seems to me that it is getting to be an abuse of the use of the RECORD to read private correspondence. I think half a dozen such letters have been read into the Record this morning.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I ask that the reading of the letter, which is very short, be concluded. It seems to me the Senate ought to be very willing to hear the views of a Cabinet officer on this subject, especially when they are compressed within a short space. I ask that the reading of the letter be concluded. The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the letter, which is as follows:

THE SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR,

Washington, February 10, 1917.

My Dear Senator: In view of the general realization that it is now time to make plans for national defense, I take the liberty of suggesting that you consult with the chairmen of the Committees on Military and Naval Affairs to see if it is not practicable to have the lands which are at present locked up, containing oil, phosphate, and potash, released under a leasing system. We have some 6,000,000 acres of possible oil lands so withdrawn that no wells can be bored upon them. Only the lands now held in private ownership are producing. We should be about the business of discovering what these withdrawn lands contain. Gasoline is invaluable to the Army and to the Navy, as well as to every automobile owner and to the owner of every other gasoline-driven engine in the country. The largest deposit of potash in this country, which is fundamental in the manufacture of explosives, is also out of use because withdrawn, and we have some 3,000,000 acres of phosphate deposit in the same situation. The development of these resources can be made effective by the passage of a leasing bill.

As to the procuring of more extensive oil reserves for the use of the Navy, would it not be practicable to authorize this department, or some other, to drill for oil upon some of those great reserved tracts which have not been already proved? The expenditure of a comparatively small amount of money might in this way secure for the Government an insured oil supply, as well as be an effective regulation against increasing prices. Cordially, yours, FRANKLIN K. LANE.

Hon, HENRY L. MYERS, United States Senate.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, since the debate which took place a few days ago on our relations with Germany I have received hundreds of letters and telegrams bearing upon that question. Any backwoods deputy sheriff would do so if the occasion arose in his district. The idea of so-called American citizens in these terrible times being allowed to strut around within the war zone, standing on his or her rights as an American citizen as against the welfare of 100,000,000 people, is too preposterous to think about. "We, citizens and registered voters of the pivotal city of the Union, and many of us veterans of the United States Army, in mass meeting assembled, believing that the Constitution of the United States is still in force and that we have a constitutional Government of three distinct and independent departments—the legislative department, consisting of the Congress, intended by our people and the Constitution to be composed of more than 400 individual, independent, thinking men, with brains and wills of their own—and we appeal to you not to allow the executive department or any other department to encroach upon your powers, and, of course, you have no right to delegate any of your powers to any other department. The executive department exhausted its powers when it broke off diplomatic relations with Germany, and it is entirely up to you whether any further proceedings shall be had. The people of the United States in the proportion of about 90 to 1 are decidedly opposed to any further hostile act toward Germany and her allies and in a proportion of 75 to 1 they disapprove of the breaking off of diplomatic relations with Germany and in a proportion of 90 to 1 disapprove the President's request to neutrals to join with him in breaking off diplomatic relations with Germany; and we therefore ask you to promptly reject and repudiate any proposition toward a declaration of war, and if there is any doubt about this attitude of the people as expressed herein that you refer any such proposition to tward people for their vote of approval or disapproval. We request you to promptly pass all bills now before Congress for the purpose of removing any occasion for war by passing an embargo on arms and ammunition and the passing of House Joint resolution No. 337, prohibiting individuals for money or malice salling on belligerent ships for the purpose of causing further friction between the United States and Germany."

the President's action in breaking off diplomatic relations with Germany.

We are not citizens of the State you represent, but we believe that the opinions and sentiments you expressed with regard to the German-American crisis are in concurrence with the wishes and ideas of the masses of all the States, and that you have for the moment placed yourself in a position extending far beyond local matters. Your argument is based on facts, indeed, and God grant that you and the like of yours may soon dominate the situation.

We do not want war; we have nothing to gain by war; we have no grievances sufficient to justify a war; we have no rights deliberately violated with intent to harm to defend by war. Then, in the name of all that's just and fair and safe and sane, why menace a sorely tried and friendly people with such warlike tactics? Even now as the possibility of conflict stares us in the face our hands are not clean. We are provoking it.

The Senate is full of men who think as you, whose people think as you, and who, if they had the moral courage of their convictions, would come right out as you have. Most of them either have been stirred and fired by a rabid, morbid press or they have been unshed and lulled by a deceptive and pernicious opposition. We pray that these men may come to a fuller realization of their duties as representatives of the people and of their responsibility before God and the world.

Why should we permit the allied press agents to stand sponsors for sentatives of the people and of their responsibility before God and the world.

Why should we permit the allied press agents to stand sponsors for 100,000,000 American souls? The sponsors may back the President forever, but have not the children, having grown up, something to say concerning their own ultimate destiny?

The fact that we are thus perturbed does not make us lose sight of our sacred duties as American citizens; and every one of us would be willing to do his share to defend our country from aggression. But we are opposed to the present status of things, and we believe there is no time like the present to tell it to a man like you.

With every assurance of our deepest admiration for your courage and of our fullest appreciation of your efforts in our behalf, we have the honor to subscribe ourselves,

Most respectfully and sincerely, yours,

Steubenville, Ohio, February 8, 1917.

Hon. Senator Works,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: Please pardon the seeming intrusion of one humble, American-born citizen writing to congratulate you for the expression on the floor of the Senate of such courageous and magnificent sentiments as accredited to you in the press reports to-day on the German-American war crisis.

I sincerely regret that the attitude on this question of Ohio's Senators precludes me writing them in this vein.

I can realize the difficulty of gauging public opinion while engaged in your legislative functions in Washington, but I wish to state, for your gratification I hope, that from my observation most all of the people of even mediocre intelligence are heartly in accord with your views on this matter, and I venture to assert that were a national poli taken your sentiments would overwhelmingly be indorsed.

As I find it, the people seem to be somewhat suspicious of the present sort of neutrality.

Holding the peace and tranquillity of this Nation as I do, I wish to God it were possible to give this momentous question the public solution it deserves. I have not hesitancy in saying it would then be quickly and decisively settled, and done so without the unsheathing of the sword. It is indeed a sad reflection on democracy, when, because of the impossibility of any proper method of expression we are forced to offer ourselves as cannon fodder to satisfy the temporary blood-lust of our so-called public servants, most of whom nowadays persist in acting the rôle of sovereign.

Again, if we (Congress, etc.) don't begin to take a little interest in the topic of the high cost of living, something will happen in this country that will make a German-American war look like a sham battle. However, as black as things appear, it is refreshing to know that there were at least five men in the Senate who had the moral stamina to wield the cudgel in the interest of a genuine patriotism. May your fight be crowned with victory.

Again begging your pardon for the liberty of writing you, I am, Very respectfully,

E. P. McDevitt,

Dear Sir: I desire to compliment you on the speech you made to Senate a few days ago on the international situation. Your position is absolutely correct and the eastern pro-ally, un-American papers who do most of the shouting know down in their hearts it is correct. If we get into war the country can thank the eastern papers. One would suppose from their behavior that war with Germany is something the country should look forward to with much glee.

I am a traveling man and see many people. There is no doubt of the patriotism of the people, but most thinking men can not feel that the principle of Americans traveling on belligerent ships during times of war is reason for throwing the country into war.

You may rest assured that there are many thousands with you.

Senator Works,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Dear Senator: Permit me to extend heartiest congratulations on your splendid speech discussing the Stone resolution.

Thank Heaven we have at least a few statesmen who have the courage of their convictions and who dare to speak the dictates of conscience rather than be servile followers of a presidential policy that can leave nothing but misery, woe, and broken hearts in its wake.

It is such as you who are the true friends of humanity, and to such as you humanity must look for its salvation in these crucial times. For America to enter into this terrible war would be a crime against civilization incapable of being expunged by the patriotic sounding eloquence of those who would plunge our country into this world catastrophe on a flimsy pretext.

I assure you that your efforts are appreciated in Michigan and that there are countless prayers for the success of your noble endeavors.

Honord Str: A few words of your noble speech in the United States Senate have percolated through a hostile press, and their reading has given me extreme gratification and gratitude. You told the truth at a time and place it ought to be told and in a manner to commend both its author and his subject everywhere, at least to use of the minority who still cherish a decent respect for facts. And we congratulate ourselves that in Congress is yet one man truly representative of people and not of selfish policies. California's limits are not yours, as State lines can never be of honor and real patriotism; therefore you are my representative, and that of all who love justice everywhere, irrespective of race, language, or location. Your light will shine the brighter for the blackness of its background, and your voice will ring the clearer for the drivel of the mob.

Most respectfully, yours,

Hon. Senator Works,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

My Dear Senators: Your attitude and that of a few of your fellow Senators, who are in opposition to the war-like preparation which is now holding official Washington in its embrace, is to be highly commended by every sane thinking individual, no matter what his creed or nationality.

The war mongers and the proally press who have adorned themselves in all their war paint and are vociferating their poisonous vaporings with the sole purpose in view of precipitating the country into a seething caldron of strife and turmoil is, to say the least, lamentable. These bellicose individuals who favor hostilites with the German Government and desire to have this Nation participate in the present war should be the first ones drafted into the Army and fight for issues that are considerably beclouded. It is safe to say these individuals when confronted with the prospect of action would be that ones to bear arms.

It is also needless to assert that if the public were given the op-portunity of expressing their views with regard to making war, i. e., an opportunity of voting on this issue, there would be vigorous protest on the part of the citizens of this country, and I firmly believe drastic action would not be contemplated unless there was a greater issue than the present one with Germany.

Men of affluence, with a few minor exceptions, would not take service in the Army, and the war editors would keep to their office, far from the rain of shrapnel and death, indulging in the more peaceful occupation of inventing war news and foolish fables.

In conclusion, will say that I sincerely hope and pray that you and your fellow Senators will use your utmost endeavors and bend your efforts toward keeping the country out of this horrible and bloody conflict, and by so doing aid mankind in promoting good fellowship rather than fostering racial ill-feeling.

Dear Sir: Kindly accept my congratulations upon your noble stand in the United States Senate. It has the most hearty approval of the citizens of our State and we only regret that our own Senators are not big enough to stand with you.

These congratulations may be a little tardy, but I have been busy with other matters. No acknowledgment of this is expected.

Senator Works,

The Senate, Washington, D. C.

Sir. Permit me, as an American citizen by birth and as a former resident of California, to express to you my profound agreement with, and sincere admiration for, the views expressed by you in the Senate yesterday on the injustice of any course involving us in war with Germany at present.

Your views on the folly of our neglecting to advise citizens against "danger zones" and on our moral responsibility for the tragedles resulting from sending passengers and munitions on the same ships, are so sound and so admirably expressed that they have carried conviction to many persons hitherto, unthinkingly, for war. Neither the course of the President nor of the American people has been neutral in the fair sense of the word, and our sins will be upon our own heads if we are now forced into war by jingoes and blusterers against our will. Nine out of ten Americans, even here in New York, overridden by a mercenary business "ring" and press, think with you. We trust you will to the last express the feelings of this great, silent majority almost shouted down by the truculent minority.

Very sincerely, yours,

M. C. Damton.

Dear Senator: As a workingman, let me thank you in behalf of the class that will suffer most in case of war for your statements in the Senate as reported in to-night's paper in regard to the severing of diplomatic relations with Germany. We are severing relations to protect American life? How many more lives will be lost in case of war than will be lost through the sinking of American shipping which is furnishing the allies with munitions and other supplies? The sentiment among the workingmen is certainly against war with anyone.

Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: I wish to express to you my most sincere thanks for the courageous stand you took regarding our administration in relation to the horrible war in Europe.

I say courageous advisedly, for I am sure it requires vastly more courage to speak as you did than it does to simply shout "stand by the President" and "follow the flag," especially when it is well known that those who so shout are rarely to be found on the firing line in the event of action.

I am sure, too, that there are many thousands who will likewise feel thankful to you for your courageous efforts in behalf of American lives, though not all may so express themselves to you.

Godspeed your good work, and may there be no declaration of war without the direct consent of the people, unless an enemy attacks us, in which event the patriotism of the American people will not be found wanting.

Dear Sir: Will you kindly send me a supply of copies of your speach delivered in the Senate February 7, 1917, in which you take the stand that the President's stand in breaking off relations with Germany should not be indorsed, and giving reasons therefor.

It came as a voice in the wilderness, and millions of American citizens, of no matter what descent, are blessing you to-day because you have given voice in a public and most fitting manner to the thoughts that they are thinking, and with which they have no medium to reach others.

Dear Senator: Thank you for voicing my sentiments. I am sure there are many others having same views, but our voices are not heard, As the United States is a conglomeration of all nations, we should be the last one to be dragged into the European horror. Every person living in the United States except the American Indian originated in a foreign country. Our forefathers established this country as a haven to live in peace and freedom. Our duty is to keep this family together, not disrupt it. We must forbear. To enter the quarrel on either side would be striking at one of our mother countries. The way to keep out of the war is to stay away from the conflagration. Our country, among neutrals the largest, wealthiest, with all the matural resources, dependent upon no other for subsistence, thousands of miles away from the conflagration, should step aside. Spilling more blood does not settle who is in the right. Why not avoid the calamity instead of pushing into it. Other neutrals harder pressed than we have not lost their d'gnity and honor by keeping out. Why make 90,000,000 people of the United States, already suffering from famine prices for food, shelter, and clothing, be subjected to more misery on account of a few who for selfish interests insist upon traveling and sending goods through the war zone. We waive our rights when we respect danger signals at home; then why not respect danger far away from home. It is our duty to be loyal and defend our country, it is also our duty to act so that we do not invoive our country into trouble. Think of construction and not of destruction.

Thanking you for your expressions of truth,

Yours, very respectfully,

Dear Senator: I desire to manifest my approval of the course you take with respect to our foreign relations and the proposition of war with any of the warring nations of Europe on no better grounds than we have at the present time.

There is positively no question on the statement that the public press does not express the sentiment of the common people. You are unquestionably right when you state that this country has not assumed a totally neutral position in the conflict raging across the waters.

Those who derive the greatest benefit directly from the flow of rivers of innocent blood and the sacrifice of almost countless lives hide behind a shield of gold, and in the event of an actual outbreak would use that same shield to spare themselves from active service in the ranks.

With the sincerest hope that the efforts of yourself and such men as the Hon. Robert La Follette you will be able to arrest the attention of the common people, to the end that our beloved country may be spared all the terrors and disaster of war.

Dear Sir: While not one of your constituents, I can not let pass words of commendation of your magnificent and patriotic stand for peace as reported in the press this day.

It is refreshing, indeed, to observe that there are really patriotic citizens on the other side of the question as regards this Nation's controversy with Germany. Not all who cry for war and thirst for blood are loyal citizens.

My views have been most aptly expressed by you, and I need not recall them at this time. I trust only that enough stalwart Senators will be found who deem it a higher duty to their fellow citizens than to stand for any unjust move for war or a state equivalent thereto. In a free Democracy it is the height of insolence to demand as a patriotic duty to stand back of our President in any foreign move. Is the President above those who elect him that we must blindly follow his lead? I firmly hold the belief that it is one of the vested rights of my citizenship that I shall be free to advocate anything in my country consistent with its laws and in a peaceful way. Certainly an agitation for continued peace between two erstwhile friendly nations can not be construed as an act of treason. War in itself will be as nothing if thereby we shall lose as a Nation that eminence of love of liberty and fair play which have in the past been the marked milestones of our development.

That there may be no misconception as to myself, I want to assure you that I am not a German or a German-American, but an American citizen. When I landed in Philadelphia in November, 1894, my allegiance passed to this land of my adoption and here it will stay. I take second place to no one in my patriotism even though I do not carry it on my shoulders or in my mouth.

Very truly, yours,

George Weidenfeld.

Dear Sir: I have read the Associated Press reports of your talk in the Senate. I believe you voice the sentiments of the quiet, thinking majority of American citizens. We are not hysterical. We want peace. We do not feel that the Atlantic Ocean should turn red with American blood because Europe is war crazy. We support Milson because we believe he is safe and sane. We support his protests against breach of international law, but we don't care to fight about it. We suspect the motives of those who would have us fight. We are more nearly neutral than the yelling suggests.

Good luck to you, Senator. May you and all our Representatives help our President to keep safe and sane, and to discern, in the midst of all this turmoil, the real American interests—which are not warveven if one of our boats is sunk or if some of our adventurous citizens are drowned. They are my sentiments exactly, and if the matter were put before the American people I am satisfied the verdict would be overwhelmingly in accordance with the sentiment expressed therein.

There is no question in my mind that the English—or, rather, allies—are endeavoring with all their power to influence public opinion in this country in their favor, and by voicing their thoughts through a great many newspapers, making it appear that the American people were in accord with them, when my judgment, from observations taken over a large section of the country, leads me to conclude that the contrary is absolutely the case.

Dear Senator: To-day's dispatches carry an account of your expression of your attitude regarding the position of our President in the present unfortunate controversy with Germany. While we must ever be loyal to our country and support those temporarily in power, it behows us to be ever careful to keep a proper perspective in regard to the Nation's affairs. It is so easy to place a wrong interpretation upon matters of concern to the Government, but those that have the reins of government should count the cost before talking a serious step such as our President has taken. His attitude, it seems to me, is entirely out of proportion to the cost involved in carrying his view to its logical conclusion. While he has professed to keep us out of war with all his might, his present action only increases the danger of actual conflict. I would like to place the President and a number of the Congressmen who are so enthusiastic about this thing out here where there are real people, and out in your State, where there are people who are content to be "just folks." They are the ones who must in the end bear the brunt of the fight, and it seems that they should be consulted in a crisis of this kind. Would you be willing to believe that the bulk of the people are ready to go to war over what has happened? That is, after the first wave of enthusiasm has passed over. And why not follow the wishes of the masses, who are in the end the ones that you all represent? So many down in Washington seem to think that they are the Government. Questions of propriety and honor are gauged by their artificial standards that contain niceties of distinction that we recognize, but can not feel with the same force that they do. The mass of people seem to think that we are very much to biame in the present matter because we could very well keep out of the restricted areas. That looks as though we are ascificing our position. But how often in practical life does the prudent man av

If their opinion does not count, whose does? Surely election to office does not mean that they are at once superior judges over the people. May you be able to gain much influence in the present controversy.

I am for America first, but I also believe in truth and justice. There are a great many citizens who, with me, look to you and a few others as heroes who may not at the present time be appreciated by the masses, but who will be in the future.

My Drar Senators, Allow a Massachusetts Democrat to thank you for your splendid speech delivered Wednesday on the floor of the United States Senate. I see in to-day's Boston Post that the Los Angeles Times advises you to go to Germany or go to bell.

Well, Senator, this is not a newspaper Government, although at times the Wall Street influences make that danger seem perilously near. We know Harrison Gray Otis of the Los Angeles Times in our part of the country as an arrant, un-American Tory, the kind they bred at the Hartford convention in our War of 1812, and we feel well rid of them. I believe we are marking time in the history of this Republic. British navalism is now being challenged. Jann allied with Germany, with a possible alliance with the Russian Empire, is enough to make any serious American pause before rationally challenging Germany to battle with such a combination possible. To our northward lies Canada, population according to the last census in 1901, Encyclopedia Britanica, 5,300,000; Australia, coveted by Japan, 5,000,000 more; the anarchistic Republic of Mexico to the south of us. Such thoughts should give pause to American diplomacy; we want no war with Germany, for no living man can foretell what the harvest of such condict might be.

The sentiment in Massachusetts is overwhelmingly against such a war. A referendum of the people of the United States would, I believe, indorse our New England verdict.

The German submarine blockade will starve England, and no power or combination of powers on earth can stop it. Should our country, my dear Senator, declare war on any power, you and I will cheerfully render to our common country the last tithe of our ability, the last drop of our blood.

I had the honor to deliver the Memorial Day oration of the Spanish Veterans, at Holyhood Cemetery, where John Boyle O'Reilly and P. A. Collins, ex-mayor of Boston, are both burlied; my friend Gerogae Holden, I had the pleasure of listening to him in the same place, a year later, GEORGIA STATE MILITIA.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. From the Committee on Military Affairs, I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 7438) to make immediately available for the use of the State of Georgia in paying expenses incurred by said State in connection with the joint encampment held at Augusta, Ga., July 22 to 31, 1914, certain sums appropriated for arming and equipping the militia of said State, and I submit a report (No. 1029) thereon. I call the attention of the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr.

SMITH] to the bill.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, at the instance of Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, at the instance of the War Department, a very large encampment was held at Augusta, Ga., in 1914, and the funds of 1914-15 exhausted, with the expectation of using part of the allowance for 1915-16 to pay the expense of the encampment. A part of the funds of 1915-16 allotted to Georgia was set apart for this purpose and not used for other purposes; but the comptroller held that even with the approval of the War Department we could not lap over from one year to the other. This bill was passed at the last Congress by both Houses just at the close of the session, but in some way it escaped the signature of the President. It is again recommended by the War Department. It is simply a utilization of funds of 1915-16 for the payment of a deficit of 1914-15. It provides no increased appropriation, but uses the same fund that the department had expected to spend on the 1914-15 encampment; but the comptroller says they can not do it.

I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read as fol-

Be it enacted, etc., That of the sum appropriated by section 1661, Revised Statutes, for arming and equipping the whole body of the militia, the sum of $\frac{2}{3}$14.409.98, proportioned to the State of Georgia for the years 1915 and 1916, be, and the same is hereby, made immediately available for the purpose of paying the expenses incurred by said State over and above the allotments made by the Secretary of War to the State of Georgia from all appropriations therefor in connection with the joint encampment held at Augusta, Ga., July 22 to 31, 1914; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and instructed to pay over said amount to the governor of said State of Georgia for said purpose.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOSEPH BEECH.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. From the Committee on Immigration I report back favorably without amendment the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 208) to grant citizenship to Joseph Beech, and I submit a report (No. 1037) thereon. The report accompanying the joint resolution will explain the matter, if the Senate desires to have it read. The College of Bishops of the Methodist Church North indorsed this joint resolution and the committee unanimously indorsed it. I ask for unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution, which was read as follows;

Whereas Joseph Beech has constantly been under the jurisdiction of the United States since the age of 4 years; and Whereas the said Joseph Beech is not entitled to immediate naturaliza-tion under any existing statute; and Whereas the said Joseph Beech is not a citizen of any other Govern-ment: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That Joseph Beech be, and he is hereby, unconditionally admitted to the character and privileges of a citizen of the United

The preamble was agree to.

MARGUERITE MATHILDE SLIDELL D'ERLANGER.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. From the Committee on Immigration, I report back favorably, without amendment, the bill (S. 8075) for the relief of Marguerite Mathilde Slidell d'Erlanger, and I submit a report (No. 1036) thereon. I unanimous consent for the present consideration of this bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator explain the object of the bill?
Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. There is an explanation ettached to the bill which explains it better than I can, and the committee unanimously adopted it. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge] has some knowledge of the beneficiary, and upon the testimony it was unanimously adopted by the committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as fol-

JUDICIAL DISTRICTS IN OKLAHOMA.

Mr. FLETCHER. From the Committee on the Judiciary, I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 14471) to amend an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary." This seems to be a matter that pertains peculiarly to Oklahoma, is of a local character, and I think I am justified in asking for the immediate consideration of the bill.

The bill simply provides that certain counties in that State shall be put into the eastern district and certain counties into the western district, the same as the law stood, but since the original act was passed dividing the State into two judicial districts and specifying the counties there has been some change in county lines. They simply want the counties as they stood July 1, 1916, to be in the district as specified in the original section and in this bill.

I understand there is no objection to the bill. It passed the House when reported from the Judiciary Committee there, is unanimously reported by the committee of the Senate this morning, and there is some desire to have it acted upon at this I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADDITIONAL JUDGE IN MISSISSIPPI.

Mr. SHIELDS. From the Committee on the Judiciary I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 457) to provide for the appointment of a district judge in the northern and southern judicial districts in the State of Mississippi, and for other purposes. I desire to call the attention of the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] to it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is a bill which is demanded by all the bar and business interests of the State of Mississippi, and ask for its immediate consideration.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CINCINNATI SOUTHERN RAILROAD.

Mr. POMERENE. From the Committee on Interstate Commerce, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 455) to define the rights and privileges of the trustees of municipally owned interstate railways and construing the act to regulate commerce with reference thereto, I report it back favorably with an amendment and I submit a report (No. 1034) thereon. It is a local bill. Mr. President, just a word in explanation.

Mr. WARREN. I do not wish to object to the consideration of this bill, but we have other morning business that it is necessary to transact, and I hope there will be a cessation of the demand for bills to be passed that are reported from committees after the consideration of this one and until we can complete the morning business.

Mr. POMERENE. With the exception of this one?

Mr. WARREN. I do not object to the consideration of this bill,

Mr. SMOOT. Let the bill be read. The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary. Reported favorably with an amendment—Mr. POMERENE. I was going to state what the amend-

The city of Cincinnati owns the Cincinnati Southern Railroad running from Cincinnati to Chattanooga. This road was leased by the city of Cincinnati to the Cincinnati, New Orleans & Texas Pacific Railway Co. in 1881 and one of the terms of the lease requires the lessee to furnish free transportation to the officers of the city and of the company while inspecting the line of the road. The lessee honored this provision of the law and gave passes continuously until the year 1912, when the Interstate Commerce Commission held that under the interstate commerce act they could not allow the use of free passes, even for inspection.

The House passed a bill granting that permission, notwithstanding the provisions of the interstate-commerce act, and the Senate committee amends it by adding the following proviso:

INDIAN APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I give notice that in a few minutes-I shall say within 10 minutes-I shall ask the Senate to consider for a few moments the conference report on the Indian appropriation bill. The conferees have been unable to agree on four amendments, and the conferees on the part of the Senate would like to have some instruction and some expression from the Senate. It will take but a few moments. conclusion of the morning business I shall seek the floor for the purpose of making that motion.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows

By Mr. BRYAN:

A bill (S. 8218) to establish the eastern and western judicial districts in the State of Florida, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. SHEPPARD:

A bill (S. 8219) to establish a branch Federal land bank in west Texas; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. PITTMAN:

A bill (S. 8220) granting a pension to James Golden; to the Committee on Pensions. By Mr. WARREN:

A bill (S. 8221) to make further provision for the organiza-tion of native troops in the Philippine Islands (with accom-panying papers); to the Committee on Military Affairs. By Mr. HARDING:

A bill (S. 8222) to amend an act to incorporate the National McKinley Birthplace Memorial Association, approved March 4, 1911; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. CATRON:
A bill (S. 8223) granting an increase of pension to Alcaria Bowles; to the Committee on Pensions.
By Mr. POINDEXTER:

A bill (S. 8224) granting an increase of pension to Charles E. Wilcox (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (S. 8225) granting a pension to Mary D. Jenness (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HUSTING:

A bill (S. 8226) to establish a fog signal at the Port Washington Pierhead Light Station, Wis.; and

A bill (S. 8227) granting the consent of Congress to the city of Fort Atkinson, in Jefferson County, Wis., for the construction of a bridge across the Rock River; to the Committee on Com-

By Mr. KIRBY: A bill (S. 8228) authorizing the commissioners of the Red River bridge district to construct a bridge across the Red River at or near Index, Tex.; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. MYERS

A bill (S. 8229) granting a pension to John R. Rodgers; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. OLIVER:

A bill (S. 8230) granting a pension to Ella Mearns (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. PAGE:

A bill (S. 8231) granting a pension to Elizabeth Roberts; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. LEA of Tennessee:

A bill (S. 8232) granting a pension to John F. Leker

A bill (S. 8233) granting an increase of pension to William R. Brummett;

A bill (S. 8234) granting a pension to August Kaufman; and A bill (S. 8235) granting an increase of pension to William H. Hart (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pen-

ARMED MERCHANT VESSELS.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I introduce a joint resolution. I ask to have it read and to go over and lie on the table, to be called up later for action by the Senate.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 211) making it unlawful for armed merchant vessels of the United States in time of peace to depart ports of the United States for foreign countries was read the first time by its title and the second time at length and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That it shall be unlawful at a time when the United States is not at war for any armed merchant vessel of the United States to depart a port of the United States or any of its territories or possession for a port of any other country, its colonies, or possessions.

REPORT ON PRISON SHIPS.

Mr. LODGE submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 355), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he hereby is, directed to transmit to the Senate any reports on prison ships made to the department since January I, 1914.

HEARINGS BEFORE THE COMMITTEE ON PATENTS.

Mr. JAMES submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 356). which was read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Patents, or any subcommittee thereof, be, and hereby is, authorized during the Sixty-fourth Congress, to send for persons, books, and papers; to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding $1 per printed page, to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be pending before said committee, the expenses thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during the sessions or recess of the Senate.

VITAL CONSERVATION ASSOCIATION.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I have a list of papers which I desire to have printed as a public document for the Vital Conservation Association of America. I ask that it be referred to the Committee on Printing.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The matter will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

SUSPENSION OF THE RULES.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I desire to submit a parliamentary question to the Chair. On Saturday I gave notice of a motion to suspend the rules in order that I might offer some amendments to the Post Office appropriation bill to-day. Is it necessary that the motion shall be called up during the morning hour, or will it be in order when the bill is taken up? My recollecton is that the Chair has held that it is not necessary to call it up during the morning hour. I do not want to foreclose myself by any decision of the Chair from the opportunity of presenting the amendment I have offered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Not taking the time to review any of the precedents, the Chair is of opinion that when the bill is up, notice having been given, the motion may be made to suspend the rules and a vote be taken. Mr. BRYAN. Very well.

NIGHT SESSION FOR THE CALENDAR.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, there have been a number of bills passed by request for immediate consideration this morning, and there are a number of bills on the calendar just as important and urgent. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate held a session at 8 o'clock this evening and that the calendar be called under Rule VIII for unobjected bills.

Mr. SMOOT. I shall ask the Senator to modify his request so that if we hold a night session we shall begin at the place we left off the last time the calendar was under consideration.

Mr. MYERS. How far down on the calendar was that?

Mr. SMOOT. Nearly at the end.
Mr. MYERS. Well, let us begin there, and when we get through with the calendar begin and go over it again.

Mr. SMOOT. I am perfectly willing that that should be done, The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Montana asks unanimous consent that at 8 o'clock to-night a session of the Senate shall be held for the purpose of considering unobjected bills on the calendar, beginning at Order of Business 885 and thence through the calendar; and, if time be left after that, beginning again at the commencement of the calendar. Is there objection?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Is that for to-night?

The VICE PRESIDENT. For to-night. It is so ordered, there being no objection.

INDIAN APPROPRIATIONS-CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. ASHURST. I now renew my request for unanimous consent that the Senate consider the conference report on the Indian appropriation bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I will ask the Senator from Arizona whether that can not come up after 2 o'clock. There are a number of matters that can be considered during the morning hour. Among others, I wish to present as a part of the proposed railway legislation the bill increasing the Interstate Commerce Commission, which I think will pass almost without discussion.

Mr. OVERMAN. Has the morning business been closed? The VICE PRESIDENT. It has not yet. Under the rule, one hour of the two hours allotted to morning business having passed, the Senator from Arizona has a perfect right to ask unanimous consent to proceed to the consideration of the conference report.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I object.
Mr. ASHURST. The objection, of course, means that the whole morning hour will be consumed, as nothing else will be considered until the morning hour shall expire, because I shall object to anything else and shall see that nothing else is done. What is the use of wasting 45 minutes? I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report.

Mr. OVERMAN. How long will it take? Mr. ASHURST. About 10 minutes; it m About 10 minutes; it may be only 5.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Arizona.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 18453) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I desire to make a point of order against the conference report. I think when this point is brought to the attention of the chairman he will probably agree that it is well taken.

My point of order is against the proviso added to amendment 85. Amendment 85 of the Senate reads as follows:

Hereafter no allotments shall be made to members of the Creek Nation without specific authority of Congress.

The conferee

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is unable to hear the Senator from Kansas, and as he is about to submit a point of order the Chair would like to hear it before ruling.

Mr. CURTIS. Let me read it again. The Senate placed in the bill the following amendment, which is numbered 85:

Hereafter no allotments shall be made to members of the Creek Nation without specific authority of Congress.

The conferees agreed upon the amendment, with a proviso which was not considered in the Senate, was not considered in the House, and would have been subject to a point of order had it been placed in the bill by either the House or the Senate committee. It is as follows:

Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to pay each and every duly enrolled citizen of the Creek Nation who has not been allotted lands in said nation and who is not included in Senate Document No. 478. Sixty-third Congress, second session, the sum of $1,040 in lieu of an allotment of land in said nation. Said sum of $1,040 to be paid to each and every person out of the funds in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Muskogee Creek Nation.

I think as soon as a statement of what this really means is made the chairman of the committee will concede that the point is well taken, and that the conference report should go back.

This is not the first time that this question has been before Congress. It has been defeated a number of times. If this amendment is agreed to, it may involve a claim against the Government of nearly $3,000,000. It was not considered by the Senate committee or by the House committee and was put in by the conferees. It is clearly subject to a point of order. I know under the rule it must be submitted to the Senate.

However, I want to state to the President of the Senate that I think he would be justified under the rule in passing directly upon a question of this kind where new matter has been put into the bill.

Mr. ASHURST and Mr. OVERMAN addressed the Chair.
Mr. OVERMAN. Will the Senator yield to me?
Mr. CURTIS. I will yield to the chairman of the committee

Mr. ASHURST. What the Senator from Kansas says is absolutely true, and that was one of the reasons why the conferees on the part of the Senate asked for a few moments to consider the report and to have the Senate instruct us. the same view as to the proposed legislation that the Senator from Kansas has. I deem it very doubtful if the conferees can ever agree on the bill, and I am willing to have the expression of the Senate made now as to whether that legislation should be Mr. THOMAS. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee whether the conferees on the part of the Senate agreed to the insertion of this new matter?

Mr. ASHURST. Yes, sir. Mr. THOMAS. That is somewhat surprising in view of the statement of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. Curtis].

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, that is not the only surprise.

There are many others.

Mr. THOMAS. I have no knowldge of the subject except as it has been outlined by the Senator from Kansas; but I assume that his statement is true; and, if true, I can speak for one Senator when I say that no such conference report will be accepted by this body if I can help it.

Mr. ASHURST. I agree with the Senator. Mr. OVERMAN. May I ask the Senator from Arizona a question?

Mr. ASHURST. Certainly. Mr. OVERMAN. Do I understand that the matter which was inserted was not considered either by the Senate or by the House?

Mr. ASHURST. It was not considered, in my judgment, by either the Senate or the House.

Mr. CURTIS. It was not even considered by the committee.

Mr. ASHURST. I doubt if it was considered even by the conference committee.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Arizona yield to me a moment?

Mr. ASHURST. Yes.

Mr. MYERS. I am surprised at the objection of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Thomas] to new matter being put into this report, for only a few weeks ago the Senator from Colorado submitted to this body a report of the committee of conference on the 640-acre homestead bill, which he admitted was full of and overflowing with matter that had never been passed by either branch of Congres

Mr. THOMAS. I expressly stated on that occasion, Mr. President, that we had exceeded our authority and that we would not insist upon the proposed legislation if there was a single objection; but the difference between that situation and this-

Mr. ASHURST. If the Senator will yield to me, I desire to y that, of course, the Senate conferees grossly—I may say say that, of course, the Senate conferees grosslyworse than grossly, for I want to make it as emphatic as I canexceeded their authority in incorporating this language in the bill. That is the very reason I asked this morning that the Senate should devote a few moments to the consideration of the conference report.

Mr. THOMAS. Will the Senator permit me to make a statement in connection with the criticism of the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS]?

Mr. ASHURST. Yes. Mr. THOMAS. I wish to say, in regard to the 640-acre homestead bill, to which that Senator referred, that it was a bill which was designed to confer a great benefit upon a great many citizens. I read this morning a statement in the Rocky Mountain News that 1,766,000 acres of the public domain have been homesteaded by men and women in my own State, by citizens of my State, since the enactment of that measure. We did exceed our authority, and we came here and confessed it; but here is another assumption of authority which, according to the assertion of the Senator from Kansas, does not seek to confer a benefit upon any except a few Indians, and that at the expense of the United States Treasury to the extent of $3,000,000.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I agree entirely with the Senator from Colorado.

There are four amendments, to wit, amendment numbered 48, being an amendment relating to a Minnesota item, the differences which I think can be composed later; amendment numbered 80, being the per capita payment to the Choctaws and Chickasaws; amendment numbered 95, being an amendment providing for schools in South Dakota; and amendment numbered 111, being the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. Curtis], which is a rescript of the Smoot amendment respecting the horizontal rates of the compensation of certain Government employees. As to those four amendments the conferees have been unable to agree, and they wish to have an expression of the Senate thereon.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Arizona who are the conferees on the part of the Senate?

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator from Montana [Mr. Myers], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP], and myself.
Mr. STONE. Did the majority of the Senate conferees agree to this action?

Mr. ASHURST. We have made a partial report. We agreed on 108 amendments but disagreed on 4 amendments. The report of progress or the partial agreement is agreed to by all the conferees on the part of the other House and all those on the part of the Senate.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, will the Senator from Arizona yield to me a moment?

Mr. ASHURST. Certainly.

Mr. CLAPP. I think if the status of the matter were exactly stated to the Senate it would make it very much clearer. conferees reached a point where there had to be reported back a disagreement upon three quite vital and important items. Of course, the amendment referred to by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. Curtis] was in excess of the authority of the conferees, and it would not have been considered for one moment had the conferees been able to have reached a final agreement upon the bill; but, inasmuch as they had to report a disagreement to the Senate, it was thought well enough to bring this matter in in order that the Senate might voice its views upon it, and then that the Senate conferees would be in a position to deal with it accordingly when the conference report went back, as it must go back.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, that is a very clear statement, and I thank the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee what has been done with the difference between the House and the Senate with reference to the distribution of the per capita payments?

Mr. ASHURST. I wish to say to the Senator from Missouri that amendment No. 80 is the amendment relating to the per capita payments. The Senate conferees, obeying the action of the Senate, have not receded from that amendment. We have come back asking for instructions as to what we shall do, or as to whether other conferees shall be chosen in our stead. We have asked for instructions with regard to No. 80 and the other amendments in disagreement.

Mr. STONE. The House has adhered to the House language and the Senate conferees have adhered to the Senate language? Mr. ASHURST. The House conferees are adhering to the House text and the Senate conferees are adhering to the amendment adopted by the Senate striking out the per capita pay-

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I wish to express the hope that the Senate conferees will never agree to the provisions of the House bill in connection with this allotment unless the House conferees agree to the amendments that were offered by me, but that were not considered by the Senate committee, because they preferred at this short session to disagree with the House provision and let the whole matter go over to the next session. If those gentlemen over there had rather see the Indian appropriation bill fail than not to forego their determination to cut out all possible future chance to do anything even resembling justice for the Mississippi Choctaws, then it is better for the cause of justice and better for the country that the Indian appropriations of this year should fail-the whole bill-and I wish to express as emphatically as I can my own position and my desire to strengthen the hands of the Senate conferees in the position which they have taken. It is admitted that if this allotment is made there is nothing left upon which the claims of right, as I think, of the Mississippi Choctaws can operate.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President-

Mr. ASHURST. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. JONES. As I understand, if this point of order is sustained, the conference report is rejected; that the whole matter then goes back to conference; and that all the amendments put on the bill in the Senate will be open to consideration.

I note that in the conference report as submitted the Senate conferees have receded from amendment numbered 100, increasing the $200,000 appropriation made in the House for the irrigation of the Yakima Indian Reservation to $300,000. I understand that the House conferees based their opposition to this increase largely on the statement in the commissioner's report that there was about $195,000 available to carry on this work from last year's appropriation. That appropriation did not become effective until the 1st of July of last year, and the commissioner's report shows the expenditure up to a very short time after that. In talking with the commissioner's office I find that there is not on hand now more than $40,000 of the $195,000 referred to in the commissioner's testimony, and that before the 1st of July of this year all of that money will be expended. So that, as a matter of fact, there is no money available of the appropriation for the current year that will be left on the 1st of July. I am in hope that that state of affairs will be taken into account by the conferees when they go back to confer on this bill and that, if possible, they will have the amendment of the Senate accepted.

In that connection I want to say a word more, and then I will be glad to hear from the Senator from Arizona. The local officers estimated and recommended $500,000 to carry work, and the department sent in an estimate of $400,000. In order to carry on this work economically, and in order to bring about the best results and the highest benefit to the Indians, we ought to make as liberal appropriations as possible, because the chances are that they will have to suspend work even before the 1st of July; that the money they have on hand will not keep the work going until that time; that the $200,000 appropriation will not keep the work going on next year; and that we will simply waste a large part of the funds we have appropriated.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I trust I am not violating any of the proprieties when I say to the Senate that the Senate conferees are in sympathy with the views of the Senator from Washington, and, if at all within the domain of possibility, we will try to secure a recession on the part of the House conferees respecting that provision.

I am glad to hear that from the Senator. Mr. JONES. course, I know the Senator has taken as good care of this bill under the circumstances as was possible. I also recognize the large appropriations which are being made, and I am willing to cooperate in every way possible to keep them down to the lowest possible limit consistent with efficiency and economy in the Government service. This is a case, however, where I think to eliminate the Senate provision would actually result in waste and more extravagant appropriations in the future. So I hope that the Senator, in case the bill goes back to conference, will be able to secure the retention of the Senate amendment.

Mr. CURTIS, Mr. WILLIAMS, and Mr. SMOOT addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Arizona is entitled to the floor.

Mr. ASHURST. I yield to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. CURTIS. I will complete my statement a little later.

Mr. ASHURST. Then, I will yield the floor.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I move that the Senate instruct the Senate conferees to adhere to the position which they have taken with regard to the four differences the Senator from Arizona has mentioned, and that the Senate conferees do not recede from the Senate amendments still in disagreement.

Mr. CURTIS. The point of order is pending?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is, and the Presiding Officer was about to say something in regard to the point of order.

Mr. CURTIS. Before the President proceeds, may I be permitted to read from a document entitled "Conference Reports," the ground upon which I make the point of order?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me just a moment, I wish to modify the motion I made. I want to move that the Senate conferees be instructed to adhere to Senate amendment numbered 80. When I was on my feet before I did not know the number of the amendment.

Mr. CURTIS. In this document, which was presented to the Senate a number of years ago in compliance with a resolution presented by the then Senator from Massachusetts, Mr. Hoar, we find that the following was laid down as the law and practice with regard to conferences and conference reports:

29. Conferees may not include in their report matters not committed to them by either House.

Mr. GALLINGER. From what does the Senator read?

Mr. CURTIS. From Mr. Allison's report. It is a compilation prepared by Mr. Cleaves.

Mr. GALLINGER. I remember it. The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has been observing these conference reports for four years, and it is not an unfair statement to say that quite a good deal of the important legislation of the Congress of the United States is transacted in the conference committees, and not in the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States. The Chair understands the rule to be that the conferees have no right in conference to insert in the report which they make or in the agreement into which they enter anything except matters which were in dis-pute between the two Houses. Nevertheless, it is constantly pute between the two Houses. being done by conference committees. It has, however, been the settled rule of the Senate that a point of order could not be made to a conference report, the sole question being whether the report shall be concurred in or whether it shall be rejected and sent back to conference again, with or without instructions.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, may I interrupt right there to say that I think the President of the Senate has misstated the practice? The practice has been to submit the question of order to the Senate when the point of order was made, for the Senate | the opinion of the Senate upon that practice.

to pass on it. I quote again from the document to which I have referred:

In the Senate, in case such matter is included, the custom is to submit the question of order to the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is that a precedent of the Senate? Mr. CURTIS. It is.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Where will it be found?

Mr. CURTIS. It will be found in the document from which I have been reading, on page 16, referring to two decisions, one in the Fifty-fifth Congress, first session, and the other in the Fifty-sixth Congress, second session. The document, as I have said, is a report made by Senator Allison on a resolution offered by Senator Hoar. For the benefit of the Chair, I will send the document to the desk

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield to me, so far as I have any authority, I am willing to say to the Senate that, if the point of order can not be sustained, the Senate conferees will adhere and decline to concur in the amendment suggested to amendment numbered 85.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks the Senator from Kansas has misconstrued the language of this report. The note is as follows:

In the Fifty-fifth Congress, first session, Vice President Hobart, in overruling a point of order made on this ground against a conference report-

That was the insertion of matter not in conference-during its reading in the Senate, stated that the report having been adopted by one House and being now submitted for discussion and decision in the form of concurrence or disagreement, it is not in the province of the Chair during the progress of its presentation to decide that matter has been inserted which is new or not relevant, but that such questions should go before the Senate when it comes to vote on the adoption or rejection of the report.

Then in the Fifty-sixth Congress, second session-

The Presiding Officer (Mr. Lodgs in the chair) referred with approval to the foregoing decision of Vice President Hobart, and stated that when a point of order is made on a conference report on the ground that new matter has been inserted, the Chair should submit the question to the Senate instead of deciding it himself, as has been the custom in the House. No formal ruling was made in this case, however, as the conference report, after debate, was by unanimous consent rejected.

Mr. CURTIS. Will the Vice President kindly read the large print at the head of the note?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Yes. It is as follows:

Conferees may not include in their report matters not committed to them by either House.

In the House, in case such matter is included, the conference report may be ruled out on a point of order.

In the Senate, in case such matter is included, the custom is to submit the question of order to the Senate.

Mr. CURTIS. That is what I base my opinion upon. The VICE PRESIDENT. But the note does not carry it out. Vice President Hobart did not decide the point of order, but it went to the Senate, and I think he said that the Senate settles it by either agreeing or disagreeing to the conference report. Senator Lodge, when he occupied the chair, did, however, say that he thought the point of order should be decided by the Senate, but it was not ruled upon, the Senate having rejected the conference report.
Mr. CURTIS. Then, Mr. President, I move that the conference report be rejected.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, just a word. I have always thought that our rules ought to provide that a point of order would lie against a conference report in which any new matter was inserted; but it is not the rule of the Senate. I am quite sure that Vice President Hobart's ruling was absolutely correct, that in the absence of a rule of that kind the fact that new matter was inserted could only be used in determining the attitude of each Senator as to whether or not a conference report should be accepted or rejected. I am not in the chair, but if the question should be submitted to me under those circumstances I would agree with the position that the Vice President takes in the matter.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair had not quite finished what the Chair has felt it a duty to say.

This is not a full and complete conference report. report be disagreed to, as it has been reported, the question can then go back to conference, either with or without instructions on the part of the Senate. The Chair believes, however, that at some time, if the insertion of new matter does not stop, it will be the duty of a Presiding Officer to sustain a point of order; and although it is opposed to all the precedents of the United States Senate the Chair proposes to reserve the right at some time in the future to sustain the point of order and test

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, would not the Vice President submit that as a question of order to the Senate? That is fre-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Yes; the Vice President could do that; but in view of the condition of this particular case, and in view of the fact that the Chair believes he is ruling in accordance with the precedents, he is now overruling the point of order of the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. CURTIS. Then, Mr. President, I move that the Senate reject the conference report.

Mr. GRONNA. Before that is voted on, may I make a short

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question will be simply on agreeing to the report; and if disagreed to it would go back.

Mr. ASHURST. I earnestly hope that the motion of the Senator from Kansas will be agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is a motion pending by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] that the conferees be instructed to adhere to Senate amendment No. 80.

Mr. JONES. I make the point of order against that motion that it is not in order at this time, until action is taken upon the adoption or rejection of the conference report. If the conference report is rejected, then it can be sent back with instructions, as proposed by the Senator from Mississippi; but until action is taken on the conference report, it seems to me, a motion to instruct is not in order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is overruled. The Chair is clearly of the opinion that the Senate has a right at any time to instruct its conferees to adhere to any amendment. It may be done in the first instance when the conferees are appointed.

Mr. JONES. This is one of the amendments that are in disagreement, is it?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is.

Then, of course, that can be done. Mr. JONES.

Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. motion of the Senator from Mississippi, as I understand it, is that the conferees be instructed to adhere to amendment No. 80. That, of course, if carried out, makes for a disagreement. Would a motion as a substitute that the Senate instruct the conferees to recede from amendment No. 80 have precedence?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Anything that tends to bring the two Houses into agreement would certainly have precedence

Mr. REED. Then, Mr. President, I move as a substitute that the Senate conferees be directed to recede from Senate amendment No. 80.

Mr. President, it seems to me that quite time enough has been spent in the effort to coerce Congress into the payment of a lot of money to Mississippi Choctaw Indians, or alleged Indians, who many years ago separated themselves from their tribe. The proposition we now have is that the entire appropriation bill shall be tied up for the benefit of a few people claiming to have Indian blood who have for many years resided in the State of Mississippi, who have not for many years-I think nearly a half century-affiliated with their tribe; who were once given an abundant opportunity to come into the tribe and to receive their allotment.

We are going too far when we tie up the entire Indian appropriation bill for such a reason. If these Mississippi Choctaws appear to have equities hereafter, the equities can be taken care This session is nearing its close. It ought not to be closed with a great appropriation bill tied up for any such purpose or reason. I think the Senate conferees ought to agree to recede from amendment No. 80, and that the other difficulties with which they are confronted ought to be composed.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I am very sorry that the Senator from Missouri should appear to have informed himself so ill concerning a matter which he says has taken a sufficiency public time and attention." There is not, and there never has been, any attempt to "coerce," as he calls it, any "payment" of any description to the Mississippi Choctaws. There has been an attempt to secure a consideration of their claims before exhausting all of the money out of which their claims, if just, could be paid.

The Senator says that there has been "abundant opportunity for them. Congress itself acted, and empowered the Dawes Commission to enroll the Mississippi Choctaws, to place the names of those who were bona fide Choctaws upon the roll, and that presupposes the admission of the right to be there. Dawes Commission sent a subcommission down to Mississippi, and they actually did enroll them, after looking at them and seeing that they were Indians, concerning which there can be no mistake, and if Indians and living in Mississippi, then Choctaws.

The Senator says we are doing this as an attempt to get some-thing done for "alleged Indians." If the Senator had done me the honor even to read the amendment that I have offered, that went to the committee, where the consideration of it was delayed because of this agreement in the committee to pass the whole matter over until next session, which led to the Senate committee's not adopting the House provision, he would have seen that the amendment contemplates nobody except those who were actually enrolled by the Dawes Commission under the authority of Congress, and such full-blood Mississippi Choctaws as were never enrolled.

Mr. President, a full-blood Indian in the State of Mississippi is bound to be a Choctaw. He could not be anything else, unless he was an Indian who had moved into the State from somewhere else, and we have had no Indian immigration. other three tribes went to the territorial reserve west of the river. The Pascagoulas and the Chickasaws and Natchez all went to the west of the river; but in the Dancing Rabbit treaty special provisions were made with regard to such of the Choctaws as chose to remain in Mississippi, and it is under the provisions of that treaty that this claim has been made.

It has been contended that that treaty has been set aside to a large extent. How? Not by any agreement of the Choctaws remaining in Mississippi, but by several agreements entered into between the United States and the Choctaws out in Oklahoma. To state the contention is to demonstrate its inequity and moral obliquity.

The Senate has had this matter before it, and the Senate has twice, on a full yea-and-nay vote, agreed with the contention I am making, and now the will of the Senate is about to be thwarted by having distributed every dollar of this fund out of which any claim of these people could be satisfied. All I ask is that that shall not be done until some provision has been made to erect a tribunal, or some provision otherwise has been made to give these people an opportunity and to furnish them with a possibility of being paid.

Mr. REED. Mr. President— Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for just a moment? Of course, at the hour of 1 o'clock the unfinished business will be laid before the Senate and nothing will have been accomplished regarding this conference report unless we vote with respect to this report before 1 o'clock. Lest one of the statements made by the Senator from Mississippi might be misunderstood, I wish to say that, so far as the conferees on the part of the Senate are concerned, there is no danger of the Senate conferees receding on amendment No. 80 under this bill, because we feel ourselves absolutely bound by a previous vote of the Senate to adhere to amendment No. 80, unless the Senate should this morning reverse its action and instruct its conferees to recede.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, may I ask the chairman of the committee a question? The Senate committee of conference has reported a disagreement on four amendments, as I understand.

Mr. ASHURST. That is true. Mr. GRONNA. And there are three of those amendments, I think, of very great importance.
Mr. ASHURST. Yes; that is true.

Mr. GRONNA. One of them is No. 80, but I want to say to the Senator that that is not the only amendment that is of great importance. There is No. 95, which is the school question; and I will say to the Senator that it will take some time before this bill passes this body unless that amendment is retained in the bill.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator refers now to No. 95?
Mr. GRONNA. No. 95, also No. 111. I want to move to amend the motion of the Senator from Mississippi by making the instructions apply not only to No. 80 but also to No. 95 and No. 111.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I simply want a moment.

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] has a pleasant habit of telling other Senators that they are not informed or posted. He has indulged that habit this morning with reference to myself. He states that I have not even paid him the compliment of reading his remarks. Mr. President, I admit that is true.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I said my amendment, not my remarks.

Mr. REED. I have not given this matter as close study as perhaps the Senator from Mississippi has, but I have given the business of the Senate a reasonable degree of attention. I have heard a great deal of the discussion of this claim; and reached the very clear conclusion that the claims of the Mississippi Choctaws are of a most shadowy nature, and that without going to the extent of saying that they have no claims at all which are entitled to consideration at some time, I have reached the conclusion that it is unwise to hold up the entire Indian appropriation bill in order to enforce this particular claim at this time.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It is not to enforce a claim; it is to enforce some method of considering it.

Mr. REED. The amount of the matter-and I am now replying to the remark just made by the Senator from Mississippiis this: That if those who insist upon the claims of the Choctaw Indians being recognized at this time succeed, the probabilities are that the entire Indian appropriation bill will fail.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator kindly yield to me for a moment? Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. ASHURST. I do not wish to interrupt the Senator's remarks, except to call attention to a situation. The morning hour will end within two or three minutes, and while this subject is very important, urgent measures of national importance will, of course, come up and displace this discussion, and it might be delayed for another week before I could get another opportunity to bring it up. I just wished to inquire if there is any possibility of having a decisive vote on the question before the hour of 1 o'clock? I do not wish in any way to foreclose what the Senator has to say, but wish, if I can-

Mr. REED. I understand the Senator's position. The anxiety of the Senator is very natural.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to make a suggestion?

Mr. REED. Certainly. Mr. VARDAMAN. It will take only a few minutes to pass it after the morning hour expires.

Mr. ASHURST. I think that certain Senators who have the right to do so will move to proceed to the consideration of bills that are of extreme, urgent national importance, and while this bill is also very important, I am afraid it will be displaced. That is what I mean, Mr. President.

Mr. REED. That is a very polite way of asking me to yield the floor.

Mr. ASHURST. No; I do not mean that at all.

Mr. REED. And I shall yield it in a moment, because I am not going to delay this matter for the sake of talking. this-that I think we have reached a point where this claim has been pressed as far as it ought to be pressed at this time and that the Indian appropriation bill ought not to be killed for the sake of this one claim.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. REED. I am going to yield the floor, but, of course, I will answer any question.

Mr. VARDAMAN. It is not a question so much as a sugges-The rights of the Mississippi Choctaws tion to the Senator. heretofore have been defeated by the influence that is delaying the agreement of the conference committee. It is the influence of the Oklahoma Choctaws and their representatives. The Oklahoma Choctaws are endeavoring to grab all the money and to leave nothing for the Mississippi Choctaws. If the Senator understood that matter as we who are in actual contact with these people, know their condition, and see the effect of the horrible treatment they have received, I do not think the Senator would insist upon instructing the conferees on the part of the Senate to yield to the demands of the House conferees

Mr. REED. Mr. President, just one word. In what I have had to say about this matter this morning, I have largely been trying to express the feelings of the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. Gore], who has been for several weeks confined to his room and bed and who is very ill. I know how anxious he is to have this allotment made, and it is for that reason, coupled with the fact that I am personally convinced that we ought not to tie up the entire appropriation bill, that I have ventured to insist that the conferees should recede on Senate amendment No. 80. If such action is taken, the distribution to the Choctaws will take place and the Mississippi Choctaws may hereafter press their claims, if any they have.

Mr. ASHURST. I appreciate the Senator's situation, and without regard to the merits of the controversy, personally I am profoundly convinced that if amendment No. 80 were receded from the Senate would kill the bill. Of course, the whole is greater than the part, and in a short session I think Senators ought to be willing to give up any particular amendment or particular point when insisting on it may destroy the whole bill.

Mr. REED. May I ask the Senator, if it is insisted on will it not likewise kill the bill?

Mr. ASHURST. Then the bill is between Scylla and Charyb-

The VICE PRESIDENT. The hour of 1 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The Secretary. A bill (H. R. 9533) to provide a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes.

Mr. ASHURST. I ask the Senator from Colorado kindly to lay aside the unfinished business and let us have 15 or 20 minutes to dispose of this matter.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I am willing to yield, with the understanding that if it takes more than 20 minutes I can resume the consideration of the Porto Rican bill.

Mr. ASHURST. I will agree, as far as I can agree, that if it takes more than 20 minutes I will withdraw the matter.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be laid aside with that understanding.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Colorado asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. Without objection, it is so ordered. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. Reed] to recede from amendment No. 80.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I merely wish to say that possibly my comment with regard to the conference report was of such a character as that it might be misconstrued. The very lucid explanation of the committee's action by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Clapp] satisfies me that their action was all that could be desired.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. Reed].

The motion was not agreed to.
The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion offered by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] to amend the motion of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WIL-LIAMS]

Mr. WILLIAMS. I accept the amendment to my motion offered by the Senator from North Dakota.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Williams] as modified.

The motion as modified was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. ASHURST. The conference report should be rejected.

The report was rejected.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I ask that the unfinished business be laid before the Senate.

Mr. CLAPP. Just a moment. I wish to suggest to the chairman that it occurs to me there must now be a motion made for a further conference and the appointment of conferees. wise the conferees would be without any authority to act.

Mr. ASHURST. I thank the Senator from Minnesota. I move that the Senate still further insist on its amendments, agree to the conference asked by the House, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate at the further conference.

The motion was agreed to, and the Vice President appointed Mr. ASHURST, Mr. MYERS, and Mr. CLAPP conferees on the part of the Senate at the further conference.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. OVERMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 8148) to define and punish espionage. In doing so I wish to state frankly that this will displace the Porto Rican bill, which is the unfinished business. This bill, as the Senate knows, is a very important measure urged by the President and by the Secretary of War. It has to go to the House of Representatives. The Porto Rican bill has already passed the House of Representatives, while this bill before it becomes a law will have to go to the House. I move that the Senate proceed to its consideration. I hope the Senator from Colorado will agree to temporarily lay aside the Porto Rican bill until we can dispose of this bill. Otherwise I shall insist on my motion.

Mr. SHAFROTH. How long will it take?

Mr. OVERMAN. I have no idea.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I can not consent, Mr. President. Porto Rican bill has been dragging along for seven or eight months. I have been begging and begging to get night sessions to consider it, and we are now about ready to come to a vote I do not think it will take over an hour.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. We can finish it in an hour.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I think we can finish it in an hour.
Mr. OVERMAN. When the prohibition question comes up on it I think it will take two or three days.
Mr. SHAFROTH. I think all parties are agreed on that.
Mr. OVERMAN. This bill is more important than any Porto Rican bill, and I think the Senate ought to take it up. I am going to do my duty, and the Senate can do its duty. I insist on my motion, and I shall call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll. The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Martin, Va. Martine, N. J. Myers Nelson Newlands Oliver Ashurst Beckham Borah Gallinger Shafroth Sharroth Sheppard Sherman Shields Smith, Ga. Smoot Gronna Harding Hitchcock Catron Chamberlain Hollis Husting James Johnson, Me. Chilton Clapp Clark Smoot Stone Sutherland Thomas Tillman Townsend Vardaman Wadsworth Warren Weeks Williams Overman Page Phelan Pittman Colt Culberson Cummins Curtis Jones Kenyon Kern Lane Lea, Tenn. Lewis Poindexter Pomerene Ransdell du Pont Fall Fernald Fletcher Reed Robinson Lodge McCumber Saulsbury

Mr. TOWNSEND. I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. SMITH of Michigan] is absent from the city on important business, and that he is paired with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. Reed]. This announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. I wish to announce that the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. Johnson] is detained on official busi-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-four Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The pending question is the motion of the Senator from North Carolina to pro-ceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 8148) to define and punish espionage.

I think the Senator from North Carolina Mr. SHAFROTH.

is willing to withhold the motion for the present.

Mr. OVERMAN. I will withhold it for an hour. see if the Senator from Colorado can get the Porto Rican bill through in an hour.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I shall try to get it through in an hour, but, of course, it is better to give me an hour under any circumstances.

COUNTING OF ELECTORAL VOTES.

Mr. KERN. I submit a resolution, and ask that it be considered at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read. The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 357), and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows: Resolved, That at 10 minutes before 1 o'clock on Wednesday, February 14, 1917, the Senate proceed to the Hall of the House of Represenatives to take part in the count of the electoral vote for President and Vice President of the United States.

Mr. KERN. I desire to state that the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. Dillingham], who has heretofore been appointed one of the tellers to count the vote, will be unable on account -he telephoned me this morning—to perform the duties, and he asked that some other Senator be appointed in his place. I will suggest that the Senator from Minnesota [Mr.

CLAPP], who is the next ranking member of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, be appointed. The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] being unable to act as teller, the Chair appoints the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] in his stead.

GOVERNMENT OF PORTO RICO.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9533) to provide a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I notice in the reprint that has been made, on page 29, at the bottom of the page, there is the following clause prescribing in what words a resolution shall be worded:

Be it resolved by the Legislature of Porto Rico, except as hereinafter provided. Bills and joint resolutions may originate in either house.

I ask that the proper amendment be made there by inserting a period after the words "Porto Rico" and beginning the word "except" with a capital letter and the word "bills" with a small letter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LEA of Tennessee in the chair). The Secretary will state the amendment.

The Secretary. On page 28, line 14, of the text we are amending, page 29 of the reprint, where it reads "Be it resolved by the Legislature of Porto Rico, except as herein provided. Bills and joint resolutions may originate in either house," insert a period after "Porto Rico," and make the clause read:

That the enacting clause of the laws shall be as to acts "Be it enacted by the Legislature of Porto Rico" and as to joint resolutions "Be it resolved by the Legislature of Porto Rico. Except as hereinafter provided, bills and joint resolutions may originate in either house."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. REED. I call the attention of the Senator from Colorado to the language on page 8, line 8, and ask him if he does not think it ought to be corrected? It reads "within one year of the taking effect of this act." It ought to read "within one year after the taking effect," instead of as it is written.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I accept the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 7, line 13, where it reads, "of his decision to do so within one year of the taking effect of this act," after the words "one year" strike out "of" and insert "after."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be agreed to ment will be agreed to.

Mr. SHAFROTH. On page 42 of the text, after the word "allens," in line 18, I move to insert "and Porto Ricans," so that it will read:

In addition, said district court shall have jurisdiction for the naturalization of aliens and Porto Ricans.

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator state why he offers that amendment?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I have received a letter from the judge of the district court of Porto Rico, stating that there has been a Supreme Court decision that does not class Porto Ricans as aliens, and therefore he thinks it is necessary that these words should be put in in order to give him the power of naturalization. Here is his letter, a part of which I will read. It is from Judge Hamilton, of Porto Rico, judge of the district court of the United States. He says:

My attention has been called to what may be an unintentional omission in the proposed Porto Rican act. The section about this court gives it power to naturalize "allens," and a part struck out by lines seems to indicate that your intention is to give this court jurisdiction to naturalize such Porto Ricans as may disclaim American citizenship under the bill. If it is the intention to allow such Porto Ricans a locus penitentiae after the six months for disclaimer, it must be otherwise expressed. The case of Gonzalez v. Williams, 192 U. S., 1, declares that Porto Ricans are not aliens, and so giving this court jurisdiction of aliens only would not cover them. I am not advocating the matter one way or the other, but call your attention to the point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated. The Secretary. On page 42, line 18, after the word "aliens," insert the words "and Porto Ricans."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I have another amendment which I desire to offer, and I send it to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The Secretary. On page 31, in an amendment already agreed to, strike out lines 23 to 25, inclusive, and on page 32, to strike out lines 1 to 5, inclusive, and insert in lieu thereof the fol-

Every bill shall be read at length, on three different days, in each house; all substantial amendments made thereto shall be printed for the use of the members before the final vote is taken on the bill; and no bill shall become a law except by vote of a majority of all the members elected to each house, nor unless on its final passage the vote be taken by yeas and nays and the names of those voting be entered on the journal.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment of the committee in this part of the bill will be reconsidered and the amendment to the amendment will be stated.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish the Secretary would read the lines proposed to be stricken out and then read the amendment.

The Secretary. It is proposed to strike out the following words, beginning on page 31, line 23:

Every bill shall be read at length on three different days, in each house; all substantial amendments made thereto shall be printed for the use of the members before the final vote is taken on the bill; and no bill shall become a law except by vote of a majority of all the members elected to each house, nor unless on its final passage the vote be taken by yeas and nays and the names of those voting be entered on the journal.

And to insert in lieu thereof:

Every bill shall be introduced, printed and, if passed, enrolled in the English language, and, if the governor shall approve the same, approved

English language, and, if the governor shall approve the same, approved in English.

Every bill may also be simultaneously introduced and printed in the Spanish language and the governor may also sign the Spanish bill if he approves of the same.

Every bill shall be read on three different days in each house. Both the second and third readings of the bill shall be at length in the English language and may also be at length in the Spanish language; all substantial amendments made thereto shall be printed in English, and may also be printed in Spanish for the use of the members before the final vote is taken on the bill; and no bill shall become a law except by vote of a majority of all the members elected to each house, or unless on its final passage the vote be taken by yeas and nays and the names of those voting be entered on the journal.

Proceedings of the legislature shall be in English, but speeches in Spanish may be interpreted into Spanish.

The PRESIDING OFFICER The question is on agreeing to

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to. The PRESIDING OFFICER. An amendment is pending at the end of the bill which was offered by the Senator from Florida [Mr. Fletcher]. The Secretary will state the amend-

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of the bill, page 52, line 7, the following proviso:

Provided, That the principal agent to collect the duties and taxes authorized to be levied, collected, and paid in Porto Rico by the provisions of the act approved April 12, 1900, shall be known as the collector of customs for Porto Rico, and shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. This went over at the request of a number of Senators on Saturday. At the time the request was made that it be passed over it was suggested to the Senator offering the amendment that he learn the amount of salary that is being paid to the special agent in Porto Rico for the collection of cus-I will ask the Senator if he has done so.

Mr. FLETCHER. I have ascertained, and I find that it is $5,000. The present salary is $5,000. I am going to follow this with an amendment on page 48 fixing the salary of the collector of customs for Porto Rico at $5,000.

Mr. SMOOT. How will that compare with the salaries that we are paying to collectors of customs at other ports receiving about the same amount of importations?

Mr. FLETCHER. It is about the same.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator I think it is higher than is generally paid.

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not think so. I think it is about the same. I know the collector of customs in Florida, for instance, receives $6,000 salary, and in some other districts they receive This is quite an important district; it embraces the whole island of Porto Rico.

Mr. SMOOT. Are they not collecting at the port in Florida twice the amount of collections as in Porto Rico?

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not know the amount exactly, nor how the collections at the two places compare. inquired as to the amount of duties collected in Florida and the amount collected in Porto Rico.

Mr. SMOOT. I suppose this amendment is to be made in order to get rid of a man now holding the place, and the President can appoint to take the place a man whom some one wants to have appointed?

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not know whether it is proposed to get rid of the man. As far as I know, he is giving very good satisfaction. The object is to put this collector on the same footing with every other collector. There is no other collector of customs anywhere in the country who is not appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate. I think the island of Porto Rico ought to be put on the same footing in that respect with every other collection district and the collector of customs there ought to be appointed just like every other

Mr. SMOOT. I am not objecting at all to the change being made. I wish to learn, however, the salary that is being paid at the present time, and then I have a desire to know whether the salary being paid to the man in charge is greater than that paid to the collector of customs at ports receiving about the same amount of importations.

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not think so. I think this salary of $5,000 is on a par with the salary paid in all the other portions of the country. Turning to the imports, I find that in a total value of imports, as shown by the report of the governor of Porto Rico, there has been an increase in the total value of imports of $5,066,860, going up from $33,884,296 last year to $38,951,156 this year. These figures show a very considerable import and export.

Mr. FALL. May I ask the Senator where those imports are from on that showing?

Mr. FLETCHER (reading)—

Imports from foreign countries gained in value only $104,176, reaching a total of $3,058,641.

Mr. FALL. That is the idea. In this enormous increase of $5,000,000 nine-tenths of it was from the United States.

Mr. FLETCHER. The increase was largely from the United States

Mr. FALL. Then the total imports as shown there bear about the same ratio. In other words, out of $38,000,000, $35,000,000 was from the United States. The foreign business which this collector will have to do is very small. Very many of the collectors to my personal knowledge are receiving much less and collectors who are doing very much larger business. I have no objection, however, if the Senator wants to take the responsi-

Mr. FLETCHER. I think it is a fair salary to pay. It is precisely what he is getting now .-

Mr. FALL. If the Senators who are insistent upon economy want to pay $5,000 when they can get a man at a port doing a great deal more business for less money it is up to them as far as I am concerned.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FLETCHER. Now, on page 48, after line 19, I move to insert:

The salary of the collector of customs shall be $5,000 per annum, payable monthly.

Mr. FALL. If an amendment to that is in order, I move to place it at $4,000 instead of $5,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] reserved the right to offer an amendment to the committee amendment which provides that the salary of the Governor of Porto Rico shall be $8,000. The Senator from Utah has proposed that that salary shall be $7,000, and I presume that he desires to be heard on his amendment to the amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I shall take but very few moments of the time of the Senate in discussing this amendment. On page 48, line 14, I move to strike out "$8,000" and to insert "$7,000." That will provide a salary for the Governor of Porto Rico of $7,000. I shall follow that amendment with another amendment, by moving to strike out "$6,500," which is the salary provided for the chief justice of the Supreme Court of Porto Rico, and to insert in lieu thereof "$6,000.

Those motions, Mr. President, are made so that the salary of the governor and the salary of the chief justice of the Supreme Court of Porto Rico shall be the same as the salary of the governor of Alaska and the governor of Hawaii, as well as of the chief justice of the Supreme Court of Alaska and of the chief justice of the Supreme Court of Hawaii. I can not see why we should pay higher salaries to the governor and the chief justice of Porto Rico than those paid to the governor and the chief justice of Hawaii.

I also call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the Governor of Porto Rico is furnished a home; that he is not put to one dollar of expense for rent for his residence, but that a residence has been provided for the special use of the Governor of Porto Rico. The Governor of Porto Rico will have that advantage over the governor of Hawaii and also over the governor of Alaska.

So far as the cost of living is concerned, no one questions that the cost of living is higher in Alaska than it is in Porto Rico; and so far as the cost of living in Hawaii is concerned, it is just as high, and I think somewhat higher, than is the cost of living in Porto Rico. It would be unjust, I think, in this bill to pay the Governor of Porto Rico $1,000 more salary than is paid to the governors of the two Territories which I have mentioned and to pay to the chief justice of the Supreme Court of Porto Rico $500 more salary than is paid to either of the chief justices in the other two countries I have named.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah yield to me for just a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.
Mr. FALL. How are these expenses paid in Alaska as compared with the same expenses in Porto Rico? In other words, how are the governor and the chief justice of Alaska paid?

Mr. SMOOT. They are paid by the Government of the United States.

Are they paid directly out of the Treasury of the United States?

Mr. SMOOT. They are paid directly out of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. FALL. How about the governor and the chief justice of Porto Rico? Are they paid in the same way?

Mr. SMOOT. I think they are paid in the same way. That no doubt is provided for in the bill.

Mr. President, I do not think I shall say anything more on the amendment at this time.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I desire to be heard for just a few moments on the amendment to the amendment. I desire to say that the bill, as it came from the other House, provided for a salary of $10,000 for the Governor of Porto Rico, but that our committee concluded that the salary ought not to exceed that which the governor is now drawing, which is $8,000. A great many formerly contended that the salary should be $12,000, but, as I stated, the House put the salary at $10,000. We, however, have reported to reduce it to $8,000, which is the present salary.

The Senator from Utah [Mr. Smoot] refers to the fact that the governors of Alaska and Hawaii are being paid only $7,000 annum. In the first place, the population of both Alaska and Hawaii is very much smaller than that of Porto Rico. I think there are not 300,000 people in the Hawaiian Islands, but there are 1,200,000 people in Porto Rico. Then, again, the population in Alaska is very small.

I will state that the salary which was provided for the Governor General of Porto Rico under Spanish rule, who exercised the same powers as does the present governor, was $20,000 in Porto Rican money. Porto Rican money was somewhat at a discount, and it measured in American money a salary of about $12,000.

I will also state to the Senator from Utah that the salary which was fixed for the Governor General of the Philippine Islands was $20,000 a year, with a palace for his residence, and that salary has continued up to last year, when Gov. Gen. Harrison himself asked that a general reduction in salaries be made, and voluntarily asked that his salary be fixed at $18,000 a year.

Mr. President, in view of the fact that the former salary of the Governor of Porto Rico was $20,000 in Porto Rican money; that the governor has been drawing $8,000 a year; that it always disturbs conditions in living expenses if salaries are reduced; and inasmuch as the other House fixed his salary in the bill at $10,000 a year, and the Senate committee, in the interest of economy, has cut that down and placed the salary at $8,000, it seems to me that we ought to adhere to the recommendation made by the committee of the Senate.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I should like to ask my colleague if the Governor of Porto Rico is furnished a residence there or whether he has to pay rental; in other words, whether he has any emoluments outside of and beyond the salary

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, there is an old palace there which is furnished to the governor free. It is a great, big, lumbering edifice. I presume that there is some appropriation made by the Porto Ricans to keep it up, but this salary does not come out of the Treasury of the United States, it comes out of the Porto Ricans. I have not received a single protest from the Porto Ricans against this salary being made $8,000.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. President, I desire to ask, Is it not true that the Porto Ricans do not want to economize upon the amount of salary to be paid to one who occupies the important place of governor of the island?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I think so. The Porto Ricans have still retained some of the notions of the Spaniards, that the chief executive should be considered as a man somewhat superior. That he is obliged to entertain a great many visitors there is no doubt. The position is not like that of the governor of a State, although the governor of a State may entertain; but there seems to be an obligation upon the part of the Governor of Porto Rico whenever American citizens or distinguished men visit the island that they should be invited to the palace and that he should give receptions.

Mr. THOMAS. Let me ask if there is anything in this bill which restricts the Territorial legislature from appropriating money from its treasury for that purpose?

Mr. SHAFROTH. No; that is true, except that when we specify in this act that the salary shall be $8,000 they would not then have the power to increase that salary.

Mr. THOMAS. But they could provide a contingent fund for meeting any such extraordinary expenses as the Senator mentions?

Mr. SHAFROTH. That may be so.
Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I think this matter should be understood. I asked the question as to the funds from which were paid the respective salaries which have been compared with the salaries provided for in this bill. There is an annual appropriation made for the payment of such expenses in Alaska, for example. Alaska has not an insular or a Territorial treasury of its own, except for purely local purposes, and the Government of the United States must pay out of the general funds of the United States the expenses of running its Government.

In Porto Rico, as I understand, all of these salaries and all other expenses of conducting the Porto Rican government, except those specially provided for otherwise, shall be entirely paid from the insular income. If the people of Porto Rico want to increase the salary of their governor at their own expense, they should have the right to do so; but if they are going to be compelled to pay him at their own expense, then I think that the Congress of the United States should place the salary of their governor at certainly as small a sum as is received by any other governor; in other words, I do not think that we should be justified in increasing the salary or giving the Governor of Porto Rico, for example, a salary larger than the salaries of the governors of other Territories. In the one instance we pay the salaries ourselves and we have the absolute right to fix them, while in the other instance we are fixing them for the people of Porto Rico.

Mr JAMES. Mr. President, I should like to state to the Senator from New Mexico that the salary provided by the Senate committee reporting this bill is the same as that which is now received by the Governor of Porto Rico.

Mr. FALL. Yes; but how is the Governor of Porto Rico now paid?

Mr. JAMES. He would be paid in the same way under this bill as he is now paid; there is no change whatever as to that.

Mr. SHAFROTH. As I understand, there are no salaries that are paid by the United States Treasury except those of United States judges and certain other Federal officers.

Mr. FALL. I so understand. I believe I still have the floor.

Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky has the floor, as the Chair understands. The Chair thought the Senator from New Mexico had yielded the floor.

Mr. JAMES. I have no objection to the Senator from New Mexico interrupting me.

Mr. FALL. Very well. We were carrying on this general controversy, and I should be glad to continue.

Mr. JAMES. Very well.

Mr. FALL. I think it is true that these expenses are so paid; but what I am saying is that we are now in an organic act fixing for the people of Porto Rico themselves the salaries which they shall pay out of their own funds to their governor, whom we appoint. We say, "We reserve the right to appoint a man for you; we are going to appoint him and send him down there, but you must pay him, and you must pay him a salary which we ourselves fix, and we are fixing the salary at a larger amount than the salary which is paid to other officials performing similar duties."

Mr. JAMES. Mr. President, of course the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah [Mr. Smoot] to the committee amendment means a reduction of the salary which is now being received by the Governor of Porto Rico. The House of Representatives itself fixed the salary at $10,000.

There has been an effort emanating from the Senator from Utah, on account of the high cost of living and for other reasons, to increase the salaries of other employees of the Government rather than to decrease them.

Mr. SMOOT. Not of those who are receiving $8,000. Mr. JAMES. I understand that; but it seems that this is to be made an exception. The fact of it is that in connection with the office of governor of a people like those of Porto Rico we should not, in my judgment, try to economize to the extent of reducing the salary below that which one perfectly competent to discharge the duties would be willing to accept.

Mr. FALL. May I ask the Senator from Kentucky a question?

Mr. JAMES. Certainly.
Mr. FALL. The present Governor of Porto Rico is a Kentuckian. What is the salary of the governor of the State of Kentucky?

Mr. JAMES. The governor of the State of Kentucky receives $6,500 a year, but I would rather live in Kentucky on $6,500 a year and be governor of that State than to be Governor of Porto Rico and receive $20,000.

Mr. FALL. There is no doubt of that. The Senator has tried living in the State of Kentucky very successfully, but the Senator has not tried living in Porto Rico.

Mr. JAMES. I know that; but I know also there is a vast difference between the climate, the people, and the country of Porto Rico and of Kentucky. The Senator from New Mexico, having been born in Kentucky, I imagine he will readily agree to the proposition that a salary of 50 per cent less in Kentucky would be more acceptable than double that amount in Porto [Laughter.] Rico.

Mr. FALL. Being somewhat familiar with the habits of Kentuckians, I am inclined to think that I could not live there on $6,500 a year, but would require double that amount.

Mr. JAMES. I did not catch the Senator's remark.

Mr. FALL. I am inclined to think the salary would have to be doubled to enable me to live in Kentucky; in other words, it would take nearer $13,000 than $6,500. I will frankly state to the Senator from Kentucky, however, that if it were possible for the "Senator from New Mexico" to have a residence in the State of Kentucky without surrendering his residence in New Mexico, he would accept such privilege for nothing or he would be willing to pay for it. [Laughter.]

Mr. JAMES. I imagine that the loyalty of my friend to his adopted home calls for that statement, but I have noticed that whenever he can get back to Kentucky he does so. [Laughter.] I now quote from the provisions of the Foraker Act establishing a government for Porto Rice, as follows:

The governor, $8,000; in addition thereto he shall be entitled to the occupancy of the buildings heretofore used by the chief executive of Porto Rico, with the furniture and effects therein, free of rental.

That is a provision of the Foraker Act, and that is the same as the provision carried in this bill.

Mr. SMOOT. There is no question about that. I made the statement that the Governor of Porto Rico had a house furnished him free of rent, and there is no doubt about that.

Mr. JAMES. I understand that.

Mr. SMOOT. But neither the governor of Hawaii nor the governor of Alaska are so favored.

Mr. JAMES. My information is that the governor of Hawaii does have a house furnished him.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that the governor of Hawaii is not furnished a house by the United States Government, but he has a particular friend living in Honolulu who allows him to occupy his home. So far, however, as the Gov-ernment of the United States is concerned, the Government does not pay a cent for rent for a home for the governor of Hawaii.

Mr. JAMES. The old building in Honolulu used in the days of the monarchy is now occupied, is it not, by the governor of Hawaii?

Mr. SMOOT. No; Mr. President, that is not the case

Mr. JAMES. Together with the Senator from Utah I attended a reception in that building, and I received the impression that it was owned by the United States and that it was free for the use of the governor.

Mr. SMOOT. The governor lives in the northern part of the city of Honolulu and not in the building referred to by the

Mr. JAMES. The point I am directing the Senator's attention to is this, that this is an effort to reduce the salary that is now received by the Governor of Porto Rico. The present governor has made a splendid official. He was one of the great edu-cators in the State of Kentucky, and the people of Porto Rico will tell you that they have never had a governor who has shown greater ability or greater sympathy with the purposes of the people of Porto Rico than the present governor. I think it would be exceedingly unwise to reduce his salary.

Mr. SMOOT. The question of who was governor never en-tered my head. I do not care where he comes from, and I do not care who the man may be. What I am trying to do is to equalize the salaries of the governors of the three Territories. Only a year ago an increase in the salary of the governor of Alaska was asked for, and the reason given was the cost of living and the high cost of traveling. So far as the salaries paid governors of States with populations greater than that of Porto Rico are concerned, if I am not mistaken, the governor of the State of Iowa receives only $4,000 a year. I will ask the Senator from Iowa if I am correct as to that?

Mr. CUMMINS. He receives $5,000. Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Iowa corrects me and says that the governor of Iowa receives $5,000 a year. The proposed salary of the Governor of Porto Rico is out of proportion to salaries paid similiar officials, and I thought it was very proper indeed to try to equalize the salaries paid to governors.

Mr. JAMES. If the Senator is proceeding on the plan of equalizing the salaries, I will remind him that ministers to countries nothing like as large as Porto Rico receive $10,000

Mr. SMOOT. That is entirely a different matter.
Mr. JAMES. And they receive, in addition to that $10,000 year, a house in which to live. Of course, the Governor of Porto Rico had to remove his family there, and, as he receives no mileage, the expense was considerable. Then he has to entertain, of course, and does entertain extensively. of the matter is that if we reduce this salary we will run the risk of getting some man for Governor of Porto Rico who will not measure up to the high standard requisite for one who governs a people who are not Americans.

Mr. SMOOT. We have been told that, Mr. President, in connection with nearly every appropriation bill providing for positions generally, but the result has never been as predicted.

reported by the committee. [Putting the question.] By the sound the noes have it.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask for a division.

The question being put, on a division the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now recurs on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Now, Mr. President, I move to strike out

"$6,500" on page 48, line 18, and insert $6,000."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 48, line 18, it is proposed to strike out "$6,500" and insert "$6,000," so as to read:

Chief justice of the supreme court, $6,000.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, that is to make the salary of the chief justice of Porto Rico conform to the salary the United States pays to the chief justices of the supreme court in the Territories of Alaska and Hawaii.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, this amendment proposes to cut down the salary of the chief justice of Porto Rico $500. The population of Porto Rico is 1,200,000. The business before that court is very important, and it seems to me that is a very modest salary to be paid by the Porto Ricans for their chief justice. I do not believe in the effort to cut down judicial salaries. I will ask the chairman of the committee what is the present salary of the chief justice of Porto Rico? The committee has not raised his salary, has it?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Oh, no; the salary has not been raised.

Mr. JAMES. The bill provides the same salary he receives

Mr. LODGE. I think the language of the bill should be retained.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Utah.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. GRONNA. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the

The Secretary. On page 5, after line 3, it is proposed to insert the following:

That one year after the approval of this act and thereafter it shall be unlawful to import, manufacture, sell, or give away, or to expose for sale any intoxicating drink or drug: Provided, That the legislature may authorize and regulate importation, manufacture, and sale of said liquors and drugs for medicinal, sacramental, industrial, and scientific uses only. The penalty for violations of this provision with reference to intoxicants shall be a fine of not less than $25 for the first offense, and for second and subsequent offenses a fine of not less than $50 and imprisonment for not less than one month or more than one year.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. GRONNA obtained the floor.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President— The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Da-

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I had intended to give a full explanation of this amendment. I had hoped to be able to go into detail and show that in no country anywhere should prohibition be introduced more than in Porto Rico. However, I have been reminded of the fact that this amendment is not desired by those in favor of this bill, or, in other words, I have been told that the administration and the administration leaders are not in favor of this amendment. I shall take but a few minutes to explain the amendment, but I wanted to make it clear that, in my opinion, those who are opposing it are opposing it for the reason that it is not wanted by the administration and not because they are really opposed to prohibition in the island of Porto Rico.

Mr. President, before I proceed further I wish to have read at the desk a letter which was inserted in the Congressional RECORD at my request some days ago and which will be found on page 3139.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

Memorial of the International Reform Bureau for Porto Rico prohibition.

To the United States Senate and House of Representatives: Mr. SMOOT. We have been told that, Mr. President, in connection with nearly every appropriation bill providing for positions generally, but the result has never been as predicted. I shall not insist upon a yea-and-nay vote on the amendment, but I want a vote of the Senate upon it, and let the Senate decide it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Utah to the amendment. said to be lost to the insular government, exclusive of local licensefees, is given at $1,400,000, and the cost of the liquors to the people as only $1,614,612.35, leaving the liquor dealers only $214,612.35 from which to get the goods, rents, profits, taxes, and licenses. Everyone familiar with liquor statistics knows that the cost of liquors to the drinkers is at least ten times as large as the revenue, besides indirect costs as large for poverty, crime, impaired efficiency, and other by-products of the drink. The head master of the public school in Garrochales says, regarding three licensed shops in that community:

"I visited to-day the three licensed shops in that community:

"I visited to-day the three licensed shops in that place that are near my school and asked each of the men in charge about how much money he took in each week from the sale of alcoholic beverages. The man in the liquor shop directly opposite my school said that he took in about $40 a week. The man in the liquor shop a short distance to the east of my school said he took in about $40 a week. The owners of each shop pay a license fee of $7 every three months to the government tax collector."

It will be noted by a moment's work in division that in that community, supposed to be fairly representative, the cost to the people is forty-two times as much as the government revenue. But if the cost in the island at large is even ten times as much it will reach the figure which the local secretaries of the reform bureau accepted as the frequently expressed estimate of the moral leaders of the island, namely, $1,400,000.

As for the other figures of the International Reform Bureau criticized. "$7,000.000" in round numbers for "flour." used there as here

As for the other figures of the International Reform Bureau criticized, "$7,000,000" in round numbers for "flour," used there as here for cereals in general, and with perfect understanding on the part of everybody that it is not the only food, but "the staff of life," the round numbers given by the bureau's secretaries there, from the commonly received estimate of religious people, is substantially verified by the legislature's own figures, for when the cereals are segregated from the legislature's list of food the total amount is $7,505,147.

But the real issue is the revenue question, which is essentially the same in Porto Rico as in Louisiana or New Melxco, except that a majority of the Porto Rican drinkers, who really pay the revenue in buying the drinks that debauch them, are poorer and weaker than the drinking classes of the United States.

THE POVERTY ARGUMENT.

The arguments for prohibition in Porto Rico include all the arguments that have carried prohibition in Mississippi and Colorado and other prohibition States, and the additional arguments that have led nations not much inclined to enact prohibition in their most advanced commonwealths to prohibit liquor selling in islands under their control that are linhabited by native races of whom the major part are both poor and ignorant, living in one-room cabins, as do the rural three-fourths of the Porto Ricans—almost 900,000 out of 1,200,000. Gov. Arthur Yager, speaking at the Mohonk conference of these 900,000 agricultural laborers, is reported to have said: "This population is on the verge of starvation. If being underfed is slow starvation, there are many starving to death every year." It is admitted that the living conditions of these agriculturists have not improved under our occupation, notwithstanding there has been an improvement in industrial conditions. Gov. Yager says this is because there are too many babies, but the missionaries and native churches, that are unitedly asking for prohibition, say it is in large part because there are too many bottles. The people are too poor to afford liquors even if they were only a luxury and not a curse; and too weak to let them alone, especially the rum, when it is offered for sale. There is one place licensed to sell intoxicants for every 46 families. These are not all saloons in the American sense, but many of them general stores where the temptation to drink comes to those who make other purchases. These general stores are worse than saloons, in that they principals. These general stores where the temptation to drink comes to those who make other purchases. DOMINATION OF RUM IN PORTO RICO POLITICS TO BE PREVENTED.

There is a very special argument for prohibition in the nature of the bill itself. It proposes to give Territorial self-government to a people who until recently were under the Spanish Monarchy, and so have had less experience in self-government than the people of any Territorial government under our flag. Hawaii had been a Republic before it came to us, and had had many years of prohibition. When we gave it Territorial government the Senate refused to concur with the House in putting prohibition into the enabling act, and the result was that liquor dealers secured three seats out of nine in the Territorial senate, and from inside and outside dominated the island politics. And when Congress was again considering Hawaiian prohibition it was persuaded by the specious plea of "self-government" to submit the question to the Hawaiian people, and the liquor interests were able to manipulate the election in their own interest. In consequence the good citizens of Hawaii are now a third time asking Congress to give them prohibition.

Naturally, the Porto Rico Legislature asks to have prohibition left for local decision. But in this case, as in Hawaii, "home rule" would be-rum rule. And "self-government" means little with a people of whom a major part have proved they lack self-control in the presence of this subtile temptation. The very fact that the legislature accepted the absurd statistics we have exposed shows its unitness to handle this subject.

Porto Rico in having moral legislation put upon it by Congress would be treated no differently from other Territories more advanced, on which Congress has imposed in past years laws against polygamy, against prize fights, and against divorce colonies. "Territories are always helped by Congress in their first experiments in government. It should be remembered also that the Porto Rican people themselves have asked for this action in numerous and representative petitions of the missions, the Mas

THE REVENUE QUESTION.

All arguments against Porto Rico prohibition are, in the main, pleas to keep the liquor revenue. The insular government, according to figures furnished by Gov. Yager, derives an income of $1,392,446.31 from liquors, besides which there are municipal liquor taxes. But the words of Gladstone are always in order when a fear of embarrassment from the loss of liquor revenue is expressed: "Give me a sober people and I will take care of the revenue." Senators from prohibition States and from other States where many towns are "dry" are well aware that the loss of much larger liquor revenues has never embarrassed either local or State governments because the diversion of a vasity greater sum that had been spent in drink to honest trades has increased revenues from other forms of taxation, and prohibition has also decreased greatly the taxes caused by crime and pauperism. In these two ways prohibition has almost automatically taken care of the revenue adjustment, for which a full year is allowed in the amendment.

The United States should rid Porto Rico of the liquor traffic partly because much of it was placed there since and because of our occupa-

The peasants of Russia would not have banished vodka by their ownvote, but they rejoice in the blessings which prohibition has brought, which the chancellor of the exchequer says has more than offset the burden of war. Surely, in the presence of such a demonstration Congress should not hesitate to give the starving peasants of Porto Ricothe same boon.

What prohibition would do for San Juan and its cultivated Porto Ricans is pictured in recently published descriptions of what prohibition has done for Atlanta, Seattle, and Denver. Let it be remembered that the States of Georgia, Washington, and Colorado imposed prohibition on these cities despite the cry of "home rule" and "self-government," which those cities are now glad was overruled.

Respectfully submitted for the International Reform Bureau.

Wilden F. Crafts, Superintendent.

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 8, 1917.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I have been asked not to take up the time of the Senate unduly to discuss this important measure, and I have said that I shall not take up much time in my discussion of it. I only want to say that I have here hundreds of letters from patriotic women who have gone down to Porto Rico to make investigation of the conditions there. and these good women all ask that the Congress of the United States embody in this enabling act a provision for prohibition,

Mr. President, Porto Rico is a part of this great country, I take it that we have the welfare of those people and their interests as much at heart as we have those of the people of any other State or Territory,

An examination of the report signed by the present Governor of Porto Rico, and introduced by the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge], will show that this report is absolutely inconsistent. In the first place, it is argued that we must not give prohibition to Porto Rico, because they need the revenue. In the second place, it is argued that there is practically no liquor drank in the island of Porto Rico. They give a table, Mr. President, showing that in 1915-16, based upon a report taken from the World Almanac, the United States consumed 5.52 liters of alcohol per capita, while Porto Rico consumed only 2; that in the United States for the same period there was consumed 1.96 liters of wine, and in Porto Rico only one-half of 1 liter; that there was consumed in the United States for the same period 77.5 liters of beer, and that in the island of Porto Rico there was consumed only 1.22 liters. So I think it is not necessary, Mr. President, to go further into that argument, because the statement in the report condemns itself.

Dr. Crafts called attention, in the letter that has just been read, to the fact that this report shows that there is only $200,000 more expended for liquor than the revenue. Why, any man who knows anything about the liquor question knows that that is untrue. Any man who knows anything about the profits necessarily following the liquor traffic knows that it can not be

Mr. President, I have no more interest in this question than any other Senator, but I have been petitioned, as I said a moment ago, by hundreds of men and women living in Porto Rico calling my attention to the fact that we ought to embody in this bill a provision giving them prohibition.

I have said to the Senator who has this bill in charge that although I had intended to discuss this measure fully, I would yield to the request not to take up much time, and I shall not do so, but I do want a record vote on this amendment.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. GRONNA. Yes; I yield. Mr. SUTHERLAND. I should like to ask the Senator from North Dakota whether he has any means of knowing what the majority of the people of Porto Rico desire on this question?

Mr. GRONNA: Yes; I will say to the Senator that I have the means of knowing that. Every intelligent man or woman from Porto Rico with whom I have talked says they want prohibition.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Senator does not mean to say that he has talked with the majority of them?

Mr. GRONNA. Oh, no; I do not say that; but I have hundreds of letters on the subject, some of them here and some of them in my office, and they all ask for prohibition. I have peti-tions signed by, I think, thousands of them asking for prohibi-

Mr. SUTHERLAND. This is a self-governing community. What objection is there to letting the people of Porto Rico determine the question for themselves by a referencem?

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, if the Senator had done me the honor to remain in the Chamber while the letter from Dr. Crafts was read he would have observed that it was fully explained in that letter. I do not care to go into that subject again. It was fully explained in the letter, and Dr. Crafts has lived in the island. He has visited the island many times and lived there, and he knows the conditions, I will say to the Sen-

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I can not imagine, myself, how it is possible that a community that is capable of self-government, electing its own legislature, passing laws, and fitted to be admitted to citizenship in the United States is not in a condition where its people can be trusted to determine for themselves whether they want prohibition or something else.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, the position that the Senator takes is the same position that he took on the question with regard to prohibition for the District of Columbia, and I am not surprised that he takes that position now.

Mr. President, I shall not take any more time in the discussion of this important question; but, as I have said, I want a record vote upon it, and I suggest the absence of a quorum before the vote is taken.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum is suggested. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Mr. JAMES. I desire to announce that the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. Hughes] is absent on account of illness. The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-seven Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I am exceedingly regretful that I find myself against the proposition of my friend from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA]. I am very fond of him, and I believe he is prompted by good motives.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me in order that I may offer an amendment to the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Yes, sir. Mr. LODGE. I desire merely to offer it, so as to have it before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota, on line 11, after the word "year" and before the period, it is proposed to insert a colon and the following:

Provided, however. That this provision shall not take effect until a majority of the qualified electors of Porto Rico voting at the general election of July 16, 1917, vote in favor of adopting the same.

OFFENSES AGAINST THE GOVERNMENT.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to allow me to make a motion?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Certainly; I yield. Mr. OVERMAN. I move that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 8148, known as the neutrality bill. I stated the reason why it was important to have this done.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I think we ought to proceed with the Porto Rican bill and get through with it. We are now pretty nearly ready to take a vote, as I understand.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I understand that there is going to be a long debate on this question.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Well, let us see. Let us proceed with it. Mr. OVERMAN. I understand also that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. Underwood], who is quite sick, desires to be heard upon this question, and I feel compelled to go on with this matter. Here are these very important bills, the importance of which everybody recognizes, urged by every department of the Government, that never have been to the House of Representatives, and that unless passed on by the House will never become law. I ask the Senate to proceed with their consideration. I will assist the Senator from Colorado in taking up his bill at any time. It has passed the House, and all we have to do is to get it back into conference. He can get his bill through at this session. There is no trouble about that; but these bills must go to the House of Representatives if they are to become

I insist upon my motion, Mr. President. Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, the Senator from North Carolina is very encouraging in his words, but my past experience has shown that if it is displaced now I can not get this bill passed at this Congress. It was reported three months before the last Congress adjourned, and the result was that, after repeated efforts to get it up, the last session adjourned without getting it up. This year I have made no less than 15 requests for unanimous consent to consider it, and, as a matter of fact, we have not had any consideration of it until the last few hours. It seems to me that we ought to proceed with it now; so I hope the motion of the Senator from North Carolina will be voted down.

Mr. OVERMAN. I call for the yeas and nays on my motion. The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CATRON (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. Owen]. On account of his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. GALLINGER (when his name was called). with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN]. Not knowing how he would vote on this motion, I withhold my vote.

Mr. HARDING (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. Underwood]. I note his absence from the Chamber and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. REED (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from California [Mr. Phelan] and vote "yea."

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT], but I think that under the terms of that pair I have a right to vote upon this question. I therefore vote "yea."

Mr. SIMMONS (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] to the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] to the junior Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] and vote "yea."

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. Goff] to the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. Hughes] and vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have announced my pair with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. O'Gorman]; but under an agreement made with that Senator I feel privileged to vote on a question of this kind. I vote "yea."

Mr. JONES (after having voted in the affirmative). I wish to ask if the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. Swanson] has voted?

Bankhead

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not.

Mr. JONES. That Senator is absent on account of illness, and I have promised to take care of him for the day. I therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. HARDING. I transfer my general pair with the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. Underwood] to the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. Watson], and vote "yea."

Mr. CURTIS. I have a pair with the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. Hardwick], who is absent. I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina (after having voted in the affirmative). I voted inadvertently. I see that my pair, the senior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. Sterling], is not here. In his absence, I withdraw my vote.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have been requested to announce the absence of the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] on account of sickness. I make this announcement for the day.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I announce the absence of the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. Gore]. He is detained at his home through illness. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. JAMES. I desire to announce that the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. Hughes] is absent on account of illness, will let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce that the Senator from Vermont [Mr. Dillingham] is paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH].

The result was announced—yeas 36, nays 24, as follows:

in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S.

8148) to define and punish espionage.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I want to say for the information of the Senate, as I said a few days ago, that there are 14 of these bills. I have consolidated the 14 bills into one bill, and each bill is a chapter in the substitute. I therefore offer the matter which I send to the desk as a substitute for the bill under consideration. It includes all 14 bills, each one

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President-

Mr. OVERMAN. I yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I wish to ask the Senator from North Carolina, who has this measure in charge, whether he proposes to ask for action upon the entire body of the bills, so to speak?

Mr. OVERMAN. As one substitute.
Mr. BRANDEGEE. As one substitute; and there could be no separate votes on the different sections of the proposed sub-

Mr. OVERMAN. Just as the Senate desires. We may take it up by chapters, if the Senate desires.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I thought it would be well if we could understand the method we are to adopt.

Mr. OVERMAN. The bill is offered as a substitute, and it will be proceeded with by chapters.

Manifestly it is divisible. There is no Mr. GALLINGER.

question about that.

Mr. CUMMINS. May I ask the Senator from North Carolina, will we take a vote on the different chapters of the bill?

Mr. OVERMAN. It will be like any other great bill. Amendments can be made to a chapter, to strike out, or to strike out and insert.

Mr. CUMMINS. Precisely; but it will be impossible to take vote finally on any chapter?
Mr. OVERMAN. We will take a final vote on the whole substitute. A final vote will come on the substitute, and votes will be taken on amendments to each chapter. It is just like the consideration of any great bill.

Mr. CUMMINS. I only want to suggest to the Senator from North Carolina that there are a good many of the chapters which I think will provoke no opposition; at least so far as I am concerned they will not be opposed; but there is one question in one or two of them that will arouse, I think, very con-

Mr. OVERMAN. I recognize that, Mr. President. Mr. CUMMINS. I did not know but that the Senator from North Carolina would rather get the final action of the Senate upon those that are not seriously in dispute.

Mr. OVERMAN. I will suggest that the bills are consolidated in order to get them properly before the House of Representatives, so that it will have no trouble to pass on the whole number as one measure.

Mr. CUMMINS. I have no preference myself. I only made

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I appreciate the advantage of having the combined set of bills before the Senate in one bill, because we have voted to proceed to its consideration in that shape, and one vote will settle the matter; but, on the other hand, I simply suggest to the Senator that if there are certain of those bills which constitute separate chapters in this combined substitute to which Senators might be very much opposed it might lose their votes upon the entire combination of bills. A Senator might be so violently opposed to one chapter in the bill that he would be compelled to vote against the whole measure.

Mr. OVERMAN. If that situation should arise the action of the Senate will settle the question.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Then I understand the whole combined substitute is to be proceeded with and will be open for amend-

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. One chapter after another?

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. And no final vote is to be taken on the chapters until the entire matter has been concluded?

Mr. OVERMAN. Not until the consideration of the entire substitute has been concluded.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, just a moment. As I understand it, the substitute offered by the Senator from North Carolina contains all the bills as amended by the Judiciary Com-

Mr. OVERMAN. By the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. CUMMINS. And the committee has no amendments to offer to the substitute?

Mr. OVERMAN. It is a substitute for all of them. I will say if the Senator from Iowa prefers a bill considered in the Judiciary Committee unamended he could offer that as a substitute for one of the chapters.

Mr. CUMMINS. No; I am bound to say that the work of the Judiciary Committee has improved to a degree some of the bills which I have in mind. I really hope that the bills as they originally came in here will never make their appearance on the floor.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I wish to say to the Senator from North Carolina that I am not going to oppose any motion he makes as to the method for the consideration of this measure, but as it stands the parliamentary situation will be that if a Senator offers an amendment to the proposed substitute submitted by the Senator from North Carolina no other Senator can propose any amendment to that amendment, because it would be an amendment in the third degree.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Will the Senator from North Carolina yield to me for a moment?

Mr. OVERMAN. I yield. Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I wish to ask the Senator if it would meet with his objection if we took up the bill chapter by chapter? Each chapter constitutes a separate subject matter, I understand. I suggest that we take up a chapter and hear amendments upon it, and having disposed of any amendments upon a particular chapter we then vote upon that chapter, expressing our approval or disapproval of the chapter. In that way we will pass upon each one of the subjects as we go along, and if there is a chapter which meets with the opposition of the Senate it will go out and not be in the way of the final passage of the bill and provoke adverse action against the entire bill, as it would provoke if we handled the whole subject together. If the Senator does not object to that mode of procedure, it seems to me it would be easier for us

Mr. OVERMAN. That is what I suggested and what I propose to do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. . The Secretary will read the proposed substitute.

Mr. OVERMAN. Now, Mr. President, having made this bill the unfinished business, I promised the chairman of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads to yield temporarily to take up the Post Office appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the bill be temporarily laid aside. Is there objection?

Mr. JONES. For what purpose is the bill being laid aside? The PRESIDING OFFICER. For the consideration of the Post Office appropriation bill.

Mr. JONES. It seems to me when we get one matter up we had better finish it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I understand that the Post Office appropriation bill is not before the Senate.

Mr. OVERMAN. I ask unanimous consent to lay the unfinished business aside. If there is objection, of course, that ends it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. We can not lay the Post Office bill

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Just a moment. Do I understand the request is to informally lay aside the Post Office appropriation

Mr. BRANDEGEE. No.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina asks to temporarily lay this bill aside for the purpose of allowing the chairman of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads to call up the Post Office appropriation bill.

Mr. THOMAS. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made. The Secretary will read the substitute.

Mr. BRYAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 19410, the Post Office appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made to the request of the Senator from North Carolina for unanimous consent to lay aside the unfinished business.

Mr. OVERMAN. I wish to say to the Senator from Florida that having made this bill the unfinished business I shall have no trouble in getting it through now. The Post Office appropriation bill is pretty nearly finished. I am informed there are only two questions yet to be considered. I have no objection myself to temporarily laying aside the unfinished business and taking up the appropriation bill.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, before that is done I should like to address an inquiry to the Senator from North Carolina. I think it important in connection with the suggestion of the Senator from North Carolina to settle the parliamentary status of the bill reported by him. He states that it is in the nature of an amendment to some half dozen bills referred to his committee.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Seventeen bills.

Mr. PENROSE. Seventeen?
Mr. OVERMAN. A substitute for the whole number.
Mr. PENROSE. We certainly can not amend 17 bills at Therefore this bill was, on first impression, reported as an amendment, and the Senator from Connecticut very properly called attention to the fact that by that method of reporting it only one other amendment is in order to what is really a new bill reported from the committee.

Mr. OVERMAN. Not at all.
Mr. PENROSE. It is not an amendment?
Mr. OVERMAN. It is in the nature of a substitute.
Mr. PENROSE. It is a new bill reported from the committee?

Mr. OVERMAN. No; it is not. I will try to explain it to the Senator. Chapter 1 is Senate bill 8148, the entire bill. If you turn over to chapter 2, that is Senate bill 1613 on the calendar, reported favorably.

Mr. PENROSE. That all may be, but I do not think there is any precedent in the long history of this body for amending 17 bills all at once.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator from Pennsylvania will indulge the Chair, he will state the parliamentary situation is that the Senate ordered Senate bill 8148 to be taken up.

Then the Senator from North Carolina offered as a substitute for that bill a measure which the Secretary was proceeding to read as an amendment to the one single bill. Mr. PENROSE. I did not understand that.

Mr. THOMAS. I withdraw my objection.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The objection has been withdrawn. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from North Carolina for unanimous consent to lay temporarily aside Senate bill 8148?

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I am not going to interpose an objection now, but hereafter I think I shall do what I can to prevent the unwarranted prodigality of which the Senate is guilty by jumping from one measure to another. have been through with the Porto Rican bill by this time if that measure had been proceeded with in regular order.

not going to object now, but I am going to do so hereafter if this waste of time is persisted in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the bill is temporarily laid aside.

Mr. BRYAN. I understood the Senator from North Carolina coupled with that a request that the Post Office bill be taken up. Mr. BORAH. That could not be coupled with it.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. BRYAN. I ask unanimous consent to proceed to the consideration of the Post Office appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?
There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 19410) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the pending amendment.

The Secretary. Amendment proposed by Mr. Smoot: On page 37 insert a new section, to read as follows:

SEC. 3. That to provide, during the fiscal year 1918, for increased compensation at the rate of 15 per cent per annum to employees who receive salaries at a rate per annum of $480 or less, and for increased compensation at the rate of 10 per cent per annum to employees who receive salaries at a rate of more than $480 per annum and not exceeding $1,000 per annum, so much as may be necessary is appropriated: Provided, That this section shall only apply to employees who are appropriated for in the act specifically and under lump sums or whose employment is authorized herein: Provided further, That detailed reports shall be submitted to Congress on the first day of the next session showing the number of persons, the grades or character of positions, the original rates of compensation, and the increased rates of compensation provided for herein.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, this is the amendment that was under consideration when the bill was laid aside. It was laid aside for the purpose of ascertaining whether any injustice would be done employees in the different departments if the Senate failed to put the Smoot amendment on this bill, inasmuch as it had been placed upon some other appropriation bills.

Mr. President, there is a policy of promotion followed in the Post Office Department more than in any other department. In addition to that, there is a requirement of law that 75 per cent of the clerks in the post offices shall be automatically promoted. In view of that, the Postmaster General opposed before the House committee the plan of increasing the salaries of clerks. He opposed it, as I understand, upon this bill, and when the bill was in committee there was no request from the Post Office Department for the Smoot amendment. But since that amendment has been offered the Postmaster General has said that the plan worked out by the department is much more satisfactory to him and to the men than the so-called Smoot amendment.

Therefore, I raise the point of order, Mr. President, that the appropriation carried in the amendment is not estimated for, nor has the amendment been reported by a standing committee. Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator withhold the point of order for a moment?

Mr. BRYAN. I will.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, in answer to what the Senator from Florida has just stated I wish to say that the amendment I offered affects only employees who are receiving $1,000 and less. The promotion spoken of by the Senator principally affects clerks who are receiving more than $1,000 per annum. What we want to do and what the Senate has voted in the past on all the other appropriation bills that have come before it this session is to take care of the employees receiving less than $1,000 per annum.

There is no question in the mind of any Senator but that an employee receiving less than $1,000 under conditions existing to-day ought to receive the increase as provided in my amend-

Mr. BRYAN. May I ask the Senator a question?
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. SMOOT. I do.

Mr. BRYAN. Has the Senator estimated what the increase will be under his amendment?

Mr. SMOOT. On the Post Office appropriation bill?

Mr. BRYAN. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. No. I will state to the Senator that in the discussion of the amendment on Saturday I understood the Senator would ask the Postmaster General what the increase would amount to.

Mr. BRYAN. He says it would amount to $1,600,000.

Mr. SMOOT. I have the estimated amount at my office, and I could ascertain what it is; but, I will say to the Senator, it is over a million dollars.

Mr. BRYAN. One million six hundred thousand dollars. Let me state that in this bill as recommended by the department the increase of salaries is $2,000,000.

Mr. SMOOT. The trouble is we are increasing the salaries of clerks, and we do not take care of the most of those provided for in the amendment offered by me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Utah indulge the Chair for a moment? Does the Senator from Florida insist on his point of order?

Mr. BRYAN. The Senator from Utah asked me to with-

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to appeal to the Senator not to make a point of order against this amendment. Every appropriation bill that has come to this body and has been passed upon has been amended to carry this very provision. If the Senate does not put this amendment on the bill, nothing will be in conit can not be considered—and whatever is decided upon by the conferees on the other appropriation bills ought to be upon this bill, in fair justice to the men and women who are receiving salaries of $240, $480, $360, and $600 and $720 and $840. The statute fixed many of the salaries and there is no way provided for their promotion.

I will admit that the promotion applies to all clerks from $1,000 and above, but those are not the people who are suffering. My amendment covers those who are in need of this increase, and it only provides for the coming year. It does not propose an annual payment hereafter.

Mr. BRYAN. May I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.
Mr. BRYAN. The Postmaster General says it will be $1,600,000. In the case of the clerks and carriers, it will be seen that after serving one year they receive an advance of salary equal to 12½ per cent.

Mr. SMOOT. That is only one class of clerks, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. BRYAN. No; the Postmaster General says that a further advance equal to 11.11 per cent after the second year's service, and an advance of 10 per cent after the third year's service. The salaries of the assistant postmasters, of whom the table shows there are 24 at $800, 28 at $900, and 310 at $1,000, will receive another $100, an increase greater than the Senator provides in his amendment, and those at $1,000 a year receive as much as the Senator provides for.

Mr. SMOOT. That applies to clerks, and there are so very few clerks receiving $800 and $900 in the department, it amounts to very little. But the Senator knows that every laboring man and every laboring woman and every messenger and every assistant messenger and every charwoman and every man who is receiving $600 and $720 as an assistant laborer is not affected in any way by the promotion provided for in this bill or in the It is that class of people I am pleading for, and present law. it is only an increase for the year. We are not enacting a provision here that will apply to more than the year.

Mr. STONE. I should like to ask the Senator a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I yield to the Senator. Mr. STONE. Is the increase of salary for the low-paid clerks or employees under $1,000 or under $800, running on down to $240, provided for only in the bills that make appropriations for a particular department?

Mr. SMOOT. If this bill passes without this amendment there is no advance whatever, I will say to the Senator. Another thing, I believe the Senator from Florida is too just a man, knowing that every other appropriation bill passed the Senate at this session provides the increase for these lowsalaried people, not to allow it to go upon this bill.

Mr. STONE. I was not seeking to debate the merits of the question. I was trying to get at the facts. This is the Post Office appropriation bill. Suppose we come to appropriate for some other department, will it be necessary to carry the same provision into that bill?

Mr. SMOOT. It will, I will say to the Senator that the legislative, executive, and judicial bill provides generally for the other departments outside of the Department of Agriculture, and that is provided for in the Agricultural appropriation bill.

Mr. STONE. I was laboring under the impression that the amendment put on at the instance of the Senator on the legislative bill related to employees in all the departments.

Mr. SMOOT. No; it only related to the employees provided for in that bill. Since then, I want to say to the Senator, the Indian appropriation bill has passed, and the same aniendment was adopted on that bill; the Agricultural appropriation bill was passed, and that amendment was incorporated upon that bill. The legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill was passed, and it was first incorporated on that bill; the District of Columbia appropriation bill was passed, and the same thing applies to that bill. This bill comes from the House without any provision for an increase, just the same as the Indian appropriation bill, the same as the District of Columbia appropriation bill, but amendments were placed upon the latter

Mr. STONE. I think I understand. I wish to ask further, take the Library of Congress, for example or some rather outside department or semidepartment of the Government or bureau of the Government, how are they provided for?

Mr. SMOOT. They are provided for in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, and they receive their increase by the amendment that was adopted upon that bill. The Post Office appropriation bill provides for the salaries of the employees of the Post Office Department.

Mr. STONE. Is this the last big department bill?
Mr. SMOOT. There will be another bill that carries appropriations for employees, and that is the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. STONE. But this is the last distinctively departmental bill?

Mr. SMOOT. This is the last one.

Mr. STONE. And this provision went into all the others? Mr. SMOOT. Every one of them, I will say to the Senator. I hope the Senator from Florida will not insist upon his point of order.

Another thing, I will say to the Senator. Let it be adopted and let it go to conference, and if there is any question arises that we do not know of now let it go out; and if we do not agree to the provision in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill or the other bills carrying the same provision, then it can go out and no one will be hurt. But it would be manifestly unfair, Mr. President, to provide for the employees of every other department and leave it out of this appropriation bill and not provide for the men receiving the same sal-aries, doing just as much work as the work in any other department, they receiving the 10 and 15 per cent and the employees in the Post Office Department not receiving it. If it is applied to the clerks whose regular promotion is provided for here. I should then see reason for its not being incorporated in this bill.

I have said what I wanted to, and I leave the question of the point of order entirely to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, it would be a strange thing if the Post Office Department did not desire to have its employees treated as the employees of other departments. There is a different system in vogue in the Post Office Department from that which usually obtains in the other departments. The law requires promotion.
Mr. GALLINGER.

Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. BRYAN. I yield. Mr. GALLINGER. Does the Senator think that the Post Office Department will be treating its clerks as well as other departments if the 15 per cent or 10 per cent increase is granted to messengers and assistant messengers and watchmen in all the other departments and not in the Post Office Department? The Postmaster General has not increased those rates of compensation.

Mr. BRYAN. I am coming to that before I conclude.

Mr. GALLINGER. At least I so understand it.

Mr. BRYAN. First, I want to say this: The Senator from Utah offers the same amendment that went on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill. In this bill there are clerks at $800 who are required by law next year to be paid $900; there are clerks in this bill receiving $900 who under this bill are required to receive $1,000 a year; there are clerks in this bill now receiving $1,000 who by law are required to be paid $1,100 next year. The increases amount to over $2,000,000.

The Senator from Utah speaks of clerks and employees receiving less than $480, and says that they are the people we ought to take care of. They ought to be taken care of, if they are not treated as well as the others, I concede that; but let You can assume something that may not be a fact. us see. The following letter was written to the chairman of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads:

Receipt is acknowledged of your letter of the 6th instant, in which you direct attention to an amendment adopted by the Senate to the legislative, executive, and judicial bill, which you anticipate will be offered for inclusion in the Post Office appropriation bill, and inquire what additional expense would be entailed by the enactment of this amendment

The amendment would provide for increased compensation at the rate of 15 per cent per annum to employees who receive salaries at a rate per annum of $480 or less and for increased compensation at the rate of 10 per cent per annum to employees who receive salaries at a rate of more than $480 per annum and not exceeding $1,000 per annum.

There are no employees in post offices whose salaries are $480 or less per annum.

Mr. SMOOT. Then it would not cost anything.

What is the use of it? Mr. BRYAN.

Mr. SMOOT.

Let it go on.

The following statement shows the number Mr. BRYAN. of employees of the different classes at salaries from $720 to $1,000 per annum. As I stated the other day, the $720 class are the lowest in the Post Office Department. The Postmaster General takes the position that if a man is not worth $60 a month he is not worth his room in that department. They do not have boys as they have in the other departments. Here he has them rated at $720, $780, $800, $840, $900, and $1,000.

Of the total of 17,174 employees shown in the table above, 14,517 (clerks and carriers) receive, under the act of March 2, 1907, promotions of $100 each year on the basis of faithfulness and efficiency until they reach the maximum grades of $1,100 and $1,200 per annum, respectively, at first and second class post offices.

He has to promote 75 per cent of those clerks if they remain in

In the case of the clerks and carriers it will be seen that after serving one year they receive an advance of salary equal to 12½ per cent; a further advance equal to 11.11 per cent after the second year's service, and an advance of 10 per cent after the third year's service.

That would be $1,600,000. The advance granted by the House and in the Senate committee by this bill is a greater increase of salary than that proposed by the Senator. The Senator from Utah believes that he has a better method of promotion than the Post Office Department have and than the law enacted by Congress provides.

Of course, if the Senate is going to take $800 and $900 and $1,000 clerks and have their salaries increased 10 per cent, then you are doing what? You are increasing under this bill without this amendment each one of their salaries $100 apiece. Then on top of it you add another 10 per cent to what they have been receiving in that department as a whole, an average of more than a thousand dollars a year.

If the Senator wants anything to go into conference, he ought to limit his amendment to those receiving less than $800, and he ought to limit it to those who work eight hours a day, because if you do not do that you will have men working sometimes two and three hours a day whose salaries will be doubled. All sorts of inequalities and injustices will be perpetrated in the rural-carrier service. I submit it shows a very great degree of generosity that in the bill itself we take every man who gets $800 or $900 or $1,000 and give him a greater increase than is provided for in the Smoot amendment. Then we add to that a provision giving him another increase of 10 per cent. I have not any doubt at all that the employees of the Postal Service have been treated more generously than they would have been treated under the Smoot amendment. Neither have I any doubt that if this bill carrying that increase is passed in its present shape they will be more favorably treated than are any other employees in any other departments of the Government.

If the Senator wants to limit this to classes of employees receiving under $720, I am willing to let the matter go to conference; but I am not willing to let the matter go to conference; but I am not willing to let the question go to conference of increasing salaries here 20 or 30 per cent, for that is what his proposition amounts to. Under this bill a man receiving $800 to-day will get another $100, making $900; and if the Smoot amendment is adopted he will get $80 more.

Mr. STONE. May I ask the Senator from Florida a question?

Mr. BRYAN. Certainly. Mr. STONE. I ought to have enough information on this subject to make it unnecessary to propound the question I shall propound to the Senator; but I do not have. Therefore, I ask the Senator how the clerks and other employees in the city post offices are paid?

Mr. BRYAN. I only know from this statement and from the hearings given to the representatives of the departments upon the legislative bill, when they asked us not to let it apply upon that bill. The Postmaster General says there are no employees in that department whose salaries are $480 or less.

Mr. STONE. At any rate, do we appropriate in this bill for the clerks in the city post offices?

Mr. BRYAN. Undoubtedly we do; on page 11 those appropriations are found.

Mr. GALLINGER. Do I understand the Senator from Florida to say there are none receiving less than $800?

The Postmaster General says there are none Mr. BRYAN. receiving less than $480, but he says there are some who are receiving $720. Then, if they have been working for that salary this year, for the next year they will automatically receive $100 more. In this bill is a provision to give promotions to all of them in the first-class post offices.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, that is limited. Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, with the permission of the Senator from Florida, I will offer a substitute to be read for the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. Smoot]. Then it can be considered. I will withdraw it if there is special objection to it. I hope the Senator from Florida will pay attention to the proposed substitute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment in the nature of a substitute proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire will be stated.

The Secretary. In lieu of the amendment proposed by Mr. Smoot it is proposed to insert:

For increased compensation at the rate of 10 per cent per annum to employees who receive salaries at a rate of $720 per annum and not exceeding $1,000 per annum, so much as may be necessary is appropriated. Provided, That this section shall only apply to employees who are appropriated for in the act specifically and under lump sums or whose employment is authorized herein: Provided further, That detailed reports shall be submitted to Congress on the first day of the next session, showing the number of persons, the grades or character of positions, the original rates of compensation, and the increased rates of compensation provided for herein: Provided further, That the increases shall not apply to employees now receiving less than $1.000 who, under the terms of the bill, are to be promoted to higher salaries.

Mr. BRYAN. I suggest to the Senator from New Hampshire that he leave out the words "under the terms of the bill." should be "by law."

Mr. GALLINGER. Very well. I ask that the words "under the terms of the bill" be stricken out.

Mr. BRYAN. "By law" would cover it.

Mr. BRYAN. "By law" would cover it. Mr. SMOOT. Before the Senator from New Hampshire proposes his amendment, I desire to make a short statement.

Mr. President, the Senator from Florida speaks of the promotions of certain clerks. There will be no promotions under the appropriations in the pending bill. Those clerks have got to work a full year before a promotion is given to them, and no matter what they are now receiving, no promotion will apply until the fiscal year 1918 and paid from appropriation made in the pending bill.

Mr. BRYAN. These clerks get promotions at the end of each year's service.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, it is regular after the fiscal year ends; but we are appropriating in this bill to pay the salaries of employees from July 1, 1917, to June 30, 1918.

Mr. BRYAN. Does the Senator know that these promotions are made only at the end of the fiscal year?

Mr. SMOOT. That is what I am saying. Mr. BRYAN. The Senator is mistaken about that. It makes no difference when an employee enters the service, the promotion is made at the end of his year's service. The fiscal year has nothing to do with it.

Mr. SMOOT. But no money could be paid out of this appropriation until after June 30, 1917. There is no way of taking one dollar out of this appropriation to pay any employee of the Government until after that date.

Mr. BRYAN. No; but, on the other hand, if there is a man working to-day at $800 a year and his new year begins to-morrow, regardless of this bill or any other bill, he then begins to draw an additional hundred dollars for the next year.

repeat, the fiscal year has nothing to do with it.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I am only speaking of the bill which we now have under consideration. The Senator from Florida knows that not one single dollar can be paid out of the appropriation we now have under consideration-and the amendment only applies to the pending bill—until after June 30, 1917.

Mr. President, reference has been made to the promotion of certain employees, but they will never get the promotion unless they have earned it. If a man has earned his promotion from a salary of $800 to a salary of $900 per annum, and the other employees in all of the other departments of the Government get an increase of 10 per cent on a $900 salary, and there is a man who has earned a promotion, even if he secured the increase by promotion, there can be no other conclusion than that if the amendment which I have offered to this bill is not adopted there will be a discrimination against the employees of the Post Office Department. I care not how you put it or from what angle you view it, there will be a discrimination. Under the law it is provided that as to the clerks of the first-class post offices who are getting a salary of $800 or $900, only 75 per cent of them can be promoted, though the House provided that they all should be promoted; but the Senate has amended the bill so as to provide for the promotion of only 75 per cent of

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, does the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah apply to the postal clerks all over the United States?

Mr. SMOOT. It applies to every employee provided for in this bill.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Will it apply to the mail carriers as well? Mr. SMOOT. It will apply to them where they are receiving less salary than $1,000.

The object of the amendment, Mr. President, is to afford temorary relief to employees of the Government of the United States receiving salaries of less than $1,000.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Does the Senator from Utah know how much it will amount to?

Mr. SMOOT. The Postmaster General states that the increase as provided for in my amendment will cost $1,600,000.

Mr. VARDAMAN. We can save two-thirds of that by abandoning the pneumatic tubes. I do not see why we should not adopt the amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. Neither do I. I can not, for the life of me, see why we should not adopt it. I say now to the Senate that if we do not adopt it the employees of the Post Office Department will be discriminated against, as compared with the employees of every other department of the Government.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah pardon an interruption?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KIRBY in the chair). Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. CLAPP. Under the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, as I understand, if an employee to-day is getting $700, the increase provided for in that bill applies to him?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. CLAPP. On the basis of a $700 salary? Mr. SMOOT. And he gets 10 per cent increases And he gets 10 per cent increase.

Mr. CLAPP. If to-morrow for any reason that clerk is granted a promotion—it is so called, though that is a misnomer, of course-an $800 salary, then he gets the increase provided for as to an $800 salary?

Mr. SMOOT. There is no doubt about it.

Mr. CLAPP. And it does discriminate against these other employees not to give them the same increase by provision of law as applied to their salaries which is given to the clerks under the legislative bill, as applied to their salaries, when their salaries are raised. It seems to me the matter is too plain to admit of argument.

Mr. WEEKS. May I call the attention of the Senator from Utah to this difference? As to the employees to whom this increase may be given, there is a classification act which applies to most post-office employees, and those who enter the service at $800 a year are the next year promoted automatically to $900 and the next year to $1,000. There is less reason for applying this increase to those employees than there is for applying it to the employees who are not in the classified list, such as laborers, charwomen, and others of that class. The Senator would then be covering the same ground practically that is covered in other appropriation bills by doing justice to these employees

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the object that I had in introducing the amendment was to provide a temporary increased salary, only covering the one year, to all Government employees receiving less than $1,000 per annum, based upon the fact that the cost of living is exceedingly high. It is almost impossible for a man to keep his family from-I will not say starvation, but I will say from want, on a salary of $800 under the conditions which exist to-day; and the reason would apply no matter whether the employees are in the classified service or not.

As the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Clapp] well says, if there are clerks now in the other departments who are promoted today or next week, or at any time before June 30 of this year, when the fiscal year begins they would receive their increase if their promotion did not grant them a salary of over $1,000 per annum. If the amendment is not adopted, then there will be that discrimination against the employees of the Post Office Department.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, the Senator will recall that when this matter was under consideration during the time when the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill was before the Senate, I advocated that the increase in salary should be made immediately effective.

Mr. SMOOT. I remember that well.
Mr. WEEKS. That is what I thought should be done at that time. Now, any employee in the classified service of the Post Office Department who is getting $800 a year is going to be promoted by the time this bill will take effect to at least $900, and those who are now receiving $900 will be promoted automatically to $1,000; so that, as a matter of fact, the only employees that this amendment will affect in the classified service will be those who have entered the service within a year. It seems to me that they are in a different position from the employees who are getting, as laborers in the post office are, from $620 to $840 a year, or charwomen or other employees of that class who are not being promoted and never can be promoted, because they are not on the classified list.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Florida [Mr. Bryan] said that there was no employee in the Post Office Department receiving less than $720 per annum. There are charwomen in the Post Office Department.

Mr. BRYAN. How long do they work a day?

Mr. SMOOT. I can not tell how long they work. Some of them work the full eight hours and some of them do not. The Mr. SMOOT. Senator shakes his head-

Mr. BRYAN. If the Senator will put in his amendment a provision that it shall only apply to those who work eight hours a day it will not increase the salary of a single one of them.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not know that there are any Government employees, so far as that is concerned, who actually work eight

Mr. BRYAN. They do not; and so I say to the Senator that if he will put in his amendment a provision that it shall only apply to those who work eight hours a day it will not do any of them any good. The Postmaster General says that, as a rule, they work 7 hours and 30 minutes in the general Postal Service and in the Railway Mall Service 6 hours and 40 minutes.

The Senator speaks of charwomen. The Senator himself, as I recollect, thought they were pretty well paid, because their work only took up an hour or so a day. Under the amendment of the Senator from Utah, which would increase for the second time employees provided for by this bill, the rural carriers, who are pretty highly paid men now, on the short routes, and who are paid on a basis prescribed by law—a basis of a standard route of 24 miles—if their pay happens to be $1,000 or less would receive $100 in addition, when sometimes it does not take them an hour a day to do their work.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, if I have been informed correctly, I think that the rural carriers are the most poorly paid men in the Post Office Department. There has been more of what I consider just complaint on account of the salaries in that service than in any other service in the department.

Mr. BRYAN. I am very much surprised to hear the Senator say that. The Post Office Department informed us that men get out of the Railway Mail Service and out of the post offices as clerks and resign as postmasters in order to become rural Through transfer and in almost every other possible carriers. way they endeavor to get that position.

Mr. SMOOT. That may be the case in some special locations, but I will tell the Senator it is not the case in the West.

Mr. BRYAN. Against the amendment of the Senator in its present form I shall raise the point of order, and I understand the Senator concedes it to be good; but if the Senator wants to offer an amendment applying to those who do not receive automatic promotions below the grade of $800, I will let it go to conference, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. SMOOT. I know that I am absolutely in the power of the Senator. He can make a point of order against the amend-ment and it will go out. So I will accept that amendment and add such a provision to my amendment.

Mr. BRYAN. The Senator can draw the amendment and in the meantime we can pass on to other amendments.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I withdraw my proposed substitute.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, have all the committee amendments been disposed of?

Mr. BRYAN. No; there are some which have been passed

On page 4 there is an amendment which will require a twothirds vote of the Senate to put it in the bill. It is the amendment which provides for a reduction in postage upon certain first-class matter and for an increase of postage upon secondclass mail matter. I gave notice on Saturday

The VICE PRESIDENT. That amendment went out on a point of order.

Mr. BRYAN. It went out on a point of order, but I gave notice on Saturday for the committee that I would offer it again, and gave notice of a motion to suspend the rules. realize that it will take a two-thirds vote of the Senate to do that. I desire to say in advocacy of the amendment—
Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, before the Senator takes that matter up, will be permit me to suggest the absence of a quorum, so that we may have a full attendance on this important matter?

Mr. BRYAN. Very well.
Mr. HITCHCOCK. I suggest the absence of a quorum.
The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll. The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Gallinger Ashurst Bankhead Borah McLean Martin, Va. Martine, N. J. Sherman Shields Simmons Gronna Harding Hitchcock Smith, Ga. Smoot Stone Brady Myers Nelson Brandegee Husting James Johnson, Me. Johnson, S. Dak. Oliver Bryan Catron Overman Thomas Clapp Clark Culberson Cummins Curtis Fernald Fletcher Thompson Vardaman Jones Penrose Kenyon Kirby Lea, Tenn. Lee, Md. McCumber Poindexter Ransdell Reed Shafroth Sheppard Wadsworth Warren Weeks Weeks Williams

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-five Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I offer the following as an amendment to the amendment heretofore offered by me and under consideration a few moments ago.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The Secretary. At the end of the amendment heretofore offered by Mr. Smoot it is proposed to add the following words:

Provided further, That the increase shall not apply to employees in the classified service now receiving salaries at the rate of $800 or more per annum.

Mr. BRYAN. I accept that amendment. The VICE PRESIDENT. The modified amendment of the Senator from Utah is, without objection, adopted.

The question now recurs on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. BRYAN. I ask that the amendment on page 4, to which I referred a moment ago, may be considered as pending. desire to take a few moments of the time of the Senate in discussing it. As I have said, it will require a two-thirds vote of the Senate to waive the rule and allow this amendment to go on the bill, and I do not know whether or not that can be done.

For many years the Post Office Department and the Congress have been in this position: There have been funds enough collected from the postage on first-class mail matter at 2 cents an ounce to justify a reduction to 1-cent postage upon that class of mail matter. Three-fourths of the earnings of the Post Office Department are derived from letter postage. That has been swallowed up by the very great deficit growing out of the rate on second-class mail matter. The cost of carrying second-class mail matter to the Government in 1916 was $99,444,324, or nearly $100,000,000, for which service the Government received only $11,383,530.

Senators are familiar with the fact that all over the country there is an agitation in favor of a reduction in the rate for the carriage of letter mail. It is justified. They say, "Why should we contribute over $250,000,000? Why should you take out of the pockets of the people who mail letters $99,000,000 to make up for the loss that accrues because of the carriage of newspapers and magazines at a loss?"

The newspapers and the magazines say that but for their business there would not be so many letters written. That is their argument; but, Mr. President, the committee feel that the time has come when letter postage ought to be reduced to 1 cent throughout the country. However, they have taken only this step at this time, to reduce it on drop letters, including letters upon the rural routes; and they have not recommended an increase upon second-class mail matter that will make that rate self-sustaining. It will only add $5,000,000 to the revenue of the Government. There will still be a deficit, because of the very small rate that newspapers and magazines enjoy, of over $75,000,000 a year. In other words, when the total amount of increase recommended by this committee is adopted and in effect it will only raise an additional amount of $11,383,000, and that divided over two years. Now, will $5,600,000 for the next fiscal year and $5,600,000 for the succeeding year ruin all these newspapers and magazines in the United States? That is what is claimed in the telegrams that are flooding the Capitol to-day.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. BRYAN. Certainly.

Mr. OVERMAN. Suppose we should suspend the rules; could we separate, in voting upon them, the proposition as to whether we would increase the rate on newspapers and magazines and the proposition as to whether we would grant 1-cent letter postage? Could those be made separate propositions?

Of course, in a parliamentary sense the Senate Mr. BRYAN. can do that. The Senate can adopt 1-cent letter postage anyhow, and refuse to raise the rates upon newspapers and magazines but, for one, I would be opposed to that. It seems to me you can not expect to conduct the Post Office Department at a very great loss. A small deficit does not amount to much. In my judgment, there ought not to be a surplus; it ought not to be a money-making concern. On the other hand, I do not think we would be justified in deliberately creating a deficit of twenty to twenty-six million dollars by reducing the rate on first-class mail matter.

Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question. We are hard put now in the business of raising revenue to run the Government. We are taxing the people enormously already; we are proposing to increase the taxes to raise an aggregate of several hundreds of millions of dollars, and we are also about to provide for the issuing of two or three hundred millions of bonds to meet the vast increase in our expenditures. Does the Senator really think that now, in this emergency, in this situation, it is a hardship to require people who are sending social letters or business letters to contribute one cent on each letter to the maintenance of the Government? Would it not be very well to continue this tax and save this amount of money, instead of taking 1 cent off of people who have occasion to send letters? I have heard no complaint, so far as that is concerned, that our letter postage is burdensome.

Mr. BRYAN. There has been complaint for years. Well, it has not reached my ears.

Mr. BRYAN. Of course, it is not a very heavy tax on any individual or upon any concern, perhaps. It may be that you could justify the continuance of the tax upon the theory outlined by the Senator from Missouri; but if a tax of 2 cents an ounce is not too much burden to lay upon a letter writer, a tax of 1 cent a pound is not a very heavy tax to lay upon newspapers and magazines. If this question is divided, I shall turn and ask the Senator, Why should not these people who are receiving an annual subsidy from this Government of $100,000,000 contribute $5,000,000 this year and $5,000,000 the next year? Mr. JAMES. Mr. President-

Mr. STONE. I answer in this way: If we could differentiate between the legitimate newspapers and these muck-raking magazines, which contain when at their best, generally speakingthere are most honorable exceptions, of course, but generally speaking—a lot of trashy stuff, and one-half of the matter within the covers made up of advertisements, from which they get, I am told, in many instances more than $1,000 a page

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, some of them get $5,000 a page per issue.

Yes: per issue. If we could differentiate, I would be willing to put an increased tax upon these magazines; but I am not willing now, or at least my judgment now is against imposing an extra tax in the form of additional postage upon newspapers, when paper, for some reason or other, has been advanced abnormally.

Mr. BRYAN. Does the Senator understand that the free-in-county privilege still remains untouched by this amendment? Mr. STONE. No; I do not know anything about that.

Well, I will tell the Senator. Every newspaper Mr. BRYAN. in this country pays nothing for the distribution of the mail within the county of publication, Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President-

Mr. BRYAN. It is free in the county. Now, the Senator speaks of the cost of print paper. Here is a magazine weighing 4 pounds and 14 ounces, practically 5 pounds. [Exhibiting magazine.] The Government gets 5 cents for carrying that magazine any distance in this country. It costs the Government 8 cents a pound to carry it. It costs it 40 cents, and it gets 5 cents. Here is this magazine weighing 5 pounds. Government lost on this issue of this magazine $3,686. magazine made out of its advertisements $31,800.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I should like to ask my colleague whether the proposed increase applies to all newspapers and magazines, or whether it applies only to a certain class of newspapers? For instance, I have before me a statement to the effect that the rider exempts newspapers from the proposed advance, but puts the burden on agricultural, educational, and religious periodicals and magazines

Oh, of course it applies to all periodicals alike.

Mr. FLETCHER. And newspapers?

Mr. BRYAN. Newspapers and magazines and everything There are newspaper concerns in this country getting circulation at an expense to this Government in the aggregate of nearly $100,000,000, less $11,000,000—$88,000,000 per annum. That is what it costs the Government.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, has the Senator any figures that would show the loss to the Government, for instance, of the distribution of the Saturday Evening Post?

Mr. BRYAN. I have some figures on that. The Saturday Evening Post enjoys a subsidy, according to this statement prepared by the One-Cent Letter League or Association—and it is not far wrong, I will say; they got their figures from the Post Office Department—of $3,640,000.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is, they make a profit—

Mr. BRYAN. That is what it costs the Government to distribute their mail above what the Government gets out of it. Mr. GALLINGER. It costs over $3,000,000 to the Government to distribute that one publication?

Mr. BRYAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. CLARK. How much does the Government get?
Mr. BRYAN. The Government gets $520,000. It costs the Government $4,160,000.
Mr. FLETCHER. Every year?

Mr. BRYAN. Every year; yes, sir. Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. BRYAN. I do. Mr. TOWNSEND. In connection with the suggestion that has been made about the increased cost of paper, I should like to remind the Senator of something which he already knows, but which was brought to my attention about five minutes ago, when I was called out of the Chamber to speak with a business man to discuss the increased cost of paper. asked him if he was paying more for his advertisements on account of that increase, and he said he was.

Mr. BRYAN. Why, of course. Mr. TOWNSEND. And that many business men were being charged more for advertisements because of this increase. know that an increase has occurred in the price of paper, but I also know that this condition is temporary and that normal conditions will probably soon return.

Mr. BRYAN. Of course they do it. Now, the argument is made—there always will be some argument or excuse against the increase of the rate

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President-Mr. BRYAN. Just a moment. They say the main reason why you can not do it now is because of the advance subscriptions for one, two, and three years; and the gentleman who wrote the article that my colleague [Mr. Fletcher] has on his desk says that in some instances they have advance-paid subscriptions for 10 years, and it would be an uprooting of vested rights for Congress to legislate until all these 10-year subscriptions run out. That will be the case always. Before print paper was advanced in price the same opposition, from the same sources, as bitter and as strong and as powerful as this opposition, manifested itself. It has been manifested in every Congress since I have been here. The first time I walked into this Chamber the Senator from Washington [Mr. Jones] had the floor, pointing out that some of these magazines were made up three-fourths of advertising. In the case of the Iron Age of this month there are 636 pages of advertising matter, for which the publisher gets $50 a page. The Government contributed to him $3,686 upon an investment out of which he Now, Senators, that is the proposition. Everybody understands it. I am not going to delay the Senate in arguing it.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. President-

Mr. BRYAN. The Senator from Pennsylvania asked me to yield to him.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, I only wanted to allude to the question raised by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. Townsend] a few minutes ago, when he stated that the rates of advertising had been increased on account of the increased cost of print paper. I will state that if the Senator had anything to do with the conduct of a newspaper, he would realize that the newspaper owner who was fortunate enough to obtain an increase in rates on that account was very exceptionally situated, because the advertising rates are based not upon the cost of print paper but upon what the advertising is worth to the advertiser and upon the circulation of the newspapers themselves. I know that in the case of the newspapers in which I am interested there has been no advance whatever on account of the cost of print

While I am on my feet I wish to say that I do not expect to oppose this proposition. I am somewhat interested in it as a newspaper publisher, and therefore will not speak upon the proposition to increase the second-class rate; in fact, I think the second-class rate ought to be advanced; but I do think, if the Senator from Florida will allow me, that this is a most inopportune time to reduce the rate of postage upon any class of mail matter whatever, upon drop letters or anything else, or to reduce the revenues of the Government in any respect. When one committee of the Senate is busily engaged in devising means of raising money I do not think another committee ought to be engaged in endeavoring to reduce the revenues of the Government. Furthermore, I will say that the Dominion of Canada, for instance, as a means of raising revenue, has advanced the rate of postage and has put a war tax of 1 cent an ounce upon every letter that is mailed within the Dominion; and I do not think we should couple these two propositions with each other. I am opposed to reducing the drop rate at this time.

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. Brandeger] asks me how much print paper has increased in price. I will say that for the larger dailies and the larger contracts my experience goes to show that there has been an increase of about 50 per cent over the former cost.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, there is only one thing further that I care to say. This plan, if adopted, does not mean a permanent deficit in the post-office revenues. It is estimated by the department that the loss from putting into effect the provision as to drop letters will be, say, $20,000,000 this next fiscal year. It is confidently expected—and the year is nearly over that there will be a $10,000,000 surplus this year. That leaves $10,000,000, half of it to be made up by the half-cent increase this year and the other half next year, so that by the time the rate upon second-class matter is doubled the rates as a whole, including the reduction in postal rates on first-class mail matter, will be self-sustaining.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator a question. Is it not true that in order to reach a publication so full of advertisements as the Iron Age, making that rate apply to the newspapers which are read daily and circulated throughout the country, while it might do justice in the case of that publication, would be an exceedingly great hardship on the small daily newspapers of the country, which carry small amounts of advertisement and give the public the current news, and in this way are in the class of public educators and enlight-

Mr. BRYAN. I may say now to the Senator from Kentucky

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to interrogate him?

Mr. BRYAN. If the Senator will pardon me, I will answer this question, and then I will yield to the Senator from Penn-sylvania. Of course, it does not cost the Government any more to carry one kind of second-class matter than the other. It carries it by the pound, and it is at the same expense in carrying a city newspaper as it is in carrying a magazine. But the Senator must remember that the class of papers which it is usually claimed could stand the increase, because they have adjusted themselves to the business conditions, are the country weeklies. Now, the country weeklies circulate for the most very within the country of publication, and they do not pay weekles. Now, the country weekles circulate for the most part within the country of publication, and they do not pay a dollar. In the case of the daly paper, on the average their circulation does not cover a radius of more than 50 or 100 miles, and those papers are established institutions. They, as a class, are making money. The country is prosperous. They must be sharing in that prosperity, notwithstanding the increase in the rates upon print paper. rates upon print paper.

Mr. JAMES. I think, if the Senator will pardon me, that there is a distinction that the Government ought to make between carrying a paper which is almost entirely for advertising, as this one seems to be, and a newspaper that circulates and is read for the purpose of enlightening a community.

Mr. BRYAN. Oh, no; there are 132 pages of reading matter

Mr. JAMES. I know, but it is nearly all given over to advertisements

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. How much advertising is there in it?

Mr. JAMES. Six hundred of the 800 pages.
Mr. BRYAN. Well, a great many of these magazines and newspapers, too, have half of their space taken up with adver-Take these daily newspapers—half of them is adververtising. Surel: they do not take those advertisements at

Mr. JAMES. But it is true that if we vote for the motion of the Senator to suspend the rules, the two propositions are not separated in his motion.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. We would bring it all up.

Mr. BRYAN. Oh, the whole question is open, then. The Senate can do as it pleases with the amendment.

Mr. JAMES. The increased rate upon newspapers and the decreased rate upon drop letters are all involved in one proposition and are not separate.

Mr. BRYAN. They can be separated, of course. The Senate can do as it pleases. In other words, the Senate can reduce the postage on first-class matter and leave out any increase on second-class matter; or it can increase the rate on secondclass matter and leave out the reduction on first-class matter, if it cares to do that; or it can change this rate as it pleases by amendment.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, the Senator from Florida has given a great deal of study to this matter, and I should like to ask him whether he has any figures showing whether there actually is a loss to the Government in the transportation of the newspapers by second-class mail? I do not refer to the county papers, which go free; of course, there is a loss in that; but take the daily papers, which, when mailed, are as a rule mailed for a very short distance. Has the Senator any figures showing whether or not there is really a loss in transporting on account of magazines. There is a loss on all of them. The on account of magazines. There is a loss on all of them. The loss on magazines, however, is larger.

Mr. OLIVER. Yes; of course, we know it is larger; but is not the loss on the daily papers inconsiderable, on account of the short distance that they are carried, as a rule?

Mr. BRYAN. No; I think not. I think the loss is considerable even on daily newspapers. I am quite sure it is. It can not be otherwise. The pick-up and delivery charge costs the Government more than the postage.

Mr. TAMES. The loss on daily payspapers however is not

Mr. JAMES. The loss on daily newspapers, however, is not as great as it is on a magazine like this copy of the Iron Age.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I am going to discuss that very subject at this time. When I was on the Post Office Committee I gave a good deal of attention to it, and I am sure that the relative loss to the Government on newspapers is entirely different from that upon magazines. The cost to the is entirely different from that upon magazines. The cost to the Post Office Department consists of two elements—the handling element and the hauling element. The hauling element increases with distance, for the department pays the railroad a mileage rate per pound, and for each additional mile there is an additional cost to the Government for the hauling.

The result of the investigation made when I was on the Post Office Committee led me to the conclusion that the average rost Office Committee led me to the conclusion that the average daily newspaper haul was about 50 miles, while the average magazine haul was nearly ten times that much; so that the expense of the haul, which is the heavy element of the expense in second-class postage, is almost ten times as large—certainly six times—for the magazines as it is for the newspapers.

The newspaper average haul being about 50 miles, it is exceedingly doubtful whether there is any considerable loss to the Government upon those newspapers which under this amendment are to have an increased charge for the first year of half a cent a pound and for the second year an entire cent a pound. I am impressed with the belief that the cost to the pound. I am impressed with the belief that the cost to the Government can not be great as a matter of loss upon the daily papers, because I know that the cost of the haul, even from the East, partly by water, did not amount to 2 cents a pound on white paper to the city of Atlanta several years ago, when I was interested in the newspaper business. I have no interest of any kind in newspapers or magazines at this time, so that I am entirely free from any personal interest. It is simply a matter of information that I have gathered from my experience.

I do not think it fair to class the daily newspaper with the magazine in this increased charge, because the loss to the Government is really on the magazines, and I think it is very small, if any at all, upon those newspapers which pay. Of course, there is a substantial loss on the weekly paper that course, there is a substantial loss on the weekly paper that is handled without any charge at all, and there is a loss on the papers, daily and weekly, which go in separate wrappers over rural routes. The papers to which is to be applied these increased charges, when delivered in towns and cities, I do not believe will cost the Government 2 cents a pound. I think if we carried it to 2 cents we would be charging them considered. erably more than it costs the Government.

Reference was made to the expense of handling a large part of these newspapers together in a single bundle. There is not the individual handling of the individual paper through the mail when daily papers are delivered in towns and cities. There is not the expense that is attached to the individual handling of a letter. It is a different proposition entirely, on account of the different system of handling.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, is it not as much trouble to distribute newspapers as it is to distribute letters?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It is as much trouble, at the place of delivery, to distribute, if the mode of distribution were the same; yes. Mr. BRYAN. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. But that is only a part of the trouble of distribution. There is the distribution of the letter all the way through, while the newspaper goes to a town in a package, starting from the office in a package, and there is only one distribution at the town.

Mr. BRYAN. There is the same distribution that there is of the letters

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No; there is not.
Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President—
Mr. SMITH of Georgia. One moment; the Senator is mis-The letters are taken up one by one at the initial post

I said at the point of distribution

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. But the Senator said there was as much trouble in the case of the newspapers as in the case of the letters. I say yes at the point of distribution if they are distributed in separate wrappers.

Mr. BRYAN. That is what I was speaking of.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. But the trouble at the point of distribution is not more than a third of the trouble of handling. You eliminate, therefore, in the case of newspapers two-thirds of the expense of handling, which applies to the case of indi-vidual letters, even when distributed at the point of delivery in separate packages.
Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President-

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

I would also call the attention of the Senator to the fact that the newspapers, as a rule, are delivered at the railway station. Instead of being taken to the post office and handed to the Government there, they are taken in packages, the package for each town tied by itself, and delivered in bulk at the railway station.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I was just coming also to that propo-Only those newspapers which go through the post office in individual wrappers and are distributed to the individual in that way have a distribution at the point of terminus. As a rule, the newspapers go to a carrier in a town in large bundles covering the subscription of the town, and the carrier delivers them, the carrier making the separation, the carrier making the classification, and there being only one handling by the postoffice employees from the initial point to the place of delivery at the depot. So this element of the cost of handling is far less as to newspapers than it is as to magazines and far less for individual papers as to newspapers than it is per individual letter as to letters.

I am discussing, Mr. President, the question of expense to the Government of handling newspapers as compared to letters and the expense to the Government of handling newspapers as compared to magazines. It is for this reason I insist that the con-clusion which I have reached and which I still entertain is that the relative loss upon magazines and upon newspapers is en-tirely different. First, because the relative haul is nearly 10 times as much per magazine; second, because the relative cost of handling is very much less for newspapers than for magazines. I can not consent to a measure that classifies the newspapers and the magazines and proposes to put the same in-papers and the magazines and proposes to put the same increased charge upon the newspapers that it puts upon the magazines. I shall, therefore, vote against suspending the rule.

Mr. FLETCHER. May I ask the Senator if he considers the practice of carrying magazines by freight? Is there not a difference in the cost there as compared with the cost by express?

Mr. SMITH of Course of course there are represented by

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Of course those magazines which are handled by freight cost less than those that go by the ordinary mail trains. It has been a saving, I think, of over $5,000,000 by classifying part of the magazines and sending them by freight. I very warmly advocated that measure when I was connected with the Post Office Department.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Does the Senator think that the newspapers are paying as much as they ought to pay for handling their mail?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I am not sure that the cost of the newspapers, barring those that go free, is in excess of a cent a pound, for the reasons I have explained—the handling consists

Let me illustrate it by my own observation. Suppose there is sent from the city of Atlanta to the city of Macon probably a package of 500 papers. They would probably go in one package, and be received there by the newspaper carriers and be distributed by them. There would be but one handling only by postuted by them. There would be but one handling only by post-office employees, and that would be the delivery by the employee of the newspaper to the train and to the agent at the depot.

Mr. BRYAN. The Senator from Georgia does not state that he doubts the Hughes Commission report. It puts the cost per pound on daily newspapers at 6.91 cents; on the weekly and other than daily newspapers, 10.59 cents; on scientific periodicals, 7.25 cents; on educational periodicals, 8.06 cents; on religious periodicals, 11.37 cents; on trade-journal periodicals, 6.47 cents; on agricultural periodicals, 9.53 cents; on magazines, 8.09 cents; and on miscellaneous periodicals, 10.26 cents. So, when you put these rates at 2 cents a pound on daily papers or any second-class mail you are receiving but one-third of a compensatory rate.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I am not prepared to accept those figures as correct. I have no idea they are correct, from my own observation. Suppose we send 50 papers—

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him? In this connection I wish to call attention to the general practice of the daily papers in sending mail outside a city. The paper itself is prepared by the company issuing the paper, which is put into one bundle, and the paper itself delivers the paper at the depot.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That is what I have just said.

Mr. SMOOT. And it reaches its destination.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The agent of the paper meets it at the depot, and it is distributed there to carriers, and there is practically no handling by the department except to receive it on the car and deliver it from the car.

Mr. SMOOT. That is all. The paper itself provides the agent in the city who receives the paper, and the agent distributes to the homes

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I am much obliged to the Senator; but that is just what I was explaining. I was illustrating it by the transportation of 500 papers going from Atlanta to the city of Macon. The newspaper sends a bundle of 500 by its own machine to the depot and delivers it to the car at Macon.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Wait a moment. I think I can explain it. The Senator is very adept, I understand, on this subject; but let me finish. At Macon the representative of the newspaper meets the car and takes the bundle of 500 papers. All the Post Office Department has done is to pay the transportation on the 500 papers from Atlanta to Macon. It has had practically no expense of handling, and it simply made a straight haul; that is all. It does not cost the Post Office Department over a cent a pound to haul that freight from Atlanta to Macon. It does not cost it 2 cents a pound.

Mr. SMOOT. The only reason why I made the inquiry of the Senator is this: He said "carriers." I thought perhaps other Senators received the same idea I at first received from the statement he made, that he referred to the post-office carriers; but, of course, he referred to the carriers for the newspapers.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The newspaper carriers,

Mr. SMOOT. That is all.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It is not done by an employee of the Post Office Department. The machine of the newspaper takes them from the office of the newspaper in single bundles, carries the mail to the depot, and loads it on the car in packages for cities and towns. The only distribution is in packages, and that is made at the places by carriers of the papers, who take them out and distribute them. I do not believe there is any such expense to the department.

Now, let us come to the eastern paper. It comes to cities away from New York in large packages to the newsdealers. The distribution does not take place as in letter distribution; it does not take place as in magazines; and I say as the average haul for newspapers is so much less and as the character of distribution is so much cheaper I do not think it is just to class the two together.

I would have been glad to increase the charge on periodicals, especially for the long hauls that really cause the chief expense, but I do not believe it right to put newspapers and magazines into the same class.

Mr. BRYAN. Did the Senator say the cost was ten times greater for magazines?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No; I said the haul was approximately ten times longer.

Mr. BRYAN. Is that a mere guess?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No; that is my recollection. magazines have an average of about 500 miles-perhaps 300while the newspapers have an average of about 50.

Mr. BRYAN. According to the Hughes report, subscribers' copies 255 miles, sample copies 315, subscribers' copies and sample copies combined 255 miles, and scientific periodicals 793 miles.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If these figures are applied to subscribers of newspapers they did not know the facts; they did not understand the business of newspaper publishers.

few newspapers go to subscribers direct.

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator does not include the newsdealers?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No; when you speak of subscribers you mean individual distribution.

Mr. BRYAN. Can the Senator state it so as to compare the second-class delivery of newspapers and magazines? Mr. SMITH of Georgia. To individual subscribers, I said.

Mr. BRYAN. I think the Senator is mistaken about that. According to this table the Hughes Commission reported newspapers and magazines received on all rural routes 39,794 during May, 1911, and there were newspapers 14,280,942 pounds and only 2,377,894 pounds of magazines. So the weight of newspapers delivered and received upon these rural delivery routes is nearly ten times as great as the delivery of letters.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I was not referring to the rural

Mr. BRYAN. The Senator was talking about the railway

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I was referring to the great bulk of the newspaper distribution from my own knowledge and my own observation. The rural routes do not carry a large proportion of the daily papers distributed.

Mr. BRYAN. Then the report of the commission is all

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I think it is, if it means that the larger issues from daily papers are delivered upon rural routes. Mr. POMERENE. May I ask the Senator from Georgia a question?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. POMERENE. Is the Senator able to state just whether these newspapers are hauled by the Government at a loss or at

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I am not; but I am prepared to say that from my observation the loss if there is any is nothing like the loss on the magazines.

Mr. POMERENE. Let me ask the Senator another question. Is the Senator able to state whether the Government hauls the magazines at a loss or at a profit; and if so, what amount.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I can not say exactly. My information on that subject is not from my personal knowledge but from reports I have seen from the Post Office Department. The conclusion reached when I was upon the committee was that the average cost of a magazine ranged from 6 to 8 cents a pound, while they were only charging 1 cent a pound.

Mr. POMERENE. I have been informed that the Government receives for this second-class mail between nine and ten million dollars annually, and that it costs the Government about $90,000,000 annually to render this service.

Mr. BRYAN. I can give the Senator some figures

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Senator from Ohio, unfortunately, I think, was not here when I drew the distinction between newspapers and magazines, when I showed the marked difference between the cost of handling the two by the Government.

Mr. POMERENE. I was not here.

Mr. BRYAN. There were 1,202,470,676 pounds mailed at cent-a-pound rate and free in county. Cost to the Government, $99,444,324. Postage received, $11,383,530. Loss in handling, $88,060,794

Mr. POMERENE. So the Government gets about one dollar for every nine it pays out for this service.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That I should not think was correct, according to the report furnished the Post Office Committee when I was on the committee a few years ago.

Mr. POMERENE. I was going to ask the Senator what he thinks is the amount?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I will say to the Senator the evidence before us was that the cost for handling the magazines ranged between 6 and 8 cents a pound when the charge was 1 cent a

Mr. POMERENE. The answers of the Senator make it sufficiently clear for me to state my position in a few words.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Does the Senator desire to ask me another question?

Mr. POMERENE. I thought the Senator had resumed his seat and simply rose to answer my question. If the Senator still retains the floor I will have nothing to say at this moment.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, all I desire to say is that the difference in the cost to the Government is great between the newspaper and the magazine. The cost for handling the daily paper is, in my judgment, not 2 cents a pound or in many instances 1 cent a pound. I am unwilling to vote to suspend the rule to put that charge on newspapers.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, it seems that the reports from the department indicate that the Government is rendering service at an expense of about $99,000,000 for which it receives about $11,000,000. The question is whether we shall suspend the rules and vote upon this subject. Very shortly we shall be called upon to provide for additional revenue amounting to hundreds of millions of dollars. I realize the fact that a portion of this loss is chargeable to local papers in every vicinity. That loss to the Government and the benefit to the publishers is rather equitably distributed. The larger losses are due to the very large magazines. I am told that the profit of the Post Office Department on first-class mail is about $90,000,000. So we take from the letter writer and the letter sender $90,000,000 in profits and we turn it over to the publishers of the magazines and daily papers. I do not see how Senators can reconcile that situation.

It seems to me that anybody who receives service from the Government ought to be willing at least to pay the cost of that service. Under the circumstances the question addresses itself thus to the Senate. We have the information that we are doing $99,000,000 of service for which we receive $11,000,000. Shall we continue this expenditure of the Government for the benefit most largely of the magazine publishers and to-morrow come in and levy taxes to make up this deficit? That is the problem in a nutshell.

I realize the pressure that is brought upon Senators. I have received to-day letters and telegrams urging me to vote to contime this practice as heretofore, but I should like some publisher of a magazine to tell me how he can reconcile my vote, if I should vote as he wishes, with my duty to the public. For that reason I hope that the motion will prevail and that the rule will be suspended. Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, there seems to be some controversy as to the services that are rendered by the Post Office Department to the daily papers in the distribution of their papers. I have a statement by a practical newspaper man, the editor of one of the largest and greatest newspapers in the South, which gives the facts in detail concerning the delivery of his paper, the Commercial Appeal of Memphis, Tenn., and I desire that statement to be read as a part of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none and the Secretary will read.

The Secretary read as follows:

MEMPHIS, TENN., February 11, 1917.

Senator JOHN K. SHIELDS, Washington, D. C.:

Under present rate of postage the Commercial Appeal pays the United States $700 per week in postage. The Government makes money out of all such papers as ours. It makes money out of all the large dailies in this country, except possibly a few of the large dailies of New York and Chicago. The express companies take our papers at 50 cents per 100, and are eager to get the business. The Government is put to little expense in handling our papers. We deliver at our own expense most of our papers direct to the trains. Our own clerks get the Government sacks and route the papers from the office. We haul the papers to the depots in our own wagons. At the destination most of our papers are taken direct from the train by our agents. Therefore the only work the Government does is to have clerk come to the office and weigh the papers and to transport the paper in trains. The papers usually take care of both loading and delivery. This even applies to a great deal of our single-wrapped papers up to the point of delivery of said papers to the train. Three-fourths of our out-of-town circulation does not pass through the post offices at all. It is checked up at the newspaper office by a postal comployee, goes to them at the trains, and is delivered at train destination direct to agent. We are now paying the United States Government an income tax which this year will amount to about $3,400; we are paying a corporation tax on the market value of the stock; and we are threatened with an added tax on our profits above a certain profit. Our paper bill is higher than ever before. Our subscription rates are not higher, neither are our advertising rates. If all of these plans go though to add more taxes to the newspapers, most of us will come to Washington and request the Government to appoint a receiver to operate our property, because we can not operate it under proposed conditions and make enough money to pay the proposed taxes and the proposed increase in postage.

C. P. J. MOONEY,
Managing Editor the Commercial Appeal.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, may I ask the Secretary to again state what the author of that telegram gives as his income tax?

The Secretary read as follows:

We are now paying the United States Government an income tax which this year will amount to about $3,400.

Mr. THOMAS. That is a corporation, is it?

The Secretary read as follows:

We are paying a corporation tax on the market value of the stock d we are threatened with an added tax on our profits above a certain

Mr. THOMAS. I should think that newspaper was in about as much danger of a receiver as are the telegraph companies, if we may judge of the condition of the latter by the number of telegrams with which they have flooded this Chamber in the last four or five hours.

Mr. SHIELDS. I did not yield for a speech at this time. Mr. THOMAS. I beg the Senator's pardon. I did not know

Mr. 1HOMAS. They the Schatch's particular that he had the floor.

Mr. SHIELDS. The Commercial Appeal is a great and prosperous paper, but that is no reason why it and other papers which are not so prosperous should be discriminated against and subjected to oppressive taxation.

and subjected to oppressive taxation.

The statement of Col. Mooney sustains what was so strongly stated by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. Smith]. The daily papers are now paying their full share of postal expenses. If the magazines are not paying what they should, let their postage be increased. There is a clear distinction between the two classes of publications, and the papers should not be classed with them to their prejudice.

The daily newspaper is more than a commercial enterprise.

The daily newspaper is more than a commercial enterprise It is published for profit, of course; but it is educational in its nature and use. Does anyone want to increase the cost of them or limit their circulation?

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President—

Mr. SHIELDS. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. BRYAN. Does the Senator from Tennessee really think that there is much danger of Col. Mooney having to go into the hands of a receiver if he can pay $3,400 income tax on an income which he makes out of the running of his paper? Is Col. Mooney in any danger of going into the hands of a receiver by reason of contributing 1 cent a pound more upon the postage of his papers? Does not the Senator from Tennessee think that is absurd on the face of it?

Mr. SHIELDS. I do not think the Commercial Appeal is in any danger of going into the hands of a receiver, but that is no reason for confiscating its property by oppressive taxation.

Mr. President, the great daily newspapers of the country are not purely commercial corporations; they are educational in-stitutions. They are in the nature of public utilities for the distribution of news and information to the people of the whole country. They are one of the greatest promoters of civilization and should be treated fairly.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. SHIELDS. I will. Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Senator will notice that the Commercial Appeal now pays $700 a week postage; that is nearly $37,000 a year. If we add a cent a pound to their postage, we would make their postage bill $76,000 a year, which would take up over a third of their profits.

Mr. BRYAN. Oh, no.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes, sir.
Mr. SHIELDS. I will not stop to make the calculation. have, however, another statement here, showing that the publishers of this paper are now paying the United States for the delivery of its papers about $36,000, and, as shown by the statement of Col. Mooney, they pay to others a very large part of the expense of this real distribution.

It was stated by the Senator from Florida a few moments ago that daily newspapers and magazines were receiving a tre-mendous subsidy from the United States. That is not a correct statement. They are not receiving a subsidy any more than their subscribers. The Postal Service is maintained for the benefit of the people of the country.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President—
The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. SHIELDS. I will yield in a moment.

The Post Office Department is not a business conducted for profit. It is conducted in the service of the people of the whole United States, and while we should like to see it pay its expenses, it is not necessary that it should do so. The question that always ought to be considered and the policy in conducting it should be to furnish prompt and cheap delivery of mail of all kinds. It is one of the things for which the people are taxed, and for which they are willing to be taxed. They want prompt and reliable delivery of letters and papers, and it is the duty to furnish such service, and if reasonable postal charges will not pay the expense of such service it must be supplied from other sources.

Now, it is said that it is absurd for one committee of this body to be considering a bill to raise revenue and for another committee to be considering one for the reduction of revenue. This is an additional tax, not only upon the newspapers but upon the people who want the papers and will have them. If further burdens are imposed upon newspapers they will be compelled to raise subscription rates, and in the end, as is the case in all indirect taxes, the burden will fall on the consumer, upon the people who take the papers.

The proposed increase of postage upon newspapers is nothing less than a proposition to tax information and education and to deny to the people, especially those of the country, the current news of the day.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if this publishing house and I am glad that they are so prosperous—has not any other income than that from its newspaper, they must be making over $300,000 a year from it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No; this year 2 per cent is the income-tax rate. They state that the tax this year will be 2 per cent. That would indicate an income of $170,000 a year.

Mr. GALLINGER. Then, they are making $170,000 profit; and I think they ought to pay what it costs to transport their papers through the mail.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. So do I; but I do not believe that it costs the Government the amount claimed.

Mr. President, I wish to call attention to the fact that in the telegram read, the publisher declares that the express company charges him 50 cents a hundred, while he pays the United States Government a dollar a hundred to haul his paper, and the proposition is to raise his charge to $2 a hundred, when the express company rates are 50 cents a hundred.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President-

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. One moment. What I wish to urge is that if the express company rate is 50 cents a hundred, it can not be that the Government is losing much at $1 a hundred.

Mr. GALLINGER. But the express company does not distribute the papers, and more than that, if the Senator, who, I think, has been a newspaper publisher himself, were going to distribute his papers 25 miles or 50 miles or 100 miles from the city where the paper was published he would not be apt to send them by express.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Absolutely and frequently, and let me explain why.

Mr. GALLINGER. Perhaps occasionally. Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Nearly always.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator knows that there is always delay in sending a letter or any other parcel by express in comparison with one sent by mail.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It is to escape delay that this class of matter is not sent by mail, I will say to the Senator. Let me explan it to him: A city located 50 miles from Atlanta has a train arriving at a certain hour from Atlanta. The newspapers for that city are put in a post-office mail bag in the office of the newspaper, sealed, carried to the train, and put on the The car is met at the town by the agent of the newspaper, who receives it from the train, and at once distributes it without stopping to go to the post office.

Mr. GALLINGER. We will concede all that, and yet the fact remains that the Government is carrying this kind of literature, both newspapers and magazines, at a tremendous loss. It does not make any difference how the matter is sent, enough of it is sent through the mails to create a tremendous deficit in the revenues of the Government; and what I say is that the Government ought not to carry newspapers at a loss any more than express companies would carry articles at a loss or that the Government should carry merchandise at a loss. The Government would not carry a package of 5 pounds by parcel post or in any other way which I might offer to the post office for less than it cost to transport it. Why should the Government carry 5 pounds of newspapers or magazines at a loss?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I am not asking that the Government carry magazines at a loss, but I am insisting that the Government is not carrying the daily papers at a loss, and I am demonstrating that by the facts presented, for instance, in the telegram from the publisher, which has been read. I am insisting that the daily newspaper is not in the class in point of expense with the magazine.

Mr. GALLINGER. I quite agree to that.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. What I want is to separate the two subjects. I am ready to vote to make the magazines pay more.

Mr. GALLINGER. I wish we could distinguish between them, and yet all the investigations have shown that they are carried

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not think so.
Mr. GALLINGER. I think they are in a different class, and for myself I would be glad to separate them if we could do so.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, does the Senator mean that the investigations show that the daily newspapers are carried at a loss?

Mr. GALLINGER. I do not know how that may be. The Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN] probably can answer that. I think it is so shown.

Mr. BRYAN. What is the Senator's question?
Mr. SHIELDS. Are the daily papers carried at a loss?
Mr. BRYAN. They are carried at a loss of over 6 cents a

Mr. SHIELDS. I think the Senator is mistaken as to facts.
Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from New Hampshire that I think I shall vote for the motion of the Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN] to suspend the rule, with the idea, if it can be done, of separating newspapers from magazines, because it is the magazines of the country that are costing the Government so much to transport through the mails, according to the reports. If we can separate the two propositions and make the magazines pay, then I will be in favor of 1-cent postage.

Mr. GALLINGER. There is undoubtedly a very great difference in the two classes of publications.

Mr. SHIELDS. I favor reducing the postage on drop letters to 1 cent, but I can not see how this will justify the increase of postage on newspapers. The people will pay the tax, and it will not benefit them to reduce it at one place and offset this by an increase at another place.

Mr. President, it is not a material question whether the newspapers are carried at a loss or not. Of course, the Government does not want to lose any more than possible; but I repeat the Post Office Department is not a business institution; it is not run for profit. The expenses of governmental agencies of this kind have always been more or less paid by general taxation and not by specific taxation upon that served by the particular agency. The daily papers are now paying a reasonable part of the expense of the Postal Service of the country, and they should not be singled out and made to pay more than is fair and just.

Mr. STONE and Mr. TOWNSEND addressed the Chair. The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I will only take a moment, I will say to the Senator from Michigan.

I am going to vote for the motion to suspend the rule so that the matter may be laid before the Senate, as I think the Senate ought to pass upon the question at issue. I shall vote on a division of the question against the proposal to reduce letter postage because of the loss of revenue that would follow such a reduction. I shall then vote for an amendment to the second proposition excepting newspapers from its operation, but imposing the additional tax suggested upon the other kinds of publications, periodicals, and so forth.

I wish simply to state that, for it seems to me that that is the solution to which we ought to come, and we can not get to that solution or any other solution unless the motion of the Senator from Florida to suspend the rules is agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, if the rules are suspended I shall vote just as the Senator from Missouri indicates he will, and if I were sure that those votes would be sustained by the Senate I would vote to suspend the rule; but in the meantime I am not sure that they will be, and I believe that this tax would be a great injustice to the daily newspapers, and would impose upon them a charge more than the service costs the Government. For that reason I will vote against suspending the rules

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I realize that it will be difficult to make an argument against experts who are interested or who have been interested in the newspaper business, but there are some things which are very clear to me and which have been made clear by various investigations by the Post Office Department and by congressional commissions appointed for that express purpose. It has been stated here that the Government loses approximately $80,000,000 a year on second-class mail matter; that is, that it costs the Government about $80,000,000 more than it receives. It is also known that firstclass letter postage pays more than twice, probably three times, what it actually costs the Government to handle it.

This means that the present charge for first-class-mail postage is 2 cents per ounce, or fraction thereof, or more than 32 cents per pound, for most letters weigh less than 2 ounces. more than three times what it costs the Government to deliver it, while the second-class-mail charge is 1 cent a pound, which is about one-eighth of what it costs the Government to handle it, taking the second-class matter as a whole. The proposition before the Senate is to reduce this excess burden that is placed upon the writers of letters throughout the United States and to increase in a very moderate degree the price that is now paid for second-class mail matter.

I had not supposed that the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] or any other Senator would claim for a moment that any papers or any publications are now paying as much as it costs the Government to handle them. I asked the question of the Senator from Georgia, thinking that he would answer according to what seems to be the proven fact; namely, that we were carrying all second-class mail matter at a loss. Then I proposed to ask him the second question: Would half a cent a pound be too much additional to impose upon all or any of these classes of second-class mail matter? I do not think it is.

If all of these second-class publications, and the letters as well, are to contribute something to the expense of carrying them, the burden should be equitably distributed as nearly as possible, I think a much greater rate than one-half cent a pound should be imposed; but because I knew there was such a difference in the cost of handling second-class mail matter, some of it being handled more cheaply than others, I was willing to start with this almost infinitesimal step in the right direction, knowing as I think I do that it will place no extraordinary burden upon these publications which they ought not to bear.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I yield.

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator, I know, has given a great deal of attention to this subject. Is he able to state the cost per pound of the mailing privileges of the daily newspapers? understand from what the Senator has said that he is not able to give that information with exactness, but can he give that cost approximately?

Mr. TOWNSEND. No; I can not, exactly. Probably 6 cents a pound. The report of the Postmaster General shows that the amount of newspapers handled through the Rural Delivery Service as compared with letters, first-class mail matter, going through the same source, is about fourteen times as great. Now, it may be that the Senator from Georgia is correct when he states that a good many of these newspapers are dumped on to the train without expense to the Government.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to ask him a question at this time?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Is it not true that the papers that go over the rural routes are very largely weekly papers and

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, that is not true in my country. There is scarcely a farmer in Michigan-and I think Michigan is not different from other States in the Union in this respect—there is scarcely a farmer on the rural routes that does not take a daily paper.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I do.

VARDAMAN. If the Senator will perm't me, I will say that that is true throughout the United States to-day wherever they have rural mail delivery.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Speaking from my own experience, I know it is true. There is no chance to juggle the facts in that respect. They stand out for themselves. While it may be true, as the Senator from Tennessee says, in reference to the paper whose telegram he has put into the RECORD, that it has not raised the advertising rates, but I have not talked with a single advertiser who has not told me that he is paying a larger price for advertising than he ever did before. But, furthermore. Mr. President, this same opposition was made before the price of paper went up. This question has been before the Congress for years. The publications of the country have always opposed it on the ground that it put an additional burden upon

Mr. President, as I said yesterday, I do not want to put any burden upon publications which they ought not to bear, and I know there is a difference between publications. Before the real equitable price is fixed it would be well to discriminate in favor of religious, educational, fraternal, and scientific publications not issued largely for profit; but the burdens of taxa-tion are placed upon all of the people and should be as nearly equitable as possible. All will have to bear their share of them, and there is no reason on earth that can be given in justice why one class of people who are making money should pay oneeighth of what it costs the Government to handle their product while the great majority of the users of the same mail facilities are charged more than 300 per cent of what it costs to deliver their mail. The humblest citizen in my State or in yours who writes a letter and pays three times what it costs the Government to handle it is contributing to business ventures of the country. In other words, the many are taxed for the benefit of the few. This little step can not destroy any legitimate publication, and in the meanwhile there will be an opportunity to adjust these relations between newspapers and magazines, as no one wants to deal unjustly.

I know my position is unpopular with the press. I have received letters and telegrams to that effect. The press speaks to the country. It is speaking to the Senators, inducing them to vote contrary to what their judgment would be if it were not for the influence which can be brought to bear upon them in their various States and communities.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, if the Senator from Michigan will permit me to make a suggestion just in this connection, if the press speaks in condemnation of this proposed amendment it will not be speaking for the American people or in the interests of the American people, but rather in the interests of its dividends. I want to say further that there never was in the history of this Republic such universal prosperity among the great newspapers of the country as there is to-day. honest little country weekly may be having trouble struggling with poverty, but the big dailies are fat with prosperity. The company owning the Commercial Appeal, to which my good friend the distinguished Senator from Tennessee has just referred, I expect is the most profitable enterprise in the city of Memphis. It is a great newspaper as well as a money-making

If the Senator will pardon me, I will interrupt him long enough to say just here that if newspapers were run in the interest of the public, if they were educational enterprises conduct for the good of humanity, altruistic enterprises, it would be a different thing; but every one of them is conducted in the interest of its stockholders, and they are entitled to no more consideration at the hands of the Government than any other enterprise run for profit.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I do not see why the Senator from Mississippi should say that the Commercial Appeal is a prosperous paper. According to the telegrams which the Senator from Tennessee read, it only made $170,000 net profit.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I do not object to the newspapers and to the magazines making money. I do not want to impose any burden upon them which would prevent them from making money, but I want them to bear their just share of the cost of government. I want no favorites played. I want the man who writes a letter, the mechanic, the farmer, the laboring girl, or anybody else who writes a letter, to have the same advantages of the mails that the man does who is operating a plant for profit.

Now, I recognize that there are very many elements which enter into this problem. Financial returns come in a measure to the Government from advertisements. The same is true from the merchants' use of the parcel post, or from the man who writes a letter; but I close as I began, namely, that from all the evidence that has been gleaned and submitted to committees of Congress and to the Congress itself, everyone must be convinced that we are carrying on this business at a loss, and that the loss is very great. Nobody disputes that it amounts to about $100,000,000 a year, less $11,000,000 which we receive for it. Now, we start out with an increase of $5,000,000 a year to be paid by these publications toward the deficit which their business has created for the Government. I want the 1-cent letter postage, too, and for this reason: One cent will more than pay the expense of first-class letter postage. If there should be a deficit in the Treasury, the Congress will have some inducement then to adjust mail rates on a proper We should make no money out of the mails. I do not want to make any. We should simply adjust rates so that there will be no great loss, and the publications of the country should contribute their proper share toward the operations of the Post Office Department.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, this matter comes before the Senate, as a good many matters come, in a very unfortunate position, as I view it. The motion is to suspend the rules so that there may be added to the bill an amendment increasing the rate of postage on newspapers and periodicals and reducing the rate of postage on first-class matter. I have long believed that we should reduce the rate on first-class matter, and have on one or two occasions offered a bill for that purpose. On the other hand, I believe that there should be a difference in the postage rate between the ordinary daily paper and periodicals that are devoted almost entirely to advertising.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, does not the Senator recognize that the loss is at least 6 cents a pound? If so, how are we going to injure any of them by making the rate 2 cents a pound? Mr. CLAPP. In the first place, I do not recognize any such

Mr. BRYAN. Well, of course, I do not know that. The Senator from Georgia says it is not so.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I say that I personally know, so far as the daily papers in my city are concerned, from personal observation of the business, that the statement is a mistake; that it does not cost the Government any 6 cents per pound to handle it, or anything like it, because I have personally paid the bills and personally handled it through express companies at half a cent in the case of a great many papers.

Mr. BRYAN. But this commission authorized by Congress, known as the Hughes Commission, in its report to the President says that the cost is over 6 cents a pound on newspapers.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I am not at this time discussing the question of what should be done with the proposition to increase the rate, except that I believe that if it can be done there ought to be a distinction made between the ordinary daily paper and the magazine and the advertising periodical. What I am getting at is the legislative exigency that confronts us. Unless we do vote to suspend the rules we can neither reduce the rate nor can we have any opportunity of establishing a distinction between the ordinary daily newspaper and some of these periodicals, which, of course, are little more than advertising mediums. That is the point I was getting at.

Believing, as I do, to begin with, that the time has comeand it ought to have been done before now-when we should reduce the rate on first-class mail matter, I for one shall support the motion to suspend the rules.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN'S BIRTHDAY.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I am permitted by the honorable members of this committee to divert the argument. I desire to address myself to a subject not now before the Senate, but which I am sure the Senate will welcome. If I were not one of the Senators from Illinois, I would not at this particular time interrupt these proceedings, but my reasons, I am sure, are obvious. Mr. President, this is the anniversary of the birth of Abraham Lincoln. The Senate can well resolve to commemorate its presence by petitioning to our countrymen that they follow the example set by Lincoln and obey the commands issued by him in the hour when this Government could live only through the devotion of its children and without which it would have died. The precept of Lincoln was that a freeman should live his chosen life by the methods of his own selection, limited only by his responsibility to God and his respect for the rights of his fellow man. To go where he chose, to trade and exchange with the fellow citizenship throughout his country, to enjoy the fruits of his industry, to have what Victor Hugo prayed should be the lot of all men—the broad earth as a field for his struggles for superiority, the whole land as an abiding place, and the opportunities of civilization upon which to enrich his life and elevate the future of mankind.

To-day, in the crisis pending between the United States and lands of Europe, the issue before the world is the issue which Lincoln gave to America—the right of man to exercise liberty of action, freedom of course, and to enjoy justice from all.

America must consecrate herself anew to the vows in the pledge of Lincoln, saying: "Let us have faith that right makes might and in that faith let us to the end dare to do our duty as we understand it," and bend every effort to achieve the thing which we know is to the welfare of our citizenship and to the glory of our Republic.

Mr. President, if in this day we hear civilization pleading in the name of God that the Christian century now reeling in death grapple with barbarism shall halt in its crumbling of kingdoms and crushing of empires, we in the Republic of America are not without consolation in the presence of this world's catastrophe. In this cataclysm we behold the coming transformation. It is to be the republican ideal of govern-ment—the realized dream of the democracy of man.

We know that when the blood-drenched events have come to their close, and there shall arise the patriots of the new era, seeking for prophets of inspiration and guidance, those who would take increased devotion to the new day will turn to the United States and dedicate their people to those holy standards burning in the sky of the redeemed earth—Lincoln and America.

RECESS. Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, as a mark of respect to the memory of Mr. Lincoln, I move that the Senate take a recess until 8 o'clock.

The motion was unanimously agreed to, and (at 5 o'clock p. m.) the Senate took a recess until 8 o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The Senate reassembled at 8 o'clock p. m., on the expiration of the recess.

CALEB T. HOLLAND.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHEPPARD in the chair). The Secretary will announce the first bill on the calendar at the point where we are to begin this evening.

The bill (S. 7601) for the relief of Caleb T. Holland was announced as first in order on the calendar.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Is there any Senator present who interested in this bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is advised that this bill was reached at the last meeting at which we considered the calendar.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. My own view would be that when a bill is reached and no Senator is present who is interested in it or is willing to be sponsor for it, we might as well carry it to the calendar under Rule IX and get it out of the way for the balance of the session, unless some one moves to take it from its place on the calendar.

Mr. GALLINGER. I should object to that. A Senator might not be present at one time and he might be present at the next call of the calendar. I do not think we would be treating him fairly with only five or six Senators present here to-night.

Mr. MYERS. I think when a bill is called and the author of the bill or a Senator from the State which it affects is not present, and no one can explain it, it ought simply to go over and retain its place on the calendar.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let us proceed with the order and consider unobjected cases

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection, the Secretary will read the bill. Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I desire to ask if any Senator is here who is familiar with this bill?

Mr. SHERMAN entered the Chamber. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator who introduced the bill has arrived.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. All right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the bill, as the Senator from Georgia withdraws his objection, the Chair understands.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I withdraw my objection.

The bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, Caleb T. Holland, who was a private of Company E, Sixtieth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been discharged honorably from the military service of the United States as a member of said company and regiment on the 18th day of April, 1864: Provided, That no bounty, pay, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAMES GLOSTER.

The bill (S. 1379) for the relief of James Gloster was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I desire to know if there is any Senator present who is familiar with the facts in regard to this bill

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The author of the bill is the Senator from Washington [Mr. Poindexter].

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Let it go over.

Mr. GALLINGER. The report gives the facts in the case.

think we ought to take the trouble to look at the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia object?

Mr. CATRON. Several of the bills now reached on the calendar were reported by the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] and the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT], from the Committee on Military Affairs, and every one of them. I think, is meritorious. The object is simply to relieve old soldiers from a technical charge of desertion or something of that kind, and it seems to me that they ought to be passed. Every one is meritorious. They were considered in the Committee on Military Affairs and considered very carefully. Of all the men who carefully investigate such matters the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] is the most careful.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Is there anyone present who can state that he has investigated the case and is satisfied that the charge of desertion is unfounded?

Mr. CATRON. I will say that I was in the Committee on Military Affairs when the case was investigated, and I helped investigate it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. You personally reached the conclusion that the charge of desertion was unfounded?

Mr. CATRON. Yes; I did. I was in favor of reporting the

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. You personally reached the conclusion from the facts that the charge of desertion was unfounded? Mr. CATRON. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. And that for that reason it ought

Mr. CATRON. Yes; that the charge should be removed. Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Very well.

Be it enacted, etc. That in the administration of the pension laws and the laws governing rights and privileges of honorably discharged soldiers, James Gloster, late of the Twenty-seventh Independent Battery, New York Volunteer Light Artillery, shall be held and considered to have been honorably discharged as a member of said company and regiment on the 7th day of April, 1864: Provided, That no pension shall accrue prior to passage of this Act.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, in line 9, to strike out "seventh" and insert "twenty-ninth," and, in the same line, to strike out "April" and insert "March."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. The proviso is different from our usual form. It provides that no pension shall accorded to the provides that the provides the provides that the provides that the provides the pro form. It provides that no pension shall accrue. I move to strike out the word "pension" and insert the words "pay, bounty, or other emoluments."

The amendment was agreed to.
Mr. GALLINGER. On line 11 I move to insert the word
"the," so as to read "to the passage."
The amendment was agreed to.
The lill was recorded to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN DOYLE, ALIAS JOHN GEARY.

The bill (S. 2362) for the relief of John Doyle, alias John Geary, was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws and the laws conferring rights and privileges upon honorably discharged soldiers of the Volunteer Army John Doyle, alias John Geary, shall be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a private, Company C, Eleventh Regiment Illinois Volunteer Cavalry, on the 10th day of Langary 1862

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment to add the following proviso:

Provided, That no back pension, pay, bounty, or other emolument shall be paid by reason of the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FRANCIS M. ATHERTON.

The bill (S. 3269) for the relief of Francis M. Atherton was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws Francis M. Atherton shall hereafter be held and considered to have been mustered into the service of the United States as a member of the First Battery Vermont Volunteer Light Artillery on the 15th day of March, 1862, and to have been honorably discharged from the same on the 1st day of February, 1863, and to have been mustered into the service of the United States as an unassigned recruit on the 19th day of December, 1863, and to have been honorably discharged from the same on the 9th day of March, 1864.

no pay, bounty, or other emolument shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

The Secretary. On page 2, line 3, after the word "sixty-four" and before the period, insert:

Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emolument shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM THOMAS WINSTANLEY.

The bill (S. 7316) for the relief of William Thomas Winstanley was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read,

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws William Thomas Winstanley shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a private of Battery B, Fifth Regiment United States Artillery, on the 11th day of July, 1865: Provided, That no pension shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the word "pension" be stricken out and "pay, bounty, or other emolument" be inserted. The Secretary. In line 8 strike out the word "pension" and insert the words "pay, bounty, or other emoluments."

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That completes the committee mendments. The Chair now recognizes the Senator from amendments. Wyoming

Mr. President, the case to which I alluded a moment ago is that of Corpl. William H. Cranston, late of Company C, Forty-ninth Regiment Massachusetts Volunteers.

Mr. Cranston and I enlisted in the same week in the same company and the same regiment and went to the war together under muskets as privates in the Forty-ninth Massachusetts Infantry.

Mr. Cranston was one of the finest characters that I have ever known in any walk of life. He was a man who had the respect of everyone. He was exemplary morally, he was straight in disci-pline, and soldierlike in all his qualities. He was soon made corporal, and then was made a color bearer of the regiment.

I knew him well because we had the same shelter and almost the same blanket when we had tents and blankets, and when we had nothing left but our poncho blanket and nothing but the mud of the cotton fields to rest ourselves upon we were still comrades and members of the same company.

In the terrible slaughter that followed our attack on Port Hudson on the 27th of May, volunteers were called for for a storming party. Mr. Cranston felt he could not volunteer, and I was informed nearly shed tears because by reason of the position he occupied as bearer of the colors he could not volunteer for detail service. His sense of duty was such that he remained with the colors, and was in the thickest of the battle. In less than two hours nearly 33 per cent of the regiment who were in that engagement were killed or wounded, and he, among the others, was severely wounded. He was taken from the field, but was able to resume his place again in the ranks

Mr. Cranston is totally, stone blind; his wife a paralytic. She has just strength enough in her arms to pull herself about the room in a rolling chair. I saw these people last August. such as the one to which I have called attention, increased the before we were finally discharged.

I was in Pittsfield, Mass., on the occasion of the reunion of the regiment. I went to his quarters the day before to see him. It was a little bandbox of a place that he had rented, where he had a workshop just large enough to recane cane-bottom That vocation has been lost to him now, because a factory for that purpose has been established in the town, where that work can be done cheaper if not better.

Mr. Cranston is weak and feeble. I saw him there, as cheerful as a man could be under such circumstances, but he is 76 years old and his wife is 74 or 75 years old. They really should have the attendance of some other person, and they must soon have it, if they have not already had it provided for them since I saw them.

Mr. Cranston has no property whatever; he is dependent upon his pension; and I submit to every Senator present the proposition of how they would feel if in their youth they had given all they had to the country and now in their old age, when they really need attendance, had not the wherewithal even to feed and clothe themselves outside of Government pension.

At this reunion he was brought into the meeting. He is the chaplain of the regiment. He made a prayer in the opening. I never heard a more patriotic, a more God-loving, a more eloquent heart-reaching prayer in my life. It would have done justice to any clergyman and to the church had it been made in one of our populous city churches. He stood there, so thin that he could hardly make a shadow. His wife, of course, was holding herself in her little chair.

I know what the committee rule is, that $50 shall be the maximum granted, but we have raised that $50 in many cases in the past. It is said that it is an exception that proves the rule, and here is a case the like of which may not exist at all among the few patriots left of our Army. Certainly there can not be many. I submit that $72 is the amount that a blind man should have, and I move that this amount shall be made $72 instead of $50.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. Mr. President, I most deeply sympathize with the condition of this poor old soldier, as it has been described by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]. We have many distressing cases brought before the Committee on Pensions, and this surely is one which appeals to the sympathies of every right-minded man; but we have had to set a limit as to what we thought should be done, and that limit, as the Senator from Wyoming has stated, is $50 in cases where the soldier needs the care and attendance of another person and has had a long service. In the case of Mr. Cranston we thought we stretched that rule somewhat. His service was a little less than a year. We have considered the cases of soldiers with a service of two or three years who are paralytics—

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, may I say to the Senator that the services of Mr. Cranston were in full for the time for which he enlisted and nearly three months more? He was unable to reenlist in the Fifty-seventh Veteran Regiment, because his health would not permit.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. I appreciate that may have been the situation; but his service was really a little over 11 months. We have had before us the cases of many old soldiers who served two and three years who are blind and paralyzed; and we had the case of one a short time ago who had been bedridden for several years and unable to move himself, requiring the care and attendance of another person.

The committee felt that there would have to be a limit, and not only the present Committee on Pensions but, I think, the preceding committee have set that limit at $50; and we have not gone beyond that since I have been a member of the committee, I will say to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. WARREN. I think the committee has allowed $72 to those who were helpless.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. I have no recollection of any such case where more than $50 was allowed.

Mr. WARREN. It has been done many times.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. The Senator from Utah [Mr. Smoot] has served upon the committee a long time, and has The Senator from Utah [Mr. followed very carefully what we have done, and I think he will bear me out in saying that $50 has been the limit, and I have not known of any case where we have gone beyond that limit.

Mr. WARREN. I will say to the Senator that I do not wish to dispute his word at all, and he is no doubt correct as to the time since he has been chairman of the committee,; but it has been a long time since a case of this kind or anything like it has been brought up and passed upon by the committee. Of course, the limit that has been fixed is only a rule of the committee; but in times past-and I know whereof I speak and could state the cases here and have them go into the Record if it were necessary-the committee have in extreme cases, amount. While it is true that this man served less than a year, there is many a man who served three or five years who never was wounded as severely as Mr. Cranston was wounded in his service, and, as I have said, he has done everything in his power for his country, and he is now 76 years old, with a wife seventy-odd, and neither one of them can procure a living in any manner, being, as I understand it, without a dollar upon which to support themselves other than pension money. It seems to me that this country ought to be grateful enough to make it a little easier for this very deserving but unhappily situated couple during their remaining days.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. Mr. President, I wish to assure the Senator from Wyoming that I would be glad to accept the amendment he has offered if I felt that I could do so with justice to others. Upon the same page in the report-page 88-is the case of Martin V. B. Wyman, aged 81 years, a member of a New Hampshire regiment, whose length of service was 2 years, 9 months, and 29 days. As shown by medical and other testimony his condition was this:

Claimant is in a much worse condition and requires the constant aid and attendance of another person, by reason of umbilical and inguinal hernia, and entire loss of use of feet and hands, due to paralysis: that he has no property, means, nor income except his pension, which it is recommended be increased to $50 per month.

We have allowed $50 in that case although the claimant is 81 years old, with a service of nearly three years.

That lies parallel with the case I speak of, Mr. WARREN. except that, in addition, Mr. Cranston is blind and his wife is helpless. While it may be true that that does not bear in one sense upon the amount of pension he should receive, yet there is the condition. Not only is he absolutely without funds and helpless, but his wife of the early days, the woman he probably married before he went to the war, is in the distressing condition to which I have referred. I endeavored to speak with her, but her speech is very defective. I was not able to quite understand what she said, although I think her soldier husband himself does understand her. I hope the amendment may go in the bill, Mr. President.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, it may seem almost heartless upon the part of the members of the Pension Committee to ask that a plea such as that made by the Senator from Wyoming be not granted, but I have been on the Committee on Pensions now for 14 years, and in no case since I have been on that committee has there been a pension granted to a soldier above $50 where, of course, his blindness was not of service origin.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him? Mr. SMOOT. In just a moment. If the blindness case was of service origin, if the soldier had become blind because of a wound received in the Army while he was serving in it, under the law he would receive $72 a month, and he would not have to come to Congress for a special act.

I want to say again that if we allow this increase to this soldier there will be not one but there will be thousands of cases as to which the most pathetic stories can be told that mortal man can listen to. I know about these matters. I have heard people appear before the committee pleading for an increase of pension in cases where the soldier was totally helpless and under constant attendance night and day, and in no case, Mr. President, have we granted a pension above $50, unless the soldier required attendance constantly night and day. That is both the rule in the House and the rule in the Senate. This is a House bill and the pension allowed was $50. Therefore, Mr. President, while it may seem, as I have said, heartless on my part, I must be true to myself and true to the position that I have taken in the past, and I hope that the amendment will not be agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. But, Mr. President, this man must have a constant attendant for the remainder of his days. The Senator. who is usually correct, and means always to be correct, is not quite correct in saying that in 14 years there have not been exceptions made. The exceptions have usually been in the case of officers and the wives of officers rather than of enlisted men, but I want to say, Mr. President-

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator does not mean to say that I me that no officer of the Army had been allowed more than $50? The Senator does not mean to say that I meant

Mr. WARREN. Well, officers' wives, too. Mr. SMOOT. I know that that often happens.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator may be more liberal to officers and officers' wives than to enlisted men; it may be that I may be more sympathetic as to enlisted men, because I went to the war as an enlisted man, but this soldier did all that he could have done as an officer; he lived up to his duties and opportunities, and I think it is rather bad practice where we find people in want, as these two are, to pass them over because the claimant happened to be a private soldier, or noncommissioner officer, rather than a commissioned officer. I hope this amendment which I have offered will be accepted.

The Senator has referred to the pension he would be entitled to if his blindness had been occasioned by his service. man had been like many others who have received pensions, he would have received his first pension on the ground that his blindness was due to injury received in the service. He is a man, if I may use the term, who is almost overconscientious. He is one of those men of whom we sometimes use the expression, "he stands so straight that he tips over backward" those men that hesitated to state what his friends might state for him, that they could perhaps trace the disability back to his service. But be that as it may, his condition is at present as I have stated. He has naturally but a short time to live. His wife is in the condition that I have stated. I do not know but that already the kind friends have employed some attendants; but if attendants are not there already they must be soon, unless the grim reaper shall intervene.

I hope the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I know that the Senator from Utah [Mr. Smoot] means to be just. He is always just, I believe. I disagree with him in many ways, but I think he is just. But I confess that my heart was touched as sat and listened to the story told by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. Warren], and then the other case, cited in comparison by the Senator from Maine [Mr. Johnson], of the poor old man from New Hampshire. One got $50 a month and in the case of the other an increase to seventy-five is being pleaded for.

I shall wind up my career here in a few weeks; and it would be the greatest gratification in the world to me to do full and utter and absolute justice as an American representative in this sad situation to these two old soldiers. I should like to put them both on a $75 pension roll, if that were possible.

Mr. THOMAS (from his seat). Why not make it a hundred? Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. No; I do not say make it a hundred. I know men may argue in that way. from Colorado is just as sympathetic as I am, but I do feel that this is a crying and a touching case. I should like to see the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wyoming adopted, and I have no worry or fear about there being thousands and There will not be any thousands of such cases coming to us. thousands. These men are all old. They are old men, and almost a breath will carry them away. I shall vote with the greatest relish for the amendment offered by the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. Mr. President, I am afraid the Senator from New Jersey does not stand correctly, if he thinks that in the New Hampshire case the amount allowed was $75. It was $50 a month in each case, and that is the limit.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I know, but I understood that-

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. And if the Senator would read this bill through he would find many more distressing cases. Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I know there are some,

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. And the Senator would find that the limit in all of them has been $50. If we should amend this bill now by increasing that amount I feel very sure that the House never would agree to it, and it would not be just to the Members of the Senate. In no case, no matter how distressing, have we gone beyond the $50. We thought it was necessary to have a limit. We can not go into distinctions between these extreme cases. When we found an old man who was helpless and had to have the care and attendance of another person, and he had a good Army record, good service, we have given him $50 as a maximum, and stopped there. The House has had that rule, and we have had that rule.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Well, it need not be a rigorous, hard and fast rule. It seems to me that where there is a condition as sad as that which has been depicted we ought to have reason and fairness and, I feel, justice enough to make a discrimination in this case. I know that the New Hampshire soldier was given $50, as the Senator states, but I would gladly vote $25 additional for him.

I realize what money it is. I know. I have earned every dollar I have by struggle and hard knocks. I have no desire to fritter away the public money; but we sit here and vote, almost flippantly, millions of dollars on projects the benefit of which is so remote as to be almost intangible. Here is a crying case of need brought almost to our very doors, and I shall vote with the greatest relish for the amendment offered by the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, having served on the Committee on Pensions, and having served as chairman of the committee for a good many years, and having had something to do with making the rules that govern the committee of the Senate and the committee of the House, I realize the difficulties that confront the committee in dealing with these cases; and yet during my service on that committee, notwithstanding the fact that I had the rule to justify what I did, I was overruled more than once when a case was extreme and a plea was made for the soldier by a Member of this body.

The committee have a rule that they will not allow more than $50 to the widow of an officer who has died not as a result of disease contracted in the service; yet when Mrs. Sternberg's case came here the rule had been applied; she was allowed $50, and on my motion, after making a statement as to Gen. Sternberg's great service as Surgeon General of the Army and his scientific attainments, the Senate kindly voted to increase that to $100. It went to the House, where their rule was likewise operative, and yet they yielded the point in that case and allowed Mrs. Sternberg $100 a month, which she is now receiving. So that it is not a hard and fast rule.

I do think, Mr. President, that when a Member of this body enlisted as a young man with a companion, fought side by side with him and witnessed the wound that was inflicted in a charge that was historic in a sense we might well at least amend this amount to $72 and send it to the House for the consideration of the House. It will likely go to conference at best; and if the committee still insist that their rule is an inflexible one, of course it will not be waived.

I dislike exceedingly to put myself in the attitude of opposition to the committee, because I know how justly the committee acts, and I know how kind-hearted the chairman of the committee is. Nevertheless, if a vote is taken on this matter I shall vote to increase this man's pension to $72, in the hope that the committee may be waived in this case, and if there are similar cases I would vote in favor of every one of them when they were presented to the Senate for consideration.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I recall the case to which the Senator from New Hampshire refers, and I was one of the Members of the Senate who voted for the increase in pension. That was a case, however, standing by litself, as it were. There was but one Gen. Sternberg, and but one record of that sort with which to deal.

The chairman has called attention to the fact that the precedent set in a case like this is one which would inevitably prompt a repetition of these requests, and we shall, before we know it, have established a new rule for special pensions-the $75 rule in place of $50.

I believe I am as sympathetic as any Member of this body, but of course the principle upon which pensions are granted is not one of sympathy. It is one of merit. I think, in view of what the chairman of the committee has said with regard to the consequence of the precedent which would be established by this application, in which the senior member of the committee on the Republican side so heartily concurs, that we ought not to grant this increase. I do not want to object to the consideration of this bill, and I do not intend to if I can

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I want to assure the Senator that there have been a number of cases heretofore where the enlisted men have been recognized in the way I say. the first time I have ever asked anything of the kind, but it does seem to me as if, in a case like this, so closely associated with myself, I could not let the occasion pass by without putting this man on a basis upon which many others have been put.

Mr. THOMAS. I am not criticizing the Senator from Wyoming in the slightest degree. On the contrary, I am disposed to concur in and grant any and everything that the Senator wants here, so far as I can; but I shrink from setting this precedent, which the chairman of the committee himself declares is a precedent and a new one, and in which the Senator from Utah concurs. Consequently, I must object to the consideration of this bill if we are to entertain amendments of this character. I do not want to do it.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, to be perfectly frank, I want to say that there was one case in which the Senate, at the earnest solicitation of the late Senator Bradley, of Kentucky, granted an increase from $50 to $60, but that went into conference, the House refused to agree to it, and the amount was put back at $50. So, as far as the action of the Senate is concerned, I want to be perfectly fair in stating just what the Senate has done; and it did that at the earnest solicitation of Senator Bradley, of Kentucky.

Mr. WARREN. I will say to the Senator from Utah that similar action was taken in a number of cases before the one the Senator speaks about in connection with Senator Bradley, some of which were agreed to by the House in conference, and some were not.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator claim that there are cases of private soldiers who have been granted, by special act of Congress, more than $50 a month?

Mr. WARREN. Why, certainly; certainly. Mr. SMOOT. I mean within 12 or 14 years?

Mr. GALLINGER. I can assure the Senator from Utah that there are a good many, but they antedated the time when the Senator from Utah became a member of the committee.

is no doubt about that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Wyoming to increase the amount from $50 to $72.

The amendment was agreed to on a division.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I shall be obliged to object to the further consideration of the bill.

Mr. CURTIS. I hope the Senator will not do that.
Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I dislike very much to see my friend, the Senator from Colorado, take that course. I know my poor blind friend would not wish to impede this bill because of the hundreds of others interested in it. He would not see others deprived of their pensions because of this action in increasing his pension. I hope the Senator will not take that course. I do not think he himself would feel right about it afterwards

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that objection is made to the further consideration of the bill.

Mr. WARREN. Does the Senator insist upon the objection? Mr. THOMAS. I do.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I am not going to let an amendment of mine stand against the other poor men that need pensions. I know that my unselfish friend Cranston would not wish me to do it. I regret-I regret very much-that the Senator from Colorado should feel as he does about it. I am willing to withdraw the amendment rather than see other pensioners suffer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the vote by which the amendment was adopted will be reconsidered. The question now recurs upon the amendment.

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator insists upon his objection. rather than have this bill defeated I am going to withdraw the amendment, if I am permitted to do so.

Mr. THOMAS. Then I withdraw the objection to the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Wyoming has been withdrawn. The bill is still in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. Mr. President, I have certain amendments, made necessary because some of the claimants have died since the bill was introduced.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments will be

The Secretary. On page 25, strike out lines 11, 12, 13, and 14, relative to Frederic Brunner.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary. On page 26, strike out lines 19, 20, 21, and 22, relative to Henry O. Nickerson.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 8120) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and of wars other than the Civil War, and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I ask that the bill go over, Mr. President.

Mr. SMOOT. This is a Civil War pension bill. Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. No.

Mr. SMOOT. It is to pension soldiers of the Regular Army and Navy

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection having been made, the bill will be passed over.

S. SPENCER CARR.

The bill (H. R. 10697) for the relief of S. Spencer Carr was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes that in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, S. Spencer Carr, who was a first lieutenant of Company B, Eighth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been discharged honorably from the military service of the United States, as a first lieutenant of said com-pany and regiment, on the 18th day of September, 1864, provided that no bounty, pay, or allowances shall be held as accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE L. MORRISON.

The bill (S. 7906) to authorize the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint George L. Morrison captain of Cavalry, to take rank as such next after Capt. James A. Mars, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, on page 1, line 8, after the word "rank," to strike out "as such next after Capt. James A. Mars" and to insert "at the foot of the lineal list of captains of Cavso as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That subject to the examination required for promotion to the grade of captain of Cavalry, the President of the United States, in his discretion, be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, George L. Morrison, formerly a first lieutenant of Cavalry, a captain of Cavalry; and that no back pay or allowances shall accrue as a result of the passage of this act, and there shall be no increase in the total number of captains of Cavalry now authorized by law by reason of the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to authorize the President of the United States to appoint George L. Morrison a captain of Cavalry.

Mr. POMERENE. The report in that case is very short, and for the information of Senators I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, that may be done.

The report submitted by Mr. BECKHAM February 7, 1917, from the Committee on Military Affairs, is as follows:

[S. Rept. No. 1012, 64th Cong., 2d sess.]
Mr. BECKHAM, from the Committee on Military Affairs, submitted the

[S. Rept. No. 1012, 64th Cong., 2d sess.]

Mr. Beckham, from the Committee on Military Affairs, submitted the following report:

The Committee on Military Affairs has had under consideration the bill (S. 7906) to authorize the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint George L. Morrison captain of Cavalry, to take rank as such next after Capt. James A. Mars, and report the same back to the Senate with amendments, and as thus amended recommend that the bill do pass.

George L. Morrison was born in Ohio August 31, 1881; was appointed a cadet at the United States Military Academy from Virginia June 13, 1899; was graduated from the Military Academy June 11, 1903, and assigned to the Fifth Cavalry; promoted to be first lieutenant of the same regiment March 11, 1911; resigned his commission in the Army August 31, 1915.

From graduation to the time of submitting his resignation, with the exception of detached service at the Mounted Service School and absence on account of sickness, he was continuously on duty with the regiment, serving consecutively in Arizona, Colorado, Arizona, New Mexico, Hawail, border duty in Arizona, and Fort Myer. Severe work at the Mounted Service School; the responsibilities of a member of a small command in Hawaii from January, 1909, to April, 1912, during the fense situation between Japan and this country; duty along the Mexican border from April, 1913, to January, 1914, and in command of a section of the American line during six months of that time; and duty at Fort Myer from January, 1914, to April, 1915, produced a state of nervous depletion such that when in March or April, 1915, he was detached for topographical work at Belvoir, Va., at the time of the sinking of the Lusitania and the accompanying disturbances, a complete mental and physical breakdown occurred. The unbroken drainage on his nervous vitality had been so great that rest accomplished nothing. He passed through a stage of irresponsibility which grew continuously worse up to

JAMES S. HUNTINGTON.

The bill (S. 6638) for the relief of James S. Huntington was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill was reported adversely by the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

Mr. WARREN. I am going to ask my friend from Colorado if he will not let me again call up the bill (H. R. 19937) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War, and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was ordered to a third reading and passed, and then I wish to offer the amendment which I formerly withdrew.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wyoming asks unanimous consent to recur to House bill 19937.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I understood the Senator from Wyoming to withdraw his amendment and that the bill was passed.

Mr. WARREN. I did so, and I did it on the ground that I did not want to be selfish and because an objection to the matter that I advocated would destroy-the chances of the balance of the bill.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not think we ought to go above $50. I have not made an objection to either of these measures, because I knew that was the limit. When we get beyond, how can we discriminate? If there was but one case and that was the case of the Senator from Wyoming, of course I would vote for it.

Mr. WARREN. They do not come up often. As I said, this is the first case where I have ever asked the Senate to go beyond the committee. I am not sure this will get beyond the conference. I very much hope the Senator will not object, but allow it to go to conference, where I hope it may be sustained. Of course there is no certainty of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wyoming asks unanimous consent to recur to the bill. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and without objection the vote by which the bill was ordered to a third reading and passed will be reconsidered. The bill is in the Senate and open to amendment.

Mr. WARREN. On page 46, line 1, I move to amend the amount, raising it from $50 to $72.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection—
Mr. SMITH of Georgia. There is objection to the amendment. I merely want the Senate record to show that the amendment does not go on without objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Wyoming.

On a division, the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time

OFFENSES AGAINST THE GOVERNMENT.

The bill (S. 6813) to prohibit and punish the willful making of untrue statements under oath to influence the acts or conduct of a foreign Government, or to defeat any measure of the Government of the United States in a dispute or controversy with any foreign nation, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Beginning with this Order of Business No. 907, down to and including Order of Business No. 920, are the bills that were reported by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. Overman] from the Committee on the Judiciary, and there is now pending a bill covering all these measures.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will consider that an objection has been made,

Mr. GALLINGER. The bills will go over.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bills will go over, down to and including Senate bill 6819, Order of Business No. 920.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. I ask unanimous consent to recur to the bill (S. 8120) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and of wars other than the Civil War, and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors. The bill was passed over on the objection of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. Smith], but I think he will not insist on his objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Maine?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I understand from the Senator from Maine that these are cases of injury of service origin, and I not only do not object to them but I believe in them thoroughly. Mr. SMOOT. I wish to tell the Senator there are also some widows' pensions included.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. But they grew out of actual service, and I do not object. On the contrary, I find it is a character of pension to which I give my cordial support.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

It proposes to pension the following persons at the rates

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATIONS.

The bill (H. R. 19410) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. That, of course, will go over. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

ALFRED CLUFF AND OTHERS.

The bill (S. 3771) for the relief of Alfred Cluff, Orson Cluff, Henry E. Norton, William B. Ballard, Elijah Hancock, Susan

R. Saline, Oscar Mann, Celia Thayne, William Cox, Theodore Farley, Adelaide Laxton, Clara L. Tenney, George M. Adams, Charlotte Jensen, and Sophia Huff was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments.

The first amendment was, on page 1, line 6, to strike out "$5,000" and insert "$2,500," so as to read:

To Alfred Cluff, of Mesa, Ariz., $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 7, to strike out "$6,000" and insert "$3,000," so as to read:

To Orson Cluff, of Mesa, Ariz., $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to. The next amendment was, in line 8, to strike out "$10,000" and insert "$5,000," so as to read:

To Henry E. Norton, of Pima, Ariz., $5,000.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia, I understand that this is a bill of a nature which ought to have gone to the Committee on Claims; that these are claims against the Government.

Mr. ASHURST. It is a bill over which the Committee on Indian Affairs has jurisdiction for the reason that the claims arose because of the exclusion of certain persons from land which the Government claimed to be an Indian reservation but which was subsequently ascertained to be public land.

The bill was introduced by myself in the Sixty-third Congress and in the Sixty-fourth Congress and was referred to the Committee on Claims. Learning, however, that that committee did not have the appropriate jurisdiction and that it was not the appropriate committee, after a year's time I moved in open Senate, and the Senate ordered the bill to be recalled from the Committee on Claims and sent to the Committee on Indian Affairs, together with all the papers thereon.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. What is the amount involved?

Mr. ASHURST. The amount recommended to be paid by the ommittee is $66,500 to 17 different persons.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Will the Senator state, just in a general way, the nature of the claims?

Mr. ASHURST. I will take two or three minutes and do so.

I have before me, Mr. President, a map of the then Territory of Arizona issued by the Government in 1879. I ask the especial attention of Senators to the question of the map. The Indian attention of Senators to the question of the map. The Indian reservations, according to this map, are indicated thereon by pale pink. This was the official Government map issued by the United States Government in 1879, the only map in existence. It was the official map used in the War Department, in the Interior Department, and in all the branches and bureaus thereof.

Seventeen families in 1878, 1879, 1880, and 1881 settled at a point about 10 miles above what appeared on the map to be public lands. The Indian reservation by proclamation of President Grant and the Indian reservation by the map also showed that this settlement was not upon an Indian reservation, but was on public lands. The settlers commenced in 1878, built homes, opened farms of value, raised crops, and they had a smiling little village there. Some coal was discovered near by and some miners went in there, but the settlers did not attempt to mine any of the coal.

The War Department, in my judgment, arbitrarily and unjustly excluded these people from what was public land, drove them away from their homes in the wintertime, and did not even permit these 17 families to take their cattle or their other stock. The families lost all their investment there, so the Secretary of the Interior says in his report. The place was then called Apache Springs.

I want Senators to examine this map and to watch parallel 34 and meridian 130 where they converge [indicating]. You will find here [indicating] Apache Springs, which was, according to the President's proclamation and according to the map, not an Indian reservation but public land.

I have also a map which was sent to the committee by the Secretary of the Interior. This map contains the red line which the Secretary of the Interior marked, and in his report he says that the red dotted line indicates what was then regarded as the north boundary line of the reservation, that the War Department excluded these settlers; that later by some kind of triangulation the department took the view that this land was an Indian reservation.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Has there been any hearing before the Court of Claims as to the value of the property that they lost?

Mr. ASHURST. No; there was no hearing, but the Senate committee adds an amendment here in substance as follows:

Provided, however, That the Secretary of the Treasury shall make no payment hereunder until the Secretary of the Interior shall first ascertain what damages, if any, were occasioned, and, secondly, how much, if any, damages were occasioned.

That amendment was made by the committee.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It is referred, then, to the Secretary of the Interior to ascertain——

Mr. ASHURST. To ascertain upon the facts what damages occurred, if any; secondly, if any occurred, how much. That is the committee amendment. The precedent for that was established in a case which arose near by in the year 1900. The Government believed that it ought to have certain coal lands that belonged to the white settlers on that reservation. So an act

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I am familiar with references to the Interior Department to ascertain the value of land improperly taken from settlers by the Government. The bill appropriates $66,500 or so much thereof as may be necessary under the findings of the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. ASHURST. That is the intent. We may not have used the appropriate language. I have no objection to an amendment of that sort, but that is certainly the intent of the bill.

If the Senator will look at the last page of the bill he will ascertain that we attempted at least to provide that no money should be paid unless and until the Secretary ascertained as a substantial fact by an investigation de novo how much damages if any, were occasioned, and further that the damages ascertained and the amount to be paid are equitable and in proportion to the losses sustained, if any.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The amendment reads as follows—
Mr. ASHURST. I wish the Senator would read it.

Mr. SHAFROTH (reading)-

Mr. SHAFROTH (reading)—

Provided, however, That the Secretary of the Treasury shall make no payment to any of the above-named persons, or to their personal representatives, for any of said losses and damages sustained by reason of the eviction and expulsion of said persons from said lands until and unless the Secretary of the Interior shall have ascertained and determined that in his opinion and judgment the amounts proposed to be paid to the said above-named persons for such loss and damage aforementioned are fair, just, equitable, and in proportion to the losses and damages sustained by the above-named persons.

Lebelly like to said the Secretar free Ariense.

I should like to ask the Senator from Arizona a question.

Mr. ASHURST. Certainly. Mr. SHAFROTH. Does the Secretary of the Interior approve this?

Mr. ASHURST. He does. Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I am familiar with a number of references of this character to the Interior Department. Those with which I am familiar, however, simply called attention to certain classes of claims and directed the Secretary of the Interior to determine the extent of their loss and after that had been determined to report the same to Congress for the consideration of Congress, and then the appropriation bill followed a prior finding by the Interior Department.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I suggest to the Senator that in this case we have cut the claims of these persons 50 per cent now. That about the amount, is it not?

Mr. ASHURST. Yes, sir. Let me say, briefly—
Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Suppose the Interior Department should find that they are entitled to recover, but that they are not entitled to the amount herein provided for under your bill, would he proceed to pay the amount that he had found?

Mr. ASHURST. He would. He would have that authority under the bill.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I have no further objection to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. ASHURST. I think I ought to answer specifically the question propounded by the Senator from Colorado. I will read only a few lines from the report of the Secretary of the Interior. It is dated February 24, 1916, and is addressed to the chairman of the Committee on Claims, and was sent to the Committee on Indian Affairs by the order of the Senate:

Committee on Indian Affairs by the order of the Senate:

The difficulty of these settlers may be explained by the fact that the northern line of the reservation was not, apparently, based originally on actual official surveys, but was only approximated. The maps prepared in the General Land Office in 1879 and 1883 show the northern boundary to lie considerably south of the boundary line as shown on the present map of Arizona. The record shows that a survey was made by the War Department in 1882-1883 to settle disputes between the Indians and the settlers, and that it was about this time that complaints were received in the Indian Office relative to the location of the line so as to include the settlement at Forest Dale or Apache Springs. It appears, therefore, that this survey, by definitely locating the northern boundary line of the reservation as established in 1871 (which line had theretofore been approximated only) took in the settlement of Forest Dale and caused the damage complained of.

He concludes by saying:

He concludes by saying:

However, it is quite possible that these settlers might be morally entitled to some relief, and, if so, I would have no objection thereto.

In other words, I am appealing only to the legislative conscience for legislative equity. I ask that the report of the committee be incorporated in the RECORD.

The report referred to is as follows:

The report referred to is as follows:

Mr. ASHURST, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, submitted the following report:

On page 3, after the word "destroyed," in line 12, insert the following:

"Provided, however. That the Secretary of the Treasury shall make no payment to any of the above-named persons, or to their personal representatives, for any of said losses and damages sustained by reason of the eviction and expulsion of said persons from said lands until and unless the Secretary of the Interior shall have ascertained and determined that in his opinion and judgment the amounts proposed to be paid to the said above-named persons for such loss and damage aforementioned are fair, just, equitable, and in proportion to the losses and damages sustained by the above-named persons."

The persons seeking relief settled upon certain lands in Arizona during the latter seventies and early eighties; that is to say, from 1876 to 1882. It developed that the lands upon which they had located were upon the San Carlos Indian Reservation, as shown by a resurvey and addition thereto made during the year 1883. Their settlements were made at and near a place called Forest Dale, in what was Apache County, then Territory of Arizona, each settler choosing a 160-acre tract of land of the public domain of the United States. At that time none of the land had been surveyed.

The first so-called designation of the White Mountain or San Carlos Reservation was by H. M. Robert, major of Engineers, in a letter dated January 31, 1870, at San Francisco, Cal., addressed to Gen. Whipple, Adjutant General Military Division of the Pacific, as follows:

Engineer's Office.

HEADQUARTERS MILITARY DIVISION OF THE PACIFIC,
San Francisco, Cal., January 31, 1870.

Sin: I respectfully forward the following description of the proposed Indian reservation in Arizona, the boundaries of the reservation to be as follows, as shown in red on the accompanying map: Starting at the point of intersection of the boundary between New Mexico and Arizona with the south edge of the Black Mesa, and following the southern edge of the Black Mesa to a point due north of Sombrero or Plumoso Butte; then in the direction of the Picacho Colorado to the crest of the Apache Mountains following said crest down the Salt River to Pinal Creek, and then up the Pinal Creek to the top of the Pinal Mountains; then following the crest of the Pinal Range "the Cordilleras de la Gila," the "Almagra Mountains," and other mountains bordering the north bank of the Gila River to the New Mexico boundary near Steeple Rock; then following said boundary north to its intersection with the south edge of the Black Mesa, the starting point.

H. M. ROBERT,

H. M. ROBERT, Major, Engineers.

Gen. W. D. Whipple.

Gen. W. D. Whipple.

Adjutant General Military Division of the Pacific.

The map mentioned by Maj. Robert does not appear to be in existence. The first survey of this reservation appears to have been made in 1876, and shows that the lands upon which the claimants settled was situated about 8 miles north of the north line of the reservation.

The map issued by the Government in 1879 shows this survey, and the location of Forest Dale (or Apache Springs) is shown to be north of the reservation about 8 miles.

Seventeen families settled upon the land in the vicinity of Apache Springs, calling the locality "Forest Dale." The settlers, in the order of their location, respectively, were as follows:

1. William E. Cox, who in January, 1878, settled upon 160 acres of land when he was 21 years of age. Mr. Cox cultivated 40 acres of the land for two years, raising crops sufficient for the support of himself and family. He made improvements upon the land to the value of $5,000.

2. William Laxton settled upon 160 acres of said land on February 1, 1878, with his wife, Adelaide Laxton, when he was 65 years of age, and he cultivated 60 acres of the land; growing crops thereon, and made improvements to the amount of $2,000. William Laxton died in 1890 and is survived by his widow, Adelaide Laxton.

3. David Edward Adams, who in February, 1878, settled upon 160 acres when he was 26 years of age, Mr. Adams cultivated 60 acres of the land for three years, raising crops sufficient to support his family and to furnish corn to the troops at Fort Apache. He made improvements to the value of $15,000.

4. Warren R. Tenney settled upon 160 acres on March 1, 1878, with his wife, Clare L. Tenney, who now survives him, when he was 54 years of age, and cultivated 40 acres of the land and made improvements to the value of $10,000. Warren R. Tenney died in 1889 and is survived by Clare L. Tenney.

5. Theodore Farley in the spring of 1878 settled upon 160 acres when he was of the age of 21 years. He cultivated 30 acres of ily, consisting of his wife and children. He made improvements to the value of $5,000, consisting of residence, outhouses, farmhouses, and ily, consisting of his wife and children. He made improvements to the value of $5,000, consisting of residence, outhouses, farmhouses, and fences.

6. Oscar Mann, who in the spring of 1878 settled upon 160 acres of land, when he was 38 years of age. Mr. Mann cultivated between 25 and 50 acres of the land for three seasons, raising crops sufficient for the support of himself and his family, consisting of a wife and eight children. He made improvements to the value of $5,000.

7. Peter H. McBride, who, on July 3, 1878, located 160 acres when he was 28 years of age. Mr. McBride cultivated 25 acres of the land for two seasons, raising crops sufficient for the support of himself and his family. He made improvements to the value of $10,000.

8. Orson Cluff, who, on February 1, 1880, settled upon 160 acres when he was 35 years of age. Mr. Cluff cultivated 80 acres of said land for two seasons, raising crops thereon sufficient for the support of himself and family. He made improvements to the value of $6,000.

9. Henry E. Norton, who, on February 15, 1880, settled upon 160 acres of said land for one season, raising crops sufficient for the support of himself and family. He made improvements to the value of $6,000.

10. Joseph Thayne, who, on March 1, 1880, settled upon 160 acres when he was 25 years of age. Mr. Thayne cultivated 80 acres of land for two seasons, raising crops thereon sufficient to support himself and family. He made improvements to the value of $10,000. Mr. Thayne is now dead and is survived by his wife, Celia Thayne.

11. Peter J. Jensen, who, on March 11, 1880, settled upon 160 acres when he was 58 years of age, cultivating 80 acres thereof, and supporting his family and made improvements to the value of $10,000. He is survived by his widow, Charlotte Jensen, who makes the proof by affidavit, Mr. Jensen having died April 16, 1893.

12. Alfred Cluff, who, on Pebruary 28, 1881, settled upon 40 acres of land when he was 37 years of age, cultivating 80 acres thereof and supporting his family and make imp widow, Susan R. Saline, who makes proof of the loss. She is the claimant.

16. William B. Ballard, February 15, 1882, settled upon 40 acres of this land. He cultivated 15 acres of land and made extensive improvements. He was 50 years old at the time of making the entry; that when he abandoned the property the improvements, crops, and other accretions and additions amounted to $7,000.

17. Elljah Hancock, on February 15, 1882, located 160 acres when he was 38 years of age. He cultivated 35 acres of the land, had growing crops, and made improvements, such as houses, fences, and barns, to the value of $12,000.

The map of 1879 bears out the contention of the claimants that the north boundary line was south of their settlements. It is a plat outlining the reservation with reference to the general lines of the State of Arlzona. It shows the settlements made as being north and west of the Prieto Plateau or Black Mesa. All of the settlers made their locations with the intention of making regular applictaion to the Land Office when the ground should be identified by Government surveys. All of them were citizens of the United States and entitled under the law to make such entries at that time. The locations were honestly made for the purpose of creating a home in each case for the settler and his family. The settlements were made with the full approval and consent of the commanding officer of the adjacent military post at Fort Apache, Ariz.

About the 1st day of December, 1882, the boundary line of the reservation was extended north about 10 miles arbitrarily, and Lieut. Gatewood or some other military officer stationed at Fort Apache dispossessed all the settlers from their land. The land was abandoned by the claimants, together with all property, they being evicted from the same.

Shortly after the notice to vacate their property the settlers, through Mr. George Lake, addressed a communication to Delegate G. H. Oury, of Arizona, who referred the protest to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. The reply of the commissioner, dated January 30, 1883, is as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 30, 1883.

Hon. G. H. Oury,

House of Representatives.

Sign: This office is in receipt by your reference of a letter from Mr. George Lake, of Forest Dale, Apache County, Arizona Territory, dated December 26, 1882, protesting against the removal of himself and other settlers from certain lands occupied and cultivated by them at Forest Dale. He states that there are about 25 families settled in that vicinity; that they went upon the lands with the understanding that they were not intruding upon the Indian reservation, having been so assured by the "proper authorities"; that they have made valuable improvements there, etc.; and that they have recently been ordered away by "a lieutenant having charge of the Indians at this (that) point," and that if the boundary of the reservation is determined to be where the as yet unfinished surveys (recently in progress) would seem to indicate the lands occupied by them will fall within the reservation, which would prove very disastrous to the settlers.

In reply I have to say that during last summer information reached this office through the War Department of threatened trouble between the whites and Indians growing out of a disputed boundary question on the northern line of the White Mountain Reservation—the Indians claiming that the lands about Forest Dale are within their reservation, in which view, it is understood, they were supported by the military, while the whites claimed they were not within the reservation of this office that there were no funds available for the purpose the War Department, at the request of this department, gave instructions to the proper military officers for the execution of the notice was given by letter to this department of June 23, 1882.

This office has not been advised as to how far the work has been pushed, but it is inferred from the statement of your correspondent that the surveys have gone far enough to indicate that the lands occupied by him and the others in whose interest he writes are within the limits of the reservation.

him and the others in whose interest he writes are within the limits of the reservation.

I can only say that if it has been or shall hereafter be demonstrated by the official survey, for it is presumed the work has been discontinued for the winter, that these people have settled upon the reservation, there is no help for them but to remove. The reservation was set apart for the exclusive use of the Indians long before the settlers went in there, according to their own statement, and if they have ventured to settle upon unsurveyed lands, and have expended time and money in improving the same, without ascertaining positively whether they were encroaching upon Indian lands, when they knew very well they were very likely to be in error in that respect, it is their own misfortune, for which they have no one to blame but themselves.

The Indians of that reservation have learned to be very sensitive in regard to their boundaries. The reservation has been cut down no less than five times within the past 10 years, and during the last few years their peace of mind has been almost constantly disturbed by the encroachments of settlers on their southern and western line.

As is well known to you, bills are now pending in Congress providing for a change in the boundaries of the reservation. What action may be taken, of course, can not be premised, but it is proper to say that as long as the reservation remains as it is it will be the duty of the Government to expel intruders wheresoever they may be found.

Very respectfully,

H. Price, Commissioner.

H. PRICE, Commissioner.

Meanwhile, on January 4, 1883, Mr. H. D. Norton, hereinbefore mentioned as the ninth in point of seniority in the settlement at Forest Dale, wrote to the Secretary of the Interior, as follows:

FOREST DALE, OR APACHE SPRINGS, January 4, 1883.

To his honor the SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

Forest Dale, or Apache Springs, January 4, 1883.

To his honor the Secterary of the Interiors.

Sir: We, the settlers of Apache Springs, Apache County, Arizona Territory, having settled in here 12 months ago, supposing that we were some 8 miles north of the reservation line. Having the assurance of Gen. Carr, then in command at Fort Apache, that we were not on the reserve and that he would protect us in settling said land, and we settled here in good faith, and we also have the assurance of the sectionizing engineer that we were not on the reservation. We hold his plats ready for entry. With these assurances we have done a vast amount of labor, and now we have been ordered away from our improvements and homes in dead of winter, and we now apply to you for redress, as we doubt this being your orders to run the line around us; we feel that we are being wronged by the influence around us. If these are your orders for the benefit of the Indians, we humbly submit there are some 25 families in here and 5 more on the Apache Road south, and we now want to know through your office if we are to be deprived of our real and fixed property without remuneration. We understand from the engineer running this line that he has abandoned the line somewhere near the northwest corner until spring, and also says that if it is agreeable that he can leave us off and run it on the line of official map. As there seems to be an understanding in regard to the line, the citizen has no other guide but the official map. We have paid taxes on this property and we feel we should have remuneration if we have to leave it, as we are ordered away by Lieut. Gatewood at Fort Apache. And we understand that there are other white men to take possession to a limited extent of our property. Are we compelled to leave before the time the lines are run, as our time is short? We wish a speedy reply to this communication. If this is misdirected, please forward it to the proper tribunal.

All communications should be directed to Forest Dale, via Show Low, Apac

H. D. NORTON, Corresponding Secretary.

On February 2, 1883, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs replied officially to Mr. Norton in substantially the terms of his communication of January 30, 1883, to Mr. Oury. The commissioner also states:

"Some time last summer (1882) information reached this office through the War Department of a dispute between the Indians and settlers as to the location of the northern boundary line of the reservation. The military officers urged the importance of a survey of the line in order to settle the dispute, and upon the representation of this office that there were no funds at its disposal for that purpose, the War Department, at the request of this department, directed the survey to be made."

The report of the Commission of Indian Affairs for the year 1882, at page 48, contains the following statement:

"In the early part of last year valuable deposits of coal were discovered within the limits of what is generally known as the San Carlos Division of the White Mountain Indian Reservation, in Arizona Territory. Owing to the scarcity of wood or other fuel in that section of Arizona, the news of the discoveries created intense excitement, and speculators, miners, and prospectors poured in upon the reservation, thereby greatly endangering the peace of the Territory. No serious trouble occurred, however, and by the exercise of prompt and vigorous measures the reservation was finally cleared of intruders and tranquility restored."

On page 44 of his report for the year 1883 the commissioner also measures the reservation was finally cleared of intruders and tranquility restored."

On page 44 of his report for the year 1883 the commissioner also refers to the location of coal mines upon the reservation. On page 37 of his report for 1884 reference is made to the reservation and the fact that two persons be sent to investigate the value of such coal deposits. At page 46 of the report of the Indian Office for 1885 the commissioner states that the experts sent to examine the coal fields had reported (S. Doc. No. 20, 48th Cong., 2d sess.) that the coal fields were of doubtful value.

On pages 3-4 of the report of Mr. Bannon and Prof. C. D. Walcott (S. Ex. Doc. No. 20, 48th Cong., 2d sess.), the following appears:

"The Indian agent, Tiffany, at the San Carlos Agency, notified the miners that they were within the limits of the reservations, by posting notices dated March 4, 1881, on the trails leading to the mines, on the works about the mines, and also had the notice read to passers. This did not deter the prospectors, and the work of development went on until——, 1883, when they were removed, by order of the Department of the Interior, by the military under Gen. Crook."

The military action which evicted the prospectors was also extended beyond the then known limits of the reservation to the north and farmers who had settled upon the public domain were included in the general proscription. Thus the claimants under this bill were deprived of their rights upon territory justly regarded as being open to entry, through no fault of their own.

This bill was submitted to the Secretary of the Interior, and in his report of February 24, 1916, he says:

"The difficulty of these settlers may be explained by the fact that the northern line of the reservation was not, apparently, based originally on actual official surveys, but was only approximated. The maps prepared in the General Land Office in 1879 and 1883 show the northern boundary to lie considerably south of the boundary line as shown on the present map of Arizona. The record shows that a survey was made by the War Department in 1882-83 to settle disputes between the Indians and the settlers, and that it was about this time that complaints were received in the Indian Office relative to the location of the line so as to include the settlement at Forest Dale or Apache Springs. It appears therefore that this survey, by definitely locating the northern boundary line of the reservation as established in 1871 (which line had theretofore been approximated only) took in the settlement of Forest Dale and caused the damage complained of."

The Secretary further says:

"However, it is quite possible that these settlers might be morally entitled to some relief, and if so, I would have no objection thereto."

The total amount of these claims is $133,000. It is recommended by this committee that the sums claimed by each of the claimants be adjusted by payment of one-half the sum claimed as being justly due, in full compensation for the loss sustained. All of the claimants, or their representatives, having knowledge of the facts.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator from Arizona if

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator from Arizona if this is not a typical case that should go to the Court of Claims? The Senator reads from the Secretary of the Interior, who in a very cautious way has committed himself to the bill. Then it provides that the Secretary of the Interior shall determine the equities and fairness of these claims. It looks to me like sending it to a judge who has already looked into it. It does seem to me that it ought to go to the Court of Claims for fair consideration by that court, which is appointed for this very

Mr. ASHURST. Let me say to the distinguished Senator the Secretary of the Interior has abundant facilities now in the way of inspectors and other persons, and he is equipped to make a speedy investigation, and I think can get results. If the inspectors or other authorities find that no damage was in fact done, then of course this legislation is rendered null and void. They were all excluded, but if he should find that their losses and damages were only a part of what the committee has found, he may then make payment according to his finding.

I wish the Senate to understand that this is an old claim. Many of these people are now citizens of Arizona, Utah, and New Mexico. I know most of them, and know them well. I think it is nothing but just that these claims should be paid at an early date. They were excluded; there is no doubt about that. Everybody in the northern part of the State knows that. Probably a cold, technical construction might send it to the Court of Claims, but I hope that will not be done.

I presented this matter to the best of my ability to the Committee on Indian Affairs. The committee had a large attendance present; hearings were had, a report made, and it has been printed. The most convincing thing is the map of the State of Arizona marked by the honorable Secretary showing that the land at that time was, according to the official map. public land.

Mr. GALLINGER. Has this bill ever been before the Committee on Claims, I will ask the Senator?

Mr. ASHURST. Let me say when I first introduced it it was sent to the Committee on Claims, and the report of the Secre-tary of the Interior is addressed to the chairman of the Committee on Claims.

Mr. GALLINGER. I noticed that.

Mr. ASHURST. But later, by order of the Senate, the bill was withdrawn from the Committee on Claims and sent to the Committee on Indian Affairs, which committee has jurisdiction over a large number of matters of this kind. I did not ask that it be put in the appropriation bill. I do not believe that it is an appropriate thing to put such items in the Indian appropriation bill. I realize that it will be very difficult besides that to pass the other body in this Congress, but I do ask that Senators support it.

Mr. GALLINGER. One difficulty I have in giving my assent to this bill is that we have so many other claims that are due citizens of the United States. I have observed that in any claim that an Indian or a band of Indians makes an appeal is made here in behalf of the Indians, but it is not so potent when it comes to the white man. I have in my desk a bill that passed in the closing days of the Sixty-second Congress adjusting hundreds of claims of citizens of the State of New Hampshire. I had the promise that that bill would be reported at the next session, but it has not been reported out. It is in the committee now, I presume, lodged safely in a pigeonhole of the Committee on Claims, and it is going to remain there. Citizens of New Hampshire, hundreds in number, are not going to get what is their due.

Every one of those claims has been before the Court of Claims; the facts have been found; the recommendations have been made that they are just claims and should be paid; and yet I have no means of getting consideration even for that bill at the present time. In consideration of that case and many others, I think it is asking a good deal for the Senator from Arizona to require us at this late hour of the night, and with but a handful of Senators present, to pass this $66,000 claim. It is a claim, my judgment is, that ought to have been referred to the Committee on Claims or have been sent to the Court of Claims. I think I know the circumstances under which the bill was recalled from the Committee on Claims. However, I will say to the Senator from Arizona that I am not going to object to it. If no other Senator representing the western part of the country is going to object to it, I will not do so; for I know it is said that Senators from the East are not always fully informed about these matters, and possibly I am not.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I do not think any western Senator has ever accused the Senator from New Hampshire of being unfriendly to the West. If they have done so, they have done him a great injustice.

Mr. GALLINGER. I never have been; but I myself realize that I do not understand as much about some of these western matters as do some other Senators; and I would be very unwilling to do an injustice either to the Senator from Arizona, who I know is acting in entire good faith, or to these poor people whom he represents in a way; and yet I do think it is very questionable whether we ought to-night to take action on this bill. However, I will content myself with what I have said about it and let it take such course as other Members of the Senate see fit to allow it to take.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I am sure there has been no suggestion made by any Senator from the West that would indicate in any way that there has been any such criticism as the remarks of the Senator from New Hampshire might indicate. The people of the West have always recognized that the Senator from New Hampshire has been exceedingly liberal to the West.

Now, in relation to this bill, I desire to say, as has been verified and stated clearly, that there was an eviction in this case. These people were forcibly ejected and great damage resulted. Inasmuch as the amount has been cut down 50 per cent and they have lost the interest on this money from 1879 up to the present time, even if the amount were one-fourth more than is allowed in this bill, it would not compensate them for their loss. I hope the bill will be passed.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I will not say another word, except to thank, as I ought to thank, the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER]; and I want to add that long, long before I had the honor to be in Congress my distinguished colleague [Mr. SMITH] told me that one of the greatest friends the West had was the distinguished Senator from New

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Arizona if these people had in any way perfected their title to these lands? They do not claim that they have any title to the lands, do they?

Mr. ASHURST. Oh, no, Mr. President, but they were getting themselves in shape so that they could make a regular application for homestead entry of the land. The land at that time was

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I will not object to the bill.
Mr. ASHURST. They would have been entitled to make homestead entry, however, had the land been surveyed.
Mr. BRANDEGEE. Inasmuch as the bill provides that no money shall be paid unless the Secretary of the Interior is satisfied that the claim is absolutely just and approves of it, I shall not object.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask that a line or two of the paragraph be read where the amount of the claim is stated. There is a certain amount stated in the bill, I think.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. For each person. Mr. GALLINGER. For each person.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The total is about $62,000.

Mr. GALLINGER. I was about to suggest that it should read "or so much thereof as may be necessary." I think, however, under the circumstances, I shall not make any further suggestion about it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will resume stating the amendments of the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The Secretary read the next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs, which was on page 2, line 1, after the name "Arizona," to strike out "$7,000" and to insert "$3,500"; in line 2, after the name "Arizona," to strike out "$12,000" and to insert "$6,000"; in the same line before the name "Susan,"

The amendment was agreed to. The next amendment was, on page 3, line 15, after the word 'destroy," to insert:

Provided, however, That the Secretary of the Treasury shall make no payment to any of the above-named persons, or to their personal representatives, for any of said losses and damages sustained by reason of the eviction and expulsion of said persons from said lands until and unless the Secretary of the Interior shall have ascertained and determined that in his opinion and judgment the amounts proposed to be paid to the said above-named persons for such loss and damage aforementioned are fair, just, equitable, and in proportion to the losses and damages sustained by the above-named persons.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator from Arizona if he has knowledge as to whether or not these claims have been placed in the hands of a claim agent or of claims agents who are to get a "rake-off," as we call it, on these claims?

Mr. ASHURST. I am glad the Senator from New Hampshire has asked that question. I will take a few minutes to state that when I was elected to the Senate I had some law business in the county in which most of these people live, the county seat being Holbrook. They consulted me as to the best means to adopt to secure some relief. They asked me if I would advise them to employ a claims attorney. I told them that so far as I was concerned, I believed—because I was quite familiar with the situation—that I could in time secure the passage of some kind of a relief bill for them through Congress. So I think I am perfectly secure in stating, and I think I am telling the truth when I say, that, so far as I know, no attorney whatever is now, interested in the claims is now interested in the claims.

A certain attorney in Prescott was connected with them some years ago, but I do not think he is now. His services only went so far as to take an affidavit from each one of the 15 claimants. I think his services were no longer required, and were dispensed with after he had taken the evidence and put it into the form of a memorial so as to perpetuate it. I do not know of any attorney or other person who will be paid any sum whatever in connection with these claims. The correspondence which I have had with respect to them has, as a rule, been with the claimants themselves or their personal representatives or heirs.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am very glad to know that. My anxiety about the matter was not so much as to whether or not some attorney was interested in the claims as it was as to the percentage of the claims which may have been promised to an attorney. I know that in some of these claims, particularly in claims on the part of Indians, exorbitant fees have been taken and have been allowed. If this money is to go to these poor Indians or to their families, I want them to get a reasonable share of it, at least, as I hope they will.

I will ask the Senator one further question. Who estimated the claims in the first place?

Mr. ASHURST. The claims were estimated in the first place by the claimants, if living, or by their wives or in some cases by their sons. I think the report sets that out fully. The estimate was made about four or five years ago.

Mr. GALLINGER. Upon what hypothesis has the committee reduced the claims by 50 per cent—upon any knowledge?

Mr. ASHURST. I think merely as a penalty possibly for not presenting the claims sooner. Some suggestion had been made that they had been guilty of delay or laches; and it seems to me that it was a sort of penalty for not presenting the claims more speedily.

Mr. THOMAS. Lack of diligence.
Mr. ASHURST. Lack of diligence—that is the proper phrase. Mr. GALLINGER. Well, Mr. President, that answers my

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be deemed agreed to.

Mr. BRANDEGEE, Mr. President, would the Senator from Arizona object to an amendment that no attorney should have any claim against any beneficiary mentioned in this bill for services rendered in procuring this legislation?

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I not only would not object. but I would welcome such an amendment; and I think it would be very salutary to say that none of this money shall be paid to any attorney or other person, but shall be paid directly, if paid at all, to the claimant or his or her personal representative, that is, the executor. I would welcome an amendment such as that. and would have no objection to it whatever.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. We know nothing about these matters. There may be in the hands of attorneys orders on the department or the Government officials to pay a portion of this money to them and that such orders shall be their receipt for the same.

I do not know, however, that such is the case.

Mr. ASHURST. I hope the Senator will offer an amendment to cover the point he has suggested.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I would not have suggested it if the Senator had not said that, so far as he knew, there were no such claims, and, of course, I take his word for that.

Mr. ASHURST. As I have said, I would welcome such an amendment.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I am not prepared to suggest the exact form of the amendment just now. The Senator is familiar with such amendments, as they have frequently been put on bills we have passed

Mr. ASHURST. If the Senator will pardon me, I will suggest an amendment

Mr. SHAFROTH. Let me suggest to the Senator that if there have been any lawyers employed they ought to have some compensation, and I would suggest an amendment to the effect that not exceeding 10 per cent of the amount shall be paid for any such purpose.

Mr. ASHURST. If the Senator will pardon me, I think that the attorney-and he was the only attorney in the casegathered the evidence has been compensated long ago. These are respectable people and worthy citizens of the community where they reside.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I have no doubt of that.

Mr. ASHURST. They compensated the attorney, I am sure, long ago for his services in gathering the evidence.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. What I meant was this: If this bill passes, it is because of the services of the Senator from Arizona, which have been rendered freely to his constituents.

Mr. ASHURST. Certainly.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. And I simply would like something put in the bill to protect these claimants against a lot of trumped-up claims that may be presented by attorneys they may formerly have had who have rendered no services in connection with this

Mr. ASHURST. Then I suggest an amendment. word "persons," on page 4, line 2, to insert the following:

Provided further, That none of the moneys proposed to be paid by this act shall be paid to any person other than the claimant named herein or his or her personal representative, and that no lien of any kind or nature shall be recognized by the Secretary of the Interior in making payment hereunder.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Let me suggest to the Senator that he put in this phrase: "And that no attorney's lien shall attach to any amount of money appropriated under this act.

Mr. ASHURST. I accept that suggested amendment. The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment of the Senator from Arizona as modified is agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed:

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Alfred Cluff, Orson Cluff, Henry E. Norton, William B. Ballard, Elijah Hancock, Mrs. Susan R. Saline, Oscar Mann, Celia Thayne, William E. Cox, Theodore Farley, Adelaide Laxton, Clara L. Tenney, George M. Adams, Charlotte Jensen, Sophia Huff, Peter H. McBride, and David Edward Adams.

RECLAMATION OF OREGON LANDS UNDER CAREY ACT.

The bill (S. 8044) providing for the extension of time for the reclamation of certain lands in the State of Oregon under the Carey Act was considered as in Committee of the Whole. authorizes the Secretary of the Interior, within his discretion, to extend for a period of not exceeding 10 years the time of segregation in the Oregon Carey Act segregation lists Nos. 6 and 19, the two areas comprising 140,714 acres in the aggregate, approximately 86,000 of which are irrigable, being situated in Crook County, Oreg.; and the Secretary of the Interior if further authorized to grant to the State of Oregon a similar extension of 10 years for the reclamation of such lands in addition to the time allotted under existing rules, regulations, contracts, and laws

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 1695) to provide for the military and naval training of the citizen forces of the United States, was announced as next in order

Mr. GALLINGER. Let that bill go over.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over. The bill (S. 8201) to amend an act providing mediation, concliation, etc., approved July 15, 1913; to authorize the President to protect the operation of trains in time of peace, and to take possession of the common carriers and draft their crews and officials in time of war, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let that bill go over.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over. The bill (H. R. 20079) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

AMERICUS A. GORDON.

The bill (S. 6690) for the relief of Americus A. Gordon was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that in the administration of the pension laws and the laws governing the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, or any branch thereof, Americus A. Gordon shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a private of Company H, Fourth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Cavalry, on the 20th day of April. 1864.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move to amend the bill by inserting the usual proviso, to read:

Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emolument shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated. The SECRETARY. At the end of line 10 it is proposed to insert the following:

Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emolument shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I understand that completes the calendar. Mr. SMITH of Georgia. There are several other bills which have been reported to-day and which do not appear on the calendar, namely, Order of Business No. 928 and Order of Business No. 929, copies of which I have in my hand. I suppose they could properly be considered.

Mr. SMOOT. And also Order of Business No. 930 and Order of Business No. 931.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I ask for the consideration of Order of Business No. 931.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that come up in regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the next bill on the calendar.

The Secretary. A bill (H. R. 8033) to amend section 162 of an act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary, approved March 3, 1911.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I have no personal interest in this matter, except that I have been pressed by a great many people to get it before the Senate, and I want them to be sure that I have done so.

LONGEVITY CLAIMS.

The bill (S. 6286) to confer jurisdiction on the Court of Claims was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that bill go over.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That bill relates to longevity claims.
Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, there are hundreds of longevity claims, and I will never agree that a single longevity claim, or that two or three or four or five such claims, shall be selected out and passed here.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. This bill does not select out any of the claims, but it is a general bill allowing those longevity claimants to go to the Court of Claims and have their rights

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; but I have a bill in my desk carrying hundreds of longevity claims that have been before the Court of Claims and adjudicated, and yet every time it is suggested that we should take it up there is objection to it. I think we had better pass those that have been already favorably reported before we take up a new batch.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I was under the impression that this bill applied to all such claims. I do not, however, know anything about it myself.

Mr. GALLINGER. It does not cover all such claims.

Mr. SMOOT. The claims to which the Senator from New Hampshire has referred have already been to the Court of Claims and been passed upon.

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly; and have been here for years, but we can not get consideration for them.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Are they the claims of that class of officers who were turned down just by one comptroller?

Mr. GALLINGER. I think so.

Mr. SMOOT. I think they are in the same class, only with this distinction-that they have already gone to the Court of Claims and have been acted upon.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. As I understood it, there was a right of certain Army officers to receive pay growing out of the allowance that came to them for the time they were at West Point. The claims were recognized and paid and approved by every comptroller except one. The Supreme Court sustained their right to recover. One comptroller had held adversely to their claims, and subsequent comptrollers declined to reverse the adverse ruling of the prior comptroller. That is what I under-

Mr. SMOOT. This bill does cover that.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. And this bill is intended to cover

Mr. SMOOT. But there are a great many other claims.

There are longevity claims.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President-

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, with reference to the statement made by the Senator from Georgia, I want to say that the claims to which the Senator refers were selected out of the claims bills by the Claims Committee as having especial merit on the ground that they had been determined, and that there was no valid objection to them anywhere except the technical one that one comptroller had declined to pass them. Now, I do not believe—I may be mistaken—that any such claims have ever been passed upon here. No; they never have been; so that the Senator is absolutely right.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. This is not a bill that I introduced.

It is a bill that was referred to the Judiciary Committee, and I have been called on and called on to get it up. I am simply trying to get it before the Senate. I hope that somebody who knows more about it than I do—a number of members of the Judiciary Committee seem to know about it-will explain it.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I will not assume that I know more about it than the Senator does. Perhaps he knows more about it than I do; but this matter is very much as he says. One comptroller ruled against it and the following comptroller would not reverse his ruling. The amount claimed by all of these officers is away up in the millions.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Covered by this bill? Mr. WARREN. Claims for longevity. Once in an omnibus bill they were gotten through the Senate but could not get through the House. In the meantime suits were brought by certain officers, where perhaps there was some exception in their favor, and they obtained judgment of the court. What this bill seeks to do, as I read it, is to take the others and have them passed through according to the court's finding in some particular case. We ought to look that case up, and I think the bill ought to go over until we can look it up.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Senator from Utah is more familiar with the details than I am. He was on the subcom-The bill is now upon the calendar of the Senate, subject to action by the Senate, and my responsibility is discharged. Mr. SMOOT. I ask that it go over. Mr. WARREN. I think it ought to

I think it ought to go over.

Mr. GALLINGER. Before it goes over I want to say that I hold in my hand a bill for 140 officers for allowances known as longevity claims which have been before the Court of Claims, acted upon favorably by that court, referred here, and the Senator from Wyoming says they once passed the Senate. I have reintroduced the bill, but it gets no consideration in the committee

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHEPPARD in the chair).

Objection is made, and the bill will be passed over:

The Secretary will state the next bill on the calendar.

RIGHT OF WAY FOR IRRIGATION OR DRAINAGE.

The bill (S. 7710) to amend the irrigation act of March 3, 1891 (26 Stats, p. 1095), section 18, and to amend section 2, of the act of May 11, 1898 (30 Stats, p. 404), was announced as next in order.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Is there a report on that bill? If so.

should like to have it read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that the report has not been printed.

Mr. SMOOT. The bill was reported to-day.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I ask that it go over. It gives the right of eminent domain.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Washington withhold his objection until the Senator from Montana can be heard?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes; I withhold the objection.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, this bill was considered by the Irrigation Committee, or rather the committee was polled on it by one of the members of the committee. I do not recall who it was; but he represented to me a condition which I think may very readily appeal to the Senator from Washington.

The right of way is granted now for irrigation companies to traverse the public lands, but a good many of the States are in a condition like that which exists in our State; they desire the right of way for pipe purposes rather than for irrigation purposes. The present act grants the right of way for irrigation purposes, but does not grant the right of way for ditch companies engaged in the construction of drainage enterprises; and it occurred to me that there could be no possible objection to amending the act so as to permit that.

Mr. POINDEXTER. There may not be, but I should like to have a little more opportunity to consider it, in view of its importance, that is all.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I should like to suggest to the Senator from Montana that the language of the bill seems to me to be somewhat peculiar—"that the right of way is granted through all the public lands of the United States." That means, of course, a right of way anywhere that anybody who is granted it wants to go. Will that encumber the lands which are now public lands and which may hereafter become private lands?

Mr. WALSH. Undoubtedly it will. That has been the law, I will say to the Senator, since 1866. Any one can construct a ditch for purposes of irrigation across the public lands anywhere. No permission of any kind is required.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President—
Mr. BRANDEGEE. My position is somewhat similar to that of the Senator from New Hampshire in that I am not particularly familiar with these western subjects, but it seems to me to be a little broad to say now that any ditch company or irrigation company shall forever have a right of way across all the public lands anywhere they have a mind to exercise it, which makes it an encumbrance upon all those lands, no matter for what purpose they may prove to be valuable in the future.

Mr. WALSH. I think I ought to say to the Senator from Connecticut that the term "public lands," as used in all of these acts, includes no lands that are reserved for any purpose.
Mr. BRANDEGEE. Oh, I understand that. It is only lands subject to entry.

Mr. WALSH. It would not grant a right of way over an Indian reservation, or a military reservation, or anything of that kind. Only those lands that are open to appropriation under the general laws are included in the term "public lands."

Mr. BRANDEGEE. We in the East, when we grant a right of way over a particular piece of land, are rather in the habit of defining the right of way, or at least limiting it by some

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington renew his objection?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I ask that the bill go over.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over. Mr. POINDEXTER. I will say to the Senator from Montana that if it is brought up again after the report is printed I may withdraw the objection; but I should like to look into it.

Mr. WALSH. I desire to say to the Senator from Washington that it is not my bill, and I have no personal interest at all in it

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will say to the Senator that I think the necessity for the enactment of this legislation arises very largely from the fact that lands under large irrigation enterprises have become what they call water-logged. They are saturated with water, and it is important that drainage pipes should be laid. It is a right of way that would really occupy hardly any space whatever and would be of no detriment whatever. Inasmuch as this is a bill which must be passed by the House also-it is a Senate bill, is it not?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, has not an objection been made? The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection has been made.

Mr. SMOOT. Then I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order is called The Secretary will state the next bill on the calendar.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, will not the Senator permit me to say a word upon this bill? It is a very important matter. Mr. SMOOT. It has been discussed here already for nearly 18 minutes, and there is an objection to it; so why not make the statement when the bill is up for consideration?

Mr. FLETCHER. Let me say this, Mr. President: I have been engaged all the evening in a session of the Commerce Committee, beginning at 7.30. A very important hearing is going on there, and I have been there all the time. I have not been neglecting my work a minute, and I did not know that this bill was up until now, when I got word; and I left the committee to come up here just to say one word about it. I know that if the Senator understands the facts, which I can state in just one minute, he will not have the slightest objection to the bill. Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have not said that the Senator was neglecting his duties in any way, and I have not objected to the consideration of the bill; but 18 or 20 minutes have been consumed in the discussion of this bill, and the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] says that he wants to see the report before the bill passes.

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not want to take up time. duced the bill, however, and I ought to know something about it, and I think I am the man to discuss it and explain it.

There is only one word added to the present law, and that is the word "drainage." There are in Florida particularly drainage districts organized under State law.

There is one company, for instance, that is putting in a drainage system, and the line has to go across a piece of Government land, say, of 40 acres. All we want is authority to permit this drainage to take place across Government land. Unless I can get the bill passed to-night and get it over to the House there is no use in doing it at all, and it means the interruption of a very great public development down there in the way of drainage of lands. There are not many Government lands there; but there can be no possible harm in it, and there will be a positive benefit to what little Government land this drainage ditch would run through,

The same law will apply to drainage, if the bill is passed, that applies now to irrigation, so that it seems to me there could be no possible objection to it. The department is in favor of it and has made a favorable report on it. The department was perfectly willing to give the permission, but said it had no authority to do so. This simply gives authority to put the drainage ditch through a piece of Government land in order that this work may go on and not have the whole system interrupted because the Government happens to own a little piece of land in the entire area.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Utah is in favor of the bill. Mr. THOMAS. I think the right of way can be condemned through there.

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not know but that the Senator from Colorado is right about that.

Mr. THOMAS. I know I am right about it. Mr. FLETCHER. But the department has taken the other view, and this would clear up the whole thing. There can be no possible harm in it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to interrupt him there? I did not object to the consideration of this bill. On looking it over, I made some remark to the effect that it was rather a broad power, but I see that the present statute allows the exercise of this right, in exactly the same language, as to irrigation.

Mr. FLETCHER. Precisely.
Mr. BRANDEGEE. And this simply adds the same privilege as to drainage

Mr. FLETCHER. Precisely. It adds the word "drainage." The Senator is entirely correct.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I want to ask the Senator from Washington, therefore, if he will insist on his objection?

Mr. FLETCHER. I wish the Senator from Washington would not insist. Mr. BRANDEGEE. As I understand, this authority is in the law now as to irrigation, and the Senator wants to make it apply also to drainage. Mr. FLETCHER. It simply adds the word "drainage" to the word "irrigation." That is all it does. I hope the Senator will permit the bill to go through. It is favorably reported by the committee and favorably reported on by the department. Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I should like to appeal to the Senator from Washington to withdraw his objection, for the reason, also, that this very condition exists in our western country and, do doubt, in the Senator's State, where by reason of the construction of irrigation canals the lands below become saturated with water and must be drained. I have not any doubt that in some instances the drainage pipes pass over some quantity of land belonging to the Government.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I have reason to believe that if the appeals cease the objection may be withdrawn,

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not want to discuss it a minute. Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, in view of the deep interest taken in the bill by the Senator from Florida and the Senator from Colorado, I am very much disposed not to obstruct its passage. I only heard the reading of the bill in a very cursory way. It is not printed upon the calendar even by number. Evidently it has been recently reported without a meeting of the committee, merely by polling the committee, so that we have no printed report explaining the purposes of the bill. I have sent for the report and have it in my hand. I find that the report contains a letter from the Secretary of the Interior recommending a number of amendments to the

Mr. FLETCHER. The bill as it is here now is precisely as the department recommends it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Not the form that I have in my hand. Mr. FLETCHER. I think the Senator will find that the bill as reported from the committee is precisely as the department recommend it. It is precisely in accordance with the form recommended by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Are there any public lands in Florida?

Mr. FLETCHER. Oh, yes; there are some 450,000 acres of public lands in the State, mostly in small tracts very much scattered over the State; about 450,000 acres, I think. I will say to the Senator that it is quite important in one particular instance that I know of, where there is a drainage company about to issue bonds, and the prosecution of the work and the sale of the bonds depends on their having authority to run one of their ditches through a 40-acre piece of Government land.

Mr. POINDEXTER. As pointed out by the Senator from Connecticut, the bill as it stands here, with this report, is the vaguest possible kind of a measure, granting rights of way which might be a mile wide and might be 10 feet wide. There There are no restrictions whatever upon them. No administrative officer is designated to pass on the question of the extent of the right of way or the circumstances or conditions under which it should be granted. The bill that I have in my hand, as printed, says that it is reported without amendment, and yet I have in my hand a report from the Secretary of the Interior in which he says:

But the construction of the bill is somewhat misleading and ambiguous, inasmuch as it adds to the first sentence of said section 18 the words "or drainage," and, by implication at least, omits all that follows in said section. I suggest, therefore, that this section be amended so as to read—

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes; that had reference, if the Senator will allow me, to the bill as I originally introduced it. I asked the committee to report the bill precisely as recommended by the Secretary of the Interior, and this is the bill which it reported; and it should be "without amendment," because it is ported; and it should be "without amendment," because it is exactly as the Secretary recommended it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Evidently this is not reported as the Senator requested that it be reported.

Mr. FLETCHER. It is reported as recommended by the Secretary, precisely.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Why, it is reported without amendment. That is printed on the bill—"Reported by Mr. Lane, without amendment."

Mr. FLETCHER. He means that the report of the committee is the bill as recommended by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Furthermore, while I have not any desire to obstruct the passage of this bill, it is a very loose way to legislate to be granting rights of way with nothing more definite than to say "the right of way of all irrigation projects is hereby granted over the public lands."

Mr. FLETCHER. That is exactly as the law is. This leaves practically the language of the statute.

Mr. THOMAS. It has been the law for 51 years and it has not been changed.

Mr. FLETCHER. It does not change the law at all. It simply extends it to drainage as well as irrigation; that is all.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Secretary of the Interior, in his letter that is incorporated in the report, suggests that the section be amended to read:

That the right of way through the public lands and reservations of the United States is hereby granted to any canal or ditch company formed for the purpose of irrigation or drainage and duly organized under the laws of any State or Territory—

Is that in the bill?

which shall have filed or may hereafter file with the Secretary of the Interior a copy of its articles of incorporation and due proofs of its organization under the same, to the extent of the ground occupied by the water of the reservoir and of the canal and its laterals, and 50 feet on each side of the marginal limits thereof; also the right to take from the public lands adjacent to the line of the canal or ditch material, earth, and stone necessary for the construction of such canal or ditch: Provided, That no such right of way shall be so located as to interfere with the proper occupation by the Government of any such reservation, and all maps of location shall be subject to the approval of the department of the Government having jurisdiction of such reservation, and the privilege herein granted shall not be construed to interfere with the control of water for irrigation and other purposes under authority of the respective States or Territories.

That sounds more like scientific legislation.

Mr. FLETCHER. I have not seen the letter the Senator reads from. If the department recommends that as a part of the bill, I am perfectly willing to amend the bill by adding it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I thought the Senator stated that there was already in the bill what the department recommended. Mr. FLETCHER. I thought it was as he recommended it.

POINDEXTER. That shows how little anybody knows about the bill and the form it is in. It is simply reported-

Mr. FLETCHER. I am not on the committee, and I do not know how the committee reported it, except that I was assured the department was in favor of the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Is the Senator from Washington going to object to the consideration of the bill now?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I should like to withhold my objection. Mr. FLETCHER. I am perfectly willing to amend it as suggested by the Secretary of the Interior-

Mr. SMOOT. I call for the regular order.

Mr. FLETCHER. If that is a part of the recommendation of the Secretary, and the Senator will offer it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I will not offer the amendment, because have not heard of the bill before. I am not prepared to offer the amendment, but I am calling attention to the recommendation made by the Secretary of the Interior. It is not the only amendment that he suggests.

Mr. SMOOT. Regular order! The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah demands the regular order.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yet the Senator says that the department sustains it

FEDERAL BUILDING SITE AT HONOLULU.

The bill (S. 7872) to confirm and ratify the sale of the Federal building site at Honolulu, Territory of Hawaii, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I wish to ask about the bill that it was just stated would be passed without any objection. It says that the sale of the Federal building site at Honolulu made under the provisions of the act of March 3, 1915, to a corporation "is hereby ratified and confirmed." If the act authorized the sale of it, what is the necessity for having a ratification?

Mr. SHAFROTH. The bill was reported by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS]. He is not here, but he sent word down that he is very anxious to have the bill passed, and he requested me to urge its passage. I have not seen the report, but from the wording of the bill it is apparent that the United States Government has sold to Castle & Cooke the old site of a Federal building there, and they are no doubt erecting or have erected on it a large building. There is some defect in the title, and they want to have it confirmed by a quitclaim deed. I think the report evidently would show it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Of course—

Mr. WARREN. The original act for the purchase of a site was found to be insufficient. By legislation here two or three years ago we provided for the sale and another purchase. a Territory now; and, to go on with the transaction of business, I suppose they require the sanction or indorsement of Congress, in the way Territories often do in their matters of legislation. Their legislation, as I understand it, is fully in line and all right with the act of two years ago, in which we added an appropriation to authorize the sale and purchase.

Mr. SMOOT. Nearly two years ago there was an appropriation made to purchase a piece of land in Honolulu for a Federal building. As the Senator says, it was found not to be the proper location or the necessary size. That piece of property was sold to Castle & Cooke, and this is to ratify the sale and to authorize the quitclaim of the property to Castle & Cooke. They have already agreed upon the purchase of another site, and in fact I think they have purchased the other site. Of course, the money they receive from this will go to paying for the building upon the new site.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. They not only purchased a new site but a site infinitely more desirable, considerably larger in area, and for a price considerably less than the sum arising from the sale of the other lot.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I have the report here now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Connecticut move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I was simply objecting to the passage of the bill until I could get some information about it. It was passed so quickly that I could not understand it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the vote by which the bill was passed will be reconsidered.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. It simply shows how casually these bills are passed without anybody knowing anything about them; that is all. The three Senators who have spoken upon this matter have not given the reason for the passage of the bill at all. The reason is shown in the letter and report of the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, and it is that the advertisement under which the previous sale was made was defective, and they want to have it ratified and confirmed. I can understand that, and that is satisfactory to me. I have no objection, however, at all. I ask that the report of the committee be printed in the RECORD to explain the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The report is as follows:

[Senate Rept. No. 1038, 64th Cong., 2d sess.]

[Senate Rept. No. 1038, 64th Cong., 2d sess.]

Mr. Swanson, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, submitted the following report:

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to which was referred Senate bill 7872, to confirm and ratify the sale of the Federal-building site at Honolulu, Territory of Hawail, and for other purposes, having considered the same, report it to the Senate with the recommendation that it do pass.

The necessity and purpose of this legislation is fully set forth in a letter to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of the House of Representatives, which is attached and made a part of this report, The letter is from Hon. B. R. Newton, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, and is as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF ASSISTANT SECRETARY,
Washington, December 26, 1916.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: Under the authority given by Congress this department purchased a site for a post office, courthouse, and customhouse at Honolulu, Hawaii, at a cost of $104,531.29. Due to subsequent developments, this site proved to be too small, and Congress authorized the acquisition of additional land for its enlargement, but the awards in condemnation proceedings instituted for the purpose were in excess of the amount made available for the purpose. Thereafter additional legislation was enacted authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to sell said site at not less than $165,000 and to acquire a new site at not to exceed $275,000. A new site has been selected, and steps are being perfected for its acquisition at a cost of $200,000. The old site has been offered for sale at public auction, and the highest price offered, after a somewhat spirited competition, was $475,000, which bid has been accepted.

The act of Congress, approved March 3, 1915, authorizing the secretary of the progress.

The act of Congress, approved March 3, 1915, authorizing the sale of the old site requires, among other things, that notices of the sale be given "by advertisement for 30 days in at least two newspapers" published in Honolulu. Advertisements were published in two daily papers, each paper having published the advertisement for 11 days between September 14 and October 19, 1916, covering a period of more than 30 days.

September 14 and October 19, 1916, covering a period of more than 30 days.

Some question has been raised as to the sufficiency of this advertising of the sale in question, it being suggested that the advertisement should have appeared daily for 30 consecutive days prior to the sale. The decisions of the courts are not uniform as to what constitutes compliance with a direction of the character contained in the act in question, and in view of the large sum bid and in order that no question may be raised hereafter touching the validity of the advertisement, it is deemed best to have correctionary legislation in this case in the nature of a ratification of the sale.

Inasmuch as you have been in Honolulu and are familiar with the old and new sites, the department ventures to bring this matter to your attention with request that you take such action in connection with the matter as your large experience in public-building affairs may suggest. There is inclosed a tentative draft of a bill which, if enacted into law, will be satisfactory to the bidder.

Very truly, yours,

B. R. Newton, Assistant Secretary.

B. R. NEWTON, Assistant Secretary.

Hon. John L. Burnett, House of Representatives.

The bill was passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. POMERENE. Does that conclude the last bill on the calendar?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order is to start with the first bill on the calendar.

Mr. POMERENE. I ask unanimous consent to take up the bill (H. R. 8348) to amend an act entitled "An act to create a juvenile court in and for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes." This is a matter of great importance, and I hope there will be no objection to it.

Mr. SMOOT. I understand that the time has arrived when we were to adjourn, but I shall not object to the consideration of this bill,

Mr. MYERS. I hope the Senate will not adjourn until we have had a further opportunity to consider bills on the calendar. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that no agreement has been made as to the hour of adjournment.

Mr. SMOOT. I am perfectly aware of that. If we are going on with the calendar now, I want to begin at the beginning; but I am perfectly willing if there is only one bill to be called up out of order to agree to have it passed. If we are going to consider bills further, we had better consider them as it was agreed by unanimous consent they should be considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. TOWNSEND. What bill is that?
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The District juvenile court bill. Mr. SMOOT. I have no objection to the juvenile court bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is a very good bill.

Mr. CHILTON. Before that is done, I ask the Senator from Ohio to allow me

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield to the Senator from West Virginia. LONGEVITY CLAIMS.

Mr. CHILTON. A while ago Order of Business 929, Senate bill 6286, known as the longevity bill, was up, and there was some objection to it on the other side. Since that time I have examined the decision referred to in that bill. I suggest that with one little amendment there could possibly be no objection to the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator there is more in the bill than we ought to be asked to consider to-night.

Mr. CHILTON. I think if the Senator will look at the bill again he will see there can possibly be but one thing in it. It is simply this: Certain officers were decided against under an act of Congress by two comptrollers. As to those cases they can never be reopened. Afterwards the Supreme Court of the United States in two cases decided that the comptroller had mistaken the law and that they were entitled to their pay under the act of Congress. They have a rule there that they never reverse an auditor in the particular case in which he has de-cided against a claimant. The majority of these people have gotten their pay under the decisions of the Supreme Court, and the men who happened to be decided against wrongfully by the comptroller must forever stay out of their pay unless they can get relief by an act of Congress.

Mr. SMOOT. What is the amendment the Senator suggests? Mr. CHILTON. The amendment I suggest would be on page line 11, where it says "and no settlement heretofore made shall conclude a settlement under the terms of this act," in-stead of those words to say "and no decision of a comptroller heretofore made against these claimants under said section 15 shall preclude a settlement under the terms, of this act where the claim has not been paid."

That will make it so that it will include everybody and do a simple act of justice. It is plain upon its face, and I think we ought to pass it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator from West Virginia will permit the Chair, the request of the Senator from Ohio for unanimous consent is pending.

Mr. CHILTON. He yielded the floor for a moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He yielded to the Senator from West Virginia to make another request. The Chair will hold that the first request has to be put now.

Mr. POMERENE. I hope the Senator will not try to inject

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. POMERENE. I think the juvenile court bill is a very important measure, and I hope the Senate will consider it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Let the Chair put the ques-

I shall have to object. Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is objection.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do not object. I object to the consideration of both bills at the same time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is objection to the request of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. Who interposed the objection, may I ask? Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I interposed the objection, and I wish to state why I did it. The bill to which the Senator from West Virginia calls attention is one that was before the Senate a moment ago, and objection was made to its consideration, and that objection now is withdrawn. I think it should be disposed of as a part of the regular calender that we are on. As soon as that is done I shall interpose no objection to unanimous consent to take up the bill to which the Senator from Ohio has referred.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. GALLINGER. I made the objection and withdraw it because of the fact that the Senator proposed an amendment that I think is a very proper one,

The PRESIDING OFFICER, The Senator from West Virginia asks unanimous consent to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 6286) to confer jurisdiction on the Court of Claims.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. CHILTON. I have drawn an amendment which I will ask the Secretary to read. The Secretary. On page 2, line 11, strike out the word settlement" and insert "decision of a comptroller."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The Secretary. After the word "made" in line 12 insert the words "against the claimant under said section 15."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to. The Secretary. In line 13, after the word "act" and before the period, insert "where the claimant has not been paid."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Before the bill is passed I wish to ask the Senator a question. The bill applies only to certain cases. Why should not the same power be given for the Court of Claims to pronounce judgment upon all claims on which the facts have been found? I understood it did. Some of them have not the Court of Claims. This covers those cases Mr. CHILTON.

been presented to the Court of Claims, that are pending in the Court of Claims and allows the comptroller to act where a suit has not been brought.
Mr. BRANDEGEE. The language of the bill

The language of the bill is that they are authorized to enter judgment upon the findings of fact hereto-I wondered why these were selected; why, if fore made. there were other cases where the findings of fact had been heretofore made the court should not be authorized to pronounce judgment upon them also.

Mr. CHILTON. They would have the right where the case would be brought hereafter without doing that.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. No; but upon all cases heretofore.
Mr. CHILTON. In the cases hereafter brought they would have a right to do it, anyhow.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. These cases were brought and findings were practically made upon them, and they evidently could not pronounce judgment; and this legislation is necessary to give them authority to pronounce judgment upon the facts as found. Mr. CHILTON. Just put that in the bill.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I will not ask the Senator to insert anything else, because I am not familiar enough with the subject to know whether it would be doing right or not. I was simply inquiring whether the Senator knew. I am not going to object to the bill.

Mr. CHILTON. I have stated the facts exactly as I understand them from reputable men who are interested that some of the cases have been brought in the Court of Claims and others have not. For some reason or other, I do not know why exactly, the Court of Claims could not enter judgment upon those facts, but I suppose the important thing was to require the comptroller, where the facts are the same as in those cases where the Supreme Court has settled the law, to allow settlement to be made notwithstanding the peculiar rule that they will not reverse themselves.

will not reverse themselves.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I hope the Senator will not speak any more about it, because I am afraid somebody will object to the bill. I simply asked for information. I do not understand it, but I will not object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further amendments, the bill will be reported to the Senate. The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. POMERENE. I renew my request for unanimous consent to call up the bill (H. R. 8348) to amend an act entitled sent to call up the bill (H. R. 8348) to amend an act entitled "An act to create a juvenile court in and for the District of Columbia," and for other purposes.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. A few evenings ago when the Senator from Ohio sought to bring up this bill I objected. I had examined the bill which passed the House, to which I thought there were a number of serious objections and a number of amendments that ought to be made. I have examined as carefully as I can the bill as it is reported from the committee.

The Senate committee has certainly corrected a number of those The Senate committee has certainly corrected a number of those things that I thought were objectionable in the bill as passed by the House. Not knowing myself how to suggest that it be made better than the committee has recommended it, I will not further

Mr. POMERENE. I thank the Senator.
Mr. SMOOT. Do I understand the Senator from Georgia to say that we are to begin now to consider bills by unanimous consent anywhere on the calendar?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No; I understood that we were to take this bill up, if the Senate does not object; but I am sure by the time we get through with this bill we will have consumed the evening, and I shall ask the Senate to adjourn after the disposition of this measure.

Mr. MYERS. Will the Senator from Ohio yield to me for a minute? After he gets through with his bill I want to make a request for the consideration of one very short bill. I am the cause of this session being held, I obtained unanimous consent for it, and I have not had a single measure passed this evening. After the Senator gets through I want to make a request for the consideration of a bill that it will not take two minutes to dispose of.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. SMOOT. With that understanding, I have no objection.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I think there is a great deal of justice in the protest of the Senator from Montana. He has a short bill in charge, and I think it ought to be considered.

Mr. MYERS. I am not asking that now. The Senator from Ohio is ahead of me. After he gets through I shall make the

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 8348) to amend an act entitled "An act to create a juvenile court in and for the District of Columbia," and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments.

The first amendment of the Committee on the District of Columbia was, in section 2, page 2, line 3, after the words "appointed and," to strike out "confirmed" and insert "qualified," so as to make the section read:

Sec. 2. That said court shall be a court of record and the judge thereof shall be appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, for a term of six years, or until his successor is appointed and qualified. No person shall be appointed to the office of judge of the said court who is not a duly licensed and practicing attorney at law. Said judge shall, before entering upon the duties of his office, take the oath prescribed for judges of courts of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, page 2, line 18, after the word "duties," to insert "or in case it is necessary to pro-vide a substitute for himself on account of his own sickness, absence, or disability," so as to make the section read:

Sec. 3. That the judge of the juvenile court shall immediately upon his appointment and qualification designate a judge of the municipal court of the District of Columbia to discharge the duties of the said judge of the juvenile court in case of sickness, absence, disability, or death of said judge of the juvenile court, until such disability, or death of said judge of the juvenile court, until such disability be removed or vacancy filled. Such designation may be thereafter changed from time to time by the judge of the juvenile court or such judge of the municipal court performing such duties or in case it is necessary to provide a substitute for himself on account of his own sickness, absence, or disability.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 4, on page 2, after line 23, to strike out:

(a) Who violates any penal law, or any regulation or ordinance of the District of Columbia, or who commits any act or offense for which he could be prosecuted in a method partaking of the nature of a crimi-nal action or proceeding; or.

SEC. 5. That, except as herein otherwise provided, the Juvenile Court of the District of Columbia shall have original and exclusive jurisdiction of all cases coming within the terms and provisions of this act. This act shall be construed liberally and as remedial in character; and the powers hereby conferred are intended to be general to effect the beneficial purposes herein set forth. It is the intention of this act that in all proceedings coming under its provisions the court shall proceed upon the theory that in the absence of any natural or legal guardian the child is the ward of the District of Columbia and is subject to the discipline and entitled to the protection which the court determines under the conditions disclosed in the case.

SEC. 8. That the judge of the juvenile court may designate a female probation officer as commissioner in the first instance to hear and determine the disposition of any cases of females coming within the provisions of this act and make report thereof to the said judge, together with said commissioner's conclusions and recommendations. If no exceptions be taken to said report and no review be asked thereof, such report and recommendations may be confirmed by an order of said court, and, if confirmed, shall become the judgment of said court. A review by the court of the conclusions and recommendations of said commissioner may be had by any child, or the parent, guardian, or next friend of any child, who may feel aggrieved at the report of said commissioner by filing a request for review thereof at any time within five days after notice of the finding of said commissioner. Immediately upon the entry of said commissioner's finding the clerk of the court shall notify the parent, guardian, or next friend of the child personally or by registered mail giving the substance of said finding. Such parent, guardian, or next friend shall be presumed to have had actual notice of such finding five days after said notice shall have been deposited in the mail by said clerk, addressed to such parent, guardian, or next friend at his last known place of residence.

No order transferring the custody of a child shall be made except after a full hearing and upon not less than 10 days' written notice to the guardian, institution, or agency to whose care such child has theretofore been committed, unless such guardian, institution, or agency consents thereto. An appeal may be taken both upon the law and upon the facts from any order of the court transferring the custody of a child from one guardian, institution, or agency to another guardian, institution, or agency aggrieved by such order in the same manner as other appeals provided herein. The court shall have no power, however, to transfer the custody of any child embraced herein after such child may have been adopted as provided by law, except at a subsequent hearing and upon a petition filed as herein provided in a new proceeding involving such child," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 21. That during the probationary period of any child said child shall, if it should appear to the court that the welfare of said child will be conserved thereby, be subject to the friendly visitation of the probation officer or other agent of the court; and any order or judgment made by the court in the case of any such child shall be subject to such modification from time to time as the court may consider to be for the welfare of such child.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator in charge of the bill a question. Calling his attention to page 5, line 3, down to line 12, I notice that the provision of the bill appointing the probation officers provides that they shall be appointed "on the basis of merit only, determined by a public competitive examination held by three members of the Board of Children's Guardians," and so forth, and that the highest three shall be appointed. I think it would be much wiser to leave the appointment of those probation officers to the discretion of the judge of the court. I do not think in such instances public competitive examinations can be held which will signify anything. I do not like to see officers of that kind, who should be really officers of the court, foisted upon the court by some outside board based upon competitive examination. No-body knows what that would be. It is impossible to formulate questions that will test the capacity of a probation officer.

Their appointment ought to be left in the discretion of the court.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I realize that there is a good deal of force in what the Senator from Connecticut has These appointments are to be made by the court from the highest three. I understand it is somewhat like the civil-service law. I think that both are pretty seriously objectionable; but as we have that system prevailing throughout the United States in the competitive classified service, I did not myself see any reason why it should be changed here. As for myself, I should be quite willing to trust to the court.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I do not think it possible by any kind of competitive examination to secure information as to the value of an officer who would be adapted to this work. I have had some experience in it, and I say it is utterly impossible for any competitive examination to disclose the fitness of such officers. It is a knowledge of the man, and of the particular man, which should be the basis of the appointment. I quite favor the suggestion of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE].

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I was going to move, and do move, to strike out, beginning in line 3, on page 5, all after he word "act," the remainder of the section, and to leave it

That the judge of the juvenile court shall appoint a chief probation officer, and such other officers as are now or may hereafter be authorized by law, to serve under the direction of the court in all cases arising under this act.

And let it stop there.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut will be stated.

The Secretary. In section 7, on page 5, beginning in line 3 after the word "act," it is proposed to strike out as follows:

All appointments of probation officers shall be made on the basis of merit only, determined by a public competitive examination held by three members of the Board of Children's Guardians, hereinafter provided for. The examiners shall conduct the examination of all applicants according to such rules and regulations as they may provide and shall certify to the court for appointment to each position the names of the highest three, from which the appointment shall be made by the court, unless there are less than three applicants.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, as there has been no explanation made of the amendments which have been reported by the Senate committee and which have been adopted, except that which is contained in the report of the committee, I ask that that portion of the report beginning with "Your committee is of the opinion that the bill as it passed the House of Representatives," and so forth, and the following pages, which I have marked in the copy of the report which I hold in my hand, be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Your committee is of the opinion that the bill as it passed the House is well conceived, but as a result of hearings and careful study of the measure we propose the amendments as above indicated.

It will not be our purpose to discuss these changes in detail. We shall only refer to the more important ones.

The act as it passed the House applies to any child less than 17 years of age residing in or being actually within the District of Columbia, and the juvenile court is given jurisdiction over the child for every violation of law, regulation, or ordinance, and has a right to determine the custudy of the child when the subject is in controversy. (Sec. 4).

By section 5 the discipline and protection of the court in its discretion may continue until the child shall attain the age of 21 years, during which period the court may front time to time make such orders as the court in the court of the court may front time to time make such orders as the child the court may front time to time make such orders as the child the court is given the power, after a hearing, to place the child in the care and control of the probation officer, and may allow it to remain in its home, subject to visitation and control by the probation officer; or the court is authorized to place the child in a suitable family home subject to the same provisions; or it might authorize the child to be boarded out in some suitable family home in such manner as may be provided by law; or arrange by voluntary contribution or otherwise until suitable provision may be made for the child to the Board of Children's Guardians, to the National Training School for Girls, or to another of the District have had the power to appoint and remove the Board of Children's Guardians, to the National Training School for Girls, or to any institution, or otherwise; or it may be committed to the Board of Children's Guardians, to the Board of Children's Guardians, to the Boar to perform. We feel that this board can better find suitable homes than can the court, and we believe it should be substantially independent of the court in ministering to the wants of the child, except where complaint may be lodged in behalf of the child. We have therefore recommended the following changes in the House till among others:

1. That the members of the Board of Children's Guardians shall be appointed by the President and subject to removal by him.

2. We feel that children who come under the jurisdiction of the court should be committed to the Board of Children's Guardians except where, in the judgment of the court, they should be left with the parents, or where the facts are such as seem to require that the child be committed to the National Training School for Boys or the National Training School for Girls. In this way we have one common, responsible agency to whose care shall be committed the children, and who will be held responsible for them.

3. While we realize that it may be necessary to keep many children under the continuing control of the court, our belief is that the Board of Children's Guardians, or the parents, or the next friend, should have the right, upon their own initiative, at any time after the child shall have been first committed, to begin a proceeding for such modification of this order as may seem just and proper under all the circumstances. We have, therefore, added to section 20 the following proviso:

"Provided, however, That the parents, guardian, or next friend of fication of this order as may seem just and proper under all the circumstances. We have, therefore, added to section 20 the following proviso:

"Provided, however, That the parents, guardian, or next friend of any child who has been or shall hereafter be committed to the Board of Children's Guardians by said court may at any time file in said court a petition, verified by oath, setting forth the action of said Board of Children's Guardians in respect to such child, where and with whom, and under what circumstances such child is living, as well as the character of its surroundings, and any other facts which may exist which indicate a reason why said child shall be released and returned to its parents or guardians, or why its condition should be changed or the former order of the court be modified. A copy of said petition shall at once be served by said court upon the Board of Children's Guardians, whose duty it shall be to file a reply to the same within five days. If, upon examination of the petition and reply, the court is of the opinion that an investigation should be had, it may, upon due notice to all concerned, proceed to hear the facts and determine the questions in issue, and may return such child to the custody of its parent or guardian, or direct said Board of Children's Guardians to make other arrangements for the child's care and welfare, as the circumstances of the case may require."

In this way those who are interested in the child can invoke the aid of the court at any time during the probationary period of the conton home for the childs.

child.

4. We have sought to avoid the necessity of providing a new detention home for the children, and we therefore amend section 19 so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 19. That in no case shall a child coming within the provisions of this act be committed to or detained in a jail or common lockup, but if committed to or detained in the house of detention or other place no such child shall come in contact with adults convicted or under arrest."

The represence proves that it is often best that the child be left in other place no such child shall come in contact with adults convicted or under arrest."

5. Experience proves that it is often best that the child be left in the care of its parents. Ordinarily they are the best guardians; but where adversity overcomes them and they are not able financially to support their children of tender years, though otherwise fully qualified, we believe that we would best serve the interest of the child and of the public by giving the Board of Children's Guardians the right, in proper cases, to make suitable payments to the parents for the care of their children in their own homes. This provision is akin to similar provisions of law in Ohio, Illinois, and other States.

6. Section 25 has been amended so as to read:

"SEC. 25. That the Board of Children's Guardians shall, so far as practicable, select as the custodial agency some individual holding the same religious belief as the parents of said child, or some institution or association governed by persons of like religious faith."

7. Appeal: As the committee has recommended a change in the bill so as to give the right for a rehearing on application of the parents, guardians, or next friend, we felt that it would be wise to modify the appeal provisions of the House bill, and accordingly suggest as the substitute for section 30 of the House bill the following:

"SEC. 30. That any party aggrieved by any final order or judgment or by any interlocutory order of said juvenile court may apply to the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia for the allowance of a special appeal, and said court of appeals may allow such special appeals and allow such special appeals and said court of appeals may allow such special appeals in law causes from the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia to said court of appeals of the interest of justice to allow an appeal. The time for and manner of taking and prosecuting such special appeals and less the judge of the juvenile court shall order a stay of execution pending the appeal, and it shall be the dut unless he is satisfied that the best interests of the child will be seriously prejudiced by such stay."

8. In conclusion, we desire especially to call attention to paragraph b of section 4, which makes the act apply to any child less than 17 years old "who engages in any occupation, calling, or exhibition, who commits, or is found in any place for permitting, any act for which an adult may be punished by law, or who so deports himself or is in such condition or surroundings or under such improper or insufficient guardianship or control as to endanger the morals, or health, or general welfare of such child."

We believe this attempted control of the child is too comprehensive. The jurisdiction of the court should be limited to such cases as affect the morals or health of a child, and not extend to what may be termed its "general welfare."

What is "general welfare"? It includes everything affecting the child's physical, mental, or moral development or well-being.

It might be for the "general welfare" of a child of poor and respectable parentage to turn it over to the custody of some rich man who could afford it every educational advantage, but would anyone claim a court should have power to so do? It might be for the "general welfare" of a child of very rich parents who were bringing it up in the midst of ease and luxury to have its custody turned over to a poor but respectable family for their care and training, but who would give such power to any court?

We accordingly believe the words "general welfare" should be stricken from the bill.

SALES OF LANDS IN MONTANA.

Mr. President, it is evident that we can not Mr. MYERS. begin at the beginning of the calendar and go through it now up to the point where we began to-night. There is a small bill on the calendar, but one which is very important, which it will take only a moment or two to consider, which was objected to the last time the calendar was called, because there was no Senator here to explain it, for which I now desire consideration. My colleague [Mr. WALSH] is the author of the bill, and I reported it from the Committee on Public Lands. We are both interested in the bill. It pertains wholly to the State of Montana. It will only take a minute or two to consider it. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 7796) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to sell and convey to the Great Northern Railway Co. certain lands in the State of Montana for division terminal yards and other railway purposes, and for other purposes. If any Senator wants any explanation now of the bill I know that my colleague will explain it to his satisfaction.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill named by the Senator from Montana?

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I shall not object to the consideration of this bill, but I think that after it has been considered we ought to adjourn.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I think so, too.

Mr. MYERS. I an. willing that that shall be done after the bill has been acted upon.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I will move to adjourn as soon as the consideration of this bill is concluded.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want to say to the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. Myers] that an attorney called upon me the other day with relation to this bill, who explained to me the object and the necessity of its passage. He did say, however, that there were 40 acres-I believe it was a quarter of a quarter section, which would be 40 acres—that the rail-road could get along without. I desire to ask the Senator from Montana if those 40 acres will be eliminated by an amendment which he may offer to-night, or does he expect to pass the bill in its present shape?

WALSH. Mr. President, I have had no suggestion of that character from any source. I have heard no objection from any source to the bill as it has been reported.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say that the attorney representing the railroad, as I understood, would, of course, like to have all of the lands that were included in the bill; but if there was to be any objection at all on account of the amount of land to be sold, he stated that he thought the railroad could get along without the 40 acres. He had a blue print with him and showed me the 40 acres that could be withdrawn, from the description of the land in the bill.

Mr. WALSH. Did the attorney purport to represent the railroad company?

Mr. SMOOT. I so understand. He is their resident attorney here. Really I have not his card with me, and I forget his

Mr. MYERS. I ask if it was Mr. John H. Carroll?

Mr. SMOOT. I repeat to the Senator from Montana that I have forgotten his name; but he called to see me. Has the question ever been brought to the Senator's attention?

Mr. WALSH. Never. I assume, as a matter of course, that the railroad company would not buy any more of this land at the extraordinary price that they have to pay for it than they desire to use. A portion of it is within the area withdrawn under the Milk River irrigation project. The bill provides that the land shall be appraised. The company needs the land for new terminals. They will be obliged to put in new terminals on account of the recent legislation enacted by Congress, and the demands of business require it as well.

The land that is to be appropriated is under the project. The bill provides that after appraisal the company shall pay the market price and pay also such proportion of the cost of the irrigation project as is justly chargeable against that particular So they have to pay the market value of the land, and they have to pay their proportionate share of the cost of the irrigation project. Therefore, it would be very expensive land, and I would not imagine they would take any more than they need.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I would suggest to the Senator—

Mr. SMOOT. Just a moment. Have the railroads now got a "Y" on part of the public lands?

Mr. WALSH. I do not think so, in the case of the lands at Wolf Point. They may have.

Mr. SMOOT. Is it the intention of the railroad to move the "Y"?

Mr. WALSH. No; it is the intention of the railroad company to make this a freight division.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; and in doing so they have to change the railroad tracks?

Mr. WALSH. I can not say as to that. It is to be a terminal yard.

Mr. SMOOT. I gathered that from what the attorney said. He had a blue print there to show the sections that were involved and how they lay, but I have not checked them up, nor could I unless I had the blue print. I suppose, however, that it is only 40 acres anyhow, more or less, and perhaps we had better let the railroad have it.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will also suggest, Mr. President, that it will subject these lands to State taxation, which is so much needed in all the Western States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There being no objection, the Secretary will read the bill.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read as follows

Secretary will read the bill.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be appraised all those parts of section 32 and 33, township 31 north, range 32 east, and of section 5, township 30 north, range 32 east, Montana meridian, State of Montana, described as follows:

Beginning at the point of intersection of the present right of way of the Great Northern Railway with the east line of the northwest quarter of the southeast quarter of said section 33, which point is 75 feet northerly at right angles from the center line of said Great Northern Railway as the same is now constructed across said section 33; thence westerly to a point on the west line of said quarter quarter section 300 feet northerly at right angles from said center line; thence southwesterly parallel with said center line to an intersection with the east and west quarter section 33; thence westerly along said quarter quarter section line to the west line of said section 33; thence westerly along said quarter quarter section line in the southwest quarter of said section 32; thence southerly along the west line of said quarter quarter section into the north line of section 5, township 30 north, range 32 east; thence westerly along said north line to the northwest corner of said section 5; thence southerly along said west line to the present northerly right-of-way line of said railway, which right-of-way line is 75 feet northerly at right angles from the center line of said railway as the same is now constructed; thence northeasterly parallel with said center line to the place of beginning. Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I move that the Senate now take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia withhold the motion for a moment?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do. Mr. BRANDEGEE. I hope the Senator will not propose a recess. I move that the Senate adjourn until 11 o'clock tomorrow morning.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. Overman], who has charge of the business that will be immediately before the Senate to-morrow morning, was quite anxious that we should take a recess.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I know he was, but I am quite anxious that we should take an adjournment.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It will be utterly impossible to take a recess over the objection of any Senator-

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I know it will.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. So I change the motion to a motion to adjourn.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia moves that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 10 o'clock and 43 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, February 13, 1917, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Monday, February 12, 1917.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Eternal God, ever working in and through the minds and hearts of Thy children, making for righteousness and nobility of soul, we thank Thee for all the pure, the true, the noble, the great whom Thou hast raised up in every age of the world's history to be leaders among men, the trend of whose lives has been toward the higher ideals. Our hearts turn with one accord to-day to our own beloved Lincoln whose marvelous life challenges the most profound faith in the over-ruling of Thy providence. From the log cabin to the White House, from the barefooted boy in homespun to the man affixing his signature to the Emancipation Proclamation, from the rail-splitter to the man pleading before the bar of justice, from the struggling lawyer to the man whose counsels were sought by the wisest and most learned, from the village politician to the greatest statesman of his age, the man of the hour to be the savior of his country in its greatest peril, a Moses leading his people through the Wilderness to the Land of Promise; surely if ever a prophet or seer was inspired of Heaven so was Lincoln inspired of God who for four long years bore the burdens and sorrows of his people, North, South, East, and West, upon his heart. And we pray that as citizens, statesmen, and patriots of a reunited country we may follow his illustrious example in every crisis that may arise in the onward course of human events under the divine leadership of the intrepid and dauntless, yet meek and lowly Amen.

The resolutions are as follows:

CONCORD, N. H., February 10, 1917.

To the Hon. Edward H. Wason, M. C., Washington, D. C.

Sir: I have the honor to transmit to you the inclosed resolutions, which have been unanimously adopted by the house of representatives and the senate. Respectfully, yours,

EARLE C. GORDON, Clerk of the Senate. STATE OF NEW HAMPSHIRE, 1917.

Whereas the German Government has notified the Government of the United States that it is the purpose of Germany to sink without warning all merchant ships found within certain prescribed zones, regardless of the rights of neutrals to the freedom of the seas and regardless of all humanitarian considerations; and Whereas the President of the United States on April 18, 1916, notified the German Government that unless that Government immediately abandoned its frightful and inhumane methods of submarine warfare as applied to neutrals the Government of the United States can have no choice but to sever diplomatic relations with the German Empire; and

and
Whereas the President of the United States, in accordance with this warning to the German Government and the subsequent declaration of that Government that it will no longer regard the rights of neutrals and the dictates of humanity in conducting its submarine warfare, has broken off diplomatic relations with Germany: Therefore

Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring), That we approve the action taken by the President of the United States, and that we pledge to him the united support of the people of this State in all his efforts to maintain and defend the dignity, integrity, and rights of this country.

Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be forwarded to the President of the United States and to our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 8229) to establish a national military park at the battle field of Guilford Courthouse, had agreed to the conference asked by the House, and had appointed Mr. Chamberlain, Mr. Hitchcock, and Mr. Du Pont as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed joint resolution (S. J. Res. 210) authorizing the temporary employment of additional policemen for the Capitol Building and Grounds and the Senate and House Office Buildings, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

ARRAHAM LINCOLN.

The SPEAKER. Under the special order the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Russell] will read President Lincoln's Gettysburg Addres

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri, from the Clerk's desk, read Lincoln's Gettysburg Address, delivered at the dedication of the cemetery at Gettysburg, November 19, 1863, as follows

"Four score and seven years ago our fathers brought forth on this continent a new Nation, conceived in liberty and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal.

"Now we are engaged in a great civil war, testing whether that Nation, or any nation so conceived and so dedicated, can long endure. We are met on a great battle field of that war. We have come to dedicate a portion of that field as a final resting place for those who here gave their lives that that Nation might live. It is altogether fitting and proper that we should do this.

"But, in a larger sense, we can not dedicate, we can not consecrate, we can not hallow this ground. The brave men, living and dead, who struggled here have consecrated it far above our poor power to add or detract. The world will little note nor long remember what we say here, but it can never forget what they did here. It is for us, the living, rather to be dedicated here to the unfinished work which they who fought here have thus far so nobly advanced. It is rather for us to be here dedicated to the great task remaining before us-that from these honored dead we take increased devotion to that cause for which they gave the last full measure of devotion; that we here highly resolve that these dead shall not have died in vain; that this Nation under God shall have a new birth of freedom; and that government of the people, by the people, for the people shall not perish from the earth." [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. Page of North Carolina).

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Chiperfield] is recognized for 40 minutes. [Applause.]

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. Mr. Speaker, many years have come and gone since the earth last saw the beloved form of the Great Emancipator.

Although now they almost equal in number the allotted span of the life of a man, not a single laurel that was placed upon his brow by the loving hands of a grateful people has withered or faded under the destroying hand of time.

The passage of the years has but added to their freshness and luster, and his memory has become the more fixed and established, until to-day we again gather in reverence, to do homage to the deeds and achievements of the Nation's greatest-Abraham Lincoln, [Applause.]

In the State from which I come, as well as in the other Commonwealths of the Nation, his greatness is not forgotten, nor are the deeds which he performed lost to remembrance, nor is their glory lessened, and though he has long since passed to the glorious company of the immortals, yet in truth he now liveth and speaks wherever the thought of liberty finds lodgment in

As the gray twilight brings the day to a close on the broad prairies of Illinois, mothers draw their little ones to their knees and tell in tones of affection o'er and o'er again the entrancing story of the life of this great man. And as the tale holds the youthful listeners spellbound, she does not dwell on the battles of year's gone by, but speaks she of his humble origin; of the devoted mother who guided his childish steps; of the struggling youth; the sturdy and determined manhood; and the just and loving heart that found vast expression in the beneficent life that gave to us a most precious legacy-the memory of the greatest and most loved man since the days of the Savior of the world—the memory of the humble rail splitter of the prairies of Illinois. [Applause.]

Others may speak of Lincoln the leader, the statesman, the President, but I speak this day of Lincoln the humane, of Lincoln the man, and the life that has endeared him to all liberty-loving citizens of the world.

At this day we can not understand the severity of the struggles by which he rose or the bleak barrenness of his life, which he describes as "the short and simple annals of the poor." after years he could not bear to speak of those days, and so far as his words are concerned they are a sealed book.

In all the length and breadth of the land to-day there is not poverty such as he knew. It is not accurate for men to say that his life was the common lot of the sturdy pioneer of those days, for this is not correct.

Why, I can not tell, but so it is, that when a great work in the affairs of nations is to be accomplished and a great man required, the early scenes of his life are almost invariably laid amidst the humblest surroundings and in homes where love must supply the greater part of the needs of childhood days. It was so with Gideon, David, Luther, Garfield, Webster, Grant, Edison, and many others, and so it was, although to a much greater degree, with Lincoln.

Reared in a cabin that was inferior to the shelter of the animals on the farm, housed in a structure that was for a long time without windows, doors, or a floor, and that was not even enclosed on all four of its sides, here his early years were spent. The furnishings, meager and cruelly crude, were hardly worthy of the name; his resting place was a bed of leaves laid upon a rude support of poles. Here dwelt and developed the indomitable spirit of the lad, who, while his heart was ofttimes saddened, though not embittered by the privations he experienced and the hardships he endured, suffered not his courage to fail.

Here it was that he learned the vast sympathy and the broad affection for his fellow man that a mansion or a palace does not seem to favor or create.

The church wisely reverences the humble cradle and abode of the Savior, and the American people find inspiration in the life of the youth who, like the chrysalis, outgrows his humble surroundings and emerges triumphant with a character glorious and beautiful.

And so with the lad of poverty, he triumphed, until at his death the world stood silent and the monarchs of the earth bowed their heads in grief and laid their tributes upon his bier as he made his last journey, silent and still, by night and by day. through the unbroken ranks of sorrowing citizens, to the old home, in the heart of Illinois, where now his sacred dust reposes, a precious trust of the people of that State.

Between the humble home and the last imposing spectacle lay a life of love, devotion, and service. In it all is not found one day of selfish ease or idle self-indulgence. No anchorite ever lived more humbly or toiled more vigorously to attain the goal, that was to be his.

To me it is a delight and a privilege to trace in imagination his triumphant, though weary steps.

Love and service, attended with the highest devotion to duty. marked his course. His guide and counsellor in those days of privation was a wonderful mother, whom he loved with all the devotion of his boyish heart and of whom he said: "All that I am or ever hope to be I owe to my angel mother." When the summons came to the rude hut and called her from earth away, it left the lad bereft and alone, and none could bring him comfort.

It was the first staggering blow to a life that already well knew sorrow.

Father and son with their own hands hewed out the rude casket, and winding her in her humble shroud, they laid her away forever from the sight of man, to await that glorious day of awakening when, instead of one of the humblest of the earth, she would be welcomed to the life beyond as the heroic mother of the world's noblest.

Denoting the steadfastness of his devotion and purpose and the strength of his affection, the lad grieved day by day because no words of consolation and benediction had been spoken over the last resting place of his loved one, until learning that a man of God was at a distant point months afterwards, he trudged his weary way over hill and dale and through the lonely forest that the mother might have Christian burial, and gladly brought to her grave a holy man to perform the last rites and there speak the words of comfort and peace.

As the virgin mother of God is remembered by the faithful, so is lovingly adored by the people of the land the mother of Abraham Lincoln, and to all mothers who toil and struggle in sacrifice through poverty and hardship that their children may start the world aright, she stands in their vision as a patron saint, a guiding light, and a glorious inspiration. [Applause.]

The struggles of his boyhood days and their biting poverty left a melancholy impress on his mind and soul.

It gave to him for his entire lifetime the sensitive heart of a child.

He could see no wrong done or hurt come to any living thing without himself being hurt. He sorrowed with the sorrowful and his tears fell with those who had been wounded and broken on the march of life.

His soul responded to the sufferings of the world.

Through his bitter experiences no man could better under-stand than he the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man, and this sympathetic comprehension animated and guided his every act.

In all the record of his life no mean deed is written and in the story of his career, as orally preserved by tradition in the State from which I come, there does not remain even the suggestion that he was capable of a selfish or unworthy act.

As only a starved soul could yearn, he desired affection and when this was given to him by Anne Rutledge it was returned with an ardor that was great. Many say that Anne Rutledge is a myth. I have visited her grave near the town of Old Salem, where it is said that after her death Lincoln came often in sadness and would not be consoled. It is repeated that at one of these times he said that the true inscription for her resting place should be "Here lies the body of Anne Rutledge and the heart of Abraham Lincoln.'

Ofttimes he was oppressed with grief and for days he would seem to be crushed by it. At such a time he once said, am now the most miserable man living. If what I feel were distributed among the whole human family, there would not be a cheerful face on earth. Whether I shall ever be better, I can not tell. I awfully forbode I shall not. To remain as I am is impossible; I must die or be better, it seems to me.

With his sensitive nature he sought the love of those with whom he was brought in contact. Their esteem and good opinion sustained, encouraged, and supported him. Without it he was cast down and disheartened. His reward-and the only one he sought-was the approval of his countrymen. And in later years the knowledge that he was at variance with a great section of the land, caused him the most poignant grief.

It is worthy of much comment that although Lincoln, as he states, had the advantage of only six months of school, and no opportunity for what is sometimes called higher education, that he was a man of great and profound knowledge.

Perhaps not widely versed in the details of the arts or sciences, yet he knew men. He knew their thoughts and minds and souls and the motives which animated them. He knew their strength and their weakness. He was brother and father to all mankind, and knew their sorrows and their trials. To them he could speak in simple words that touched their deepest sensibilities, and could play upon the chords of their emotion in language plain, it is true, but with words that lived and breathed, in language that stands to this day as an unparalleled example of literary style.

If you ask where he attained this power, the answer, it seems to me, is easy to give.

He and his forbears were born amid surroundings where life was stern, and where each day was an actual struggle for

Under these conditions speech was as plain as the method of There they employed the good old Anglo-Saxon of a century past.

They stripped from their meager vocabulary all effete and soft words and left remaining only those that were strong and vigorous, and of these they did not employ many.

The Bible was almost the only book and its influence upon their speech was marked. Lincoln used words that were dynamic in their vigor. The addition of a syllable to a sentence was to him a matter of profligacy.

Each phrase was cut to the last degree and thought was given expression in sentences that were strong, direct, and filled with meaning.

Lincoln used the monosyllable whenever possible, and his sentences ofttimes were almost entirely made up of these elementary words. When he spoke to the people in these simple terms they listened to him gladly as they did in days of yore to the Man of Galilee, whose words were also plain and touched the hearts of all.

In this simple style, Lincoln, said:

I am not bound to win, but I am bound to be true. I am not bound to succeed, but I am bound to live up to what light I have. I must stand with anybody that stands right; stand with him while he is right and part with him when he is wrong.

And so again they were employed by him in making this prediction:

The mystic chords of memory stretching from every battle field and every patriot grave to every living heart and hearthstone, will yet swell the chorus of the Union when again touched as they will surely be by the better angels of our nature.

And it was in these same words of common speech that he astonished and charmed the world when in their marvellous beauty he paid his tribute on the field of Gettysburg to the men of the land who had given their lives that the Nation might live forever. This famous speech consisted of about 300 words.

Of these, 204 were words of one syllable.

In all of his preparation for his life work, he was thorough and painstaking to the last degree. One day he was confronted with the word "demonstrate." Asking himself what it was to demonstrate, he went to his dictionary and saw that its meaning was "to make clear." He asked himself the question, if he could demonstrate and "make clear," and his answer was that he could not. Thereupon he laid aside the study of law, upon which he had commenced some months before, and took up the study of Euclid and did not again return to the law until he had mastered the first five books of Euclid's great work.

So it was in all his acts.

Thoroughness was his rule, and upon this solid basis did he build his life.

The way that Lincoln traversed in public life was not an easy one. Probably no man who ever attained great prominence has tasted as bitterly of defeat as did he.

In 1832 he was defeated for a seat in the Legislature of Illinois. In 1848 he was defeated for renomination to Congress, to his great disappointment.

It then seemed to him, and so he said, that he believed that his public career was forever ended and that there was no further public service for him.

In 1849 he was a candidate for Commissioner of the General Land Office, but was defeated because Daniel Webster cast his influence in favor of another candidate.

In 1854 he was a candidate for United States Senator, but after a time withdrew in favor of Judge Trumbull.

In 1856 he was a candidate for Vice President, but was not named by the convention.

At that time he said:

I have the cottage at Springfield and about $8,000 in money. If they make me Vice President with Seward, as some say they will, I hope I shall be able to increase it to $20,000, and that is as much as any man ought to want.

In 1858 he was a candidate for the Senate of the United States, but was defeated by Judge Douglas, although he carried the popular vote of the State by 4,000.

His was a brave and indomitable heart.

He was not dismayed or crushed by these successive defeats, although his campaigns were made at a great sacrifice.

Lincoln was a comparatively poor man, and just what the sacrifices were can best be told in his own words to the Republican State committee of Illinois when he was told by them that there was no money to pay outstanding bills.

He wrote to the committee, as follows:

He wrote to the committee, as follows:

Yours of the 15th is just received. I wrote you the same day. As to the pecuniary matter, I am willing to pay according to my ability, but I am the poorest hand living to get others to pay. I have been on expense so long without earning anything that I am absolutely without money now for even household purposes. Still if you can put up $250 for me toward discharging the debt of the committee, I will allow it when you and I settle the private matter between us. This, with what I have already paid, and with an outstanding note of mine, will exceed my subscription of $500. This, too, is exclusive of my ordinary expenses during the campaign, all of which, being added to my loss of time and business, bears pretty heavily on one no better off in world's goods than I, but, as I had the post of honor, it is not for me to be overnice. You are feeling badly, "And this, too, shall pass away, never fear."

And after the long struggle came the great victory, and he saf

And after the long struggle came the great victory, and he sat in the seat of the mighty.

But this did not change a single fiber of his kindly nature. The mountain crest meant no more to him than the lowly valley.

When power came and greatness was his, he wore his honors modestly, without arrogance or ostentation, and humility and kindness marked his course. He was to the Nation Father Abraham, and with meekness and might, affection and care, he led his children through the valley of the shadow, safely into the fold of peace and tranquillity.

No greater tribute can be paid to the wisdom and worth of the opinion of Lincoln than is paid to-day by those who use him and his words as the final and supreme argument in favor of some proposed plan or movement.

It is demonstration to the minds of many when it can be said, "Lincoln favored these things."

But while the tribute is great the name of Lincoln is not always worthily employed.

Those who seek to destroy and break down the vital principles of our Government do not hesitate to invoke his name as an aid in the accomplishment of that purpose.

By the frenzied orator of the curb who inveighs against all government his auditors are told that Lincoln stood for absolute freedom of thought and action and that he had no regard for the limitations of law.

They are not told, however, that Lincoln stood for freedom of speech and action only under the Constitution and the law. They are not told that in speaking of this freedom of speech he said:

Yes; we will speak for freedom and against slavery as long as the Constitution of our country guarantees free speech, until everywhere in this wide land the sun shall shine and the rain shall fall and the winds shall blow upon no man who goes forth to unrequited toil.

The things for which he stood and which he attempted to do were in the name of the Constitution, and to this instrument as he construed it-he was wholly devoted.

The reckless and hairbrained experiment in government possessed no attraction for him, nor was he inclined to adopt a plan merely because it was new and untried, but going hand in hand with this conservatism was the ever-present desire to so adapt the Constitution that it would respond to the changing needs and requirements of the people.

While regarding with reverence the precedents of the past, he also sought to be acutely conscious of, and responsive to, the economic demands and needs of the present.

As he was intensely human in all his aspects of life, so did he make a sympathetic and human interpretation of the Constitution, where the rights of men were involved, which, while not always strict or entirely logical, still made for the uplifting and the welfare of the people of the land.

With such a construction of the Constitution of the United States by those in power, the people of the Nation will not quarrel. It is radical changes in our forms of government, not authorized by the Constitution, that will be met with condemna-

Those who find comfort in the denial of a God or of a Supreme Being frequently claim Lincoln as one who shared their views and approved their lack of belief.

No greater or more foul slander could be uttered against this

Lincoln walked hand in hand with God for many years before his death, and there is no act of his life that warrants the claims so advanced.

It may be that he could not define a particular creed that en-tirely and closely fitted his views, but his steadfast belief in a God and His divine power to guide and shape the affairs of men was touching.

There is hardly an utterance of Lincoln that has been preserved that does not speak of this belief and faith.

On one occasion, early in life, when his father was about to pass away Lincoln wrote this letter:

pass away Lincoln wrote this letter:

I sincerely hope father may recover his health, but, in all events tell him to remember to call upon and confide in our great and good and merciful Maker, who will not turn away from him in any extremity. He notes the fall of a sparrow and numbers the hairs of our heads, and He will not forget the dying man who puts his trust in Him. Say to him that if we could meet now it is doubtful whether it would be more painful than pleasant, but that if it be his lot to go now, he will soon have a joyous meeting with many loved ones gone before, and where the rest of us, through the help of God, hope ere long to join them.

His state papers are filled with appeals to God and the statement of his helief in a Supreme Being and his reliance upon His ment of his belief in a Supreme Being and his reliance upon His aid and assistance.

His trusting faith was like that of a little child who confidingly puts his hand in that of a loving father and walks the path with a sublime trust and without fear.

One can not fail but be impressed with the startling fact that the entire achievement of the life of Abraham Lincoln that has caused the generations to remember him were accomplished and performed in barely fifteen hundred days.

If from his life were taken the actions and deeds embraced in those days his name would barely be known outside of the counties of Illinois where his activities had been.

When defeated for the Senate by Douglas it seemed to the doubting many that his career was done; but the defeats of the past were, to him, only the foundations on which he builded his future triumph.

His trials and struggles and sorrows had refined his soul until the dross was gone, and out of his bitter experience came forth a man-apparently called of God-to guide the people of the land, both North and South, out of the horrors of war to the place where, rededicated by the blood of a hundred fields, they stood a united and an invincible people.

One lesson taught by Lincoln that may be helpful at the present day was his determination to stand steadfast before the nations of the world for the rights of America.

Although opposed by the bravest of the brave at home, he did not fail to courageously speak for the dignity of the country when it was assailed from abroad, and like our own President in the crisis of to-day he spoke in the name of our Nation for the preservation of its rights.

The poet has told in inspiring lines of the response that the people of the land will make to such an appeal, and it was no more true when penned than it is to-day.

This whole Nation will respond in arms and bear any hardship that may be imposed, no matter how severe, whenever a wrong that involves a national principle is inflicted by a foreign

If the call to arms should come, which God forbid, truly it can be said:

Up the hillside, down the glen, Rouse the sleeping citizen, Summon out the might of men.

Like a lion growling low, Like a night storm rising slow, Like the tread of unseen foe.

It is coming—it is nigh; Stand your homes and altars by; On your own free thresholds die.

Clang the bells in all your spires; On the gray hills of your sires Fling to heaven your signal fires.

O, for God and duty stand, Heart to heart and hand to hand, 'Round the old graves of the land.

Whose shrinks or falters now, Whose to the yoke would bow, Brand the craven on his brow.

Freedom's soil hath only place For a free and fearless race— None for traitors false and base.

Perish party, perish clan; Strike together while ye can, Like the arm of one strong man.

[Applause.]

How marvelously like the ministry of the Savior of the world were the beneficent years of this great leader of men.

How like the passion of the Son of God was the martyrdom which he suffered that all men might be free and, better yet, be free with the Nation united.

For him the zenith of his career had been reached, and, like Moses, he stood upon the height and viewed the land regenerated, but which he might not enter; and then, on Good Friday, the day that the Christian world was sorrowfully observing the crucifixion of the Christ, God took him, even though the eve-

Yea, he was taken, if it can be so said of the death of the clay that formed his body; but there was left the undying spirit of this great man to lead and protect the people of this Nation by the wisdom he displayed for many generations to come.

Great men have come and gone since Lincoln fell, and many have attained high places in the Nation, but it is rarely that one, when his power was at the greatest, attained the wonderful influence over the people of the land that has been manifested, and still continues to be manifested until this day, by the memory of Abraham Lincoln.

That influence has guided the Nation when the hand of living man has faltered, for being dead, yet he speaketh to the souls of men with power and conviction.

And so to-day, as a Representative of the State of Illinois, I pay a humble tribute to the life and work of her great son.

Into his hands they gave all that was best and dearest.

To him they intrusted the sacred honor of the Nation, and never did he fail that trust.

In his death they honor him and preserve his memory.

In the Hall of Representatives at Springfield only two portraits are found.

On the one hand is that of Douglas, who in the hour of stress clasped hands with his old-time political opponent, and who held up the arms of Lincoln as Aaron did of old.

The place of Douglas is secure in the affections of the people of the Prairie State.

From the other side of the hall looks down the towering form of Abraham Lincoln, and there the people of the State come and stand with tearful eyes, gazing into the kindly face of this great man, and as they depart they take away an inspiration to better and more fully discharge the duties of citizenship.

Our State has taken his ashes and his fame and his memory to its heart.

One it will guard and the others it will proclaim until the Father of Waters no longer runs to the sea and until time is no

Not without thy wondrous story, Illinois, Illinois, Can be writ the Nation's glory. Illinois, Illinois; On the record of thy years Abram Lincoln's name appears, Grant and Logan, and our tears, Illinois.

In one of the most beautiful parks in the city of Chicago stands a wonderful monument, erected to commemorate the life of this, one of the world's greatest men.

It is builded beside the great inland sea, whose ceaseless surf sounds a requiem by night and by day.

The first rays of the rising sun rest upon it in rosy salutation, and here again they pause in benediction ere the night closes

To this spot the people come as they might to a shrine of freedom.

Here they pause and linger.

Here gather the poor, of whom Lincoln said, "God must have loved them or else He would not have made so many of them."

At the base of the statue the little children play.

Here kings and princes and rulers have sent their wreaths and floral tributes to be laid at the feet of the imposing figure that, motionelss and silent, ever looks toward the great city.

In loving remembrance this memorial has been builded by the people of Illinois to honor its first citizen, Abraham Lincoln, the martyred President.

On its base, chiseled deep into the lasting granite, is one of the greatest sentences in the English language, and from its perusal we can gain the secret of the power and see the faith that animated Lincoln and gave him the courage to perform his

There may be found a motto that any man can live by, and that can be adopted by a nation in its hour of need.

These are his words-noble and courageous:

Let us have faith to believe that right makes might, and firm in that conviction let us to the end dare to do our duty as God gives us to see it.

Words of mine can add nothing to the veneration in which this wonderful character is held by the people of the land, both North and South.

He is loved and revered and his fame grows more secure as the generations pass.

I can not refrain, however, from adding as a far greater tribute than any I can pay that which was penned of Lincoln by a sweet singer.

It seems to me that it is a sublime epitomization of the character and the life of this man.

racter and the life of this man.

The color of the ground was in him, the red earth;
The tang and odor of the primal things—
The rectitude and patience of the rocks;
The gladness of the wind that shakes the corn;
The courage of the bird that dares the sea,
The justice of the rain that loves all leaves;
The pitty of the snow that hides all scars;
The loving kindness of the wayside well;
The tolerance and equity of light that gives as freely to
The shrinking weed as to the great oak flaring to the wind—
The grave's low hill as to the Matterhorn
That shoulders out the sky.

And so he came
From prairie cabin to the Capitol,
One fair ideal led our chieftain on.
Forevermore he burned to do his deed
With the fine stroke and gesture of a king
He built the rail pile as he built the State,
Pouring his splendid strength through every blow,
The conscience of him testing every stroke,
To make his deed the measure of a man.

So came the Captain, with his mighty heart; And when the step of earthquake shook the house, Wrenching the rafters from their ancient hold, He held the ridge pole up and spiked again. The rafters of the Home. He held his place—Held the long purpose like a growing tree—Held on through blame and faltered not at praise And when he fell in whirlwind, he went down As when a kingly cedar, green with boughs, Goes down with a great shout upon the hills, And leaves a lonesome place against the sky.

[Loud applause.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Washington [Mr. DILL].

Mr. DILL. Mr. Speaker, it is not my purpose to-day to tell the story of the life of Abraham Lincoln. With that all are familiar. Only his sad face and homely figure are better known to the American people than are the details of his tedious struggle from poverty to power. Nor shall I attempt his eulogy. Lincoln is too big a theme. His greatness is different from the greatness of other men. We can not measure him. There is no standard by which to compare him with any other man. No other common man ever moved in such high position without losing his commonness. He is the only character in all history whose native simplicity no honor could transform and no office change. All I hope to do to-day is to mention some of the characteristics of his greatness and to call attention to certain facts as evidences that a divine power so timed his life and so fashioned his faculties that he would supremely fill his country's need when his country called.

Abraham Lincoln had an unshakable religious faith. Be-cause he was not affiliated with any church, some have said he was not a Christian. No conclusion concerning him was more grossly wrong. He himself said, "Show me the church whose only creed is to love God and to love man, and I'll walk a hundred miles to join it." All through his life and especially during the war this religious faith was the guiding force of every great deed he performed. When defeats came so thick and fast that even some members of his Cabinet openly despaired of success, he declared to them in a Cabinet meeting. "This is God's fight, and He will win it in His own good time." Thus did his religious faith become the anchor of the Union cause, the buoy of the Nation's hope. It was the overflowing reservoir furnishing strength and inspiration which gave him his superiority over every other man of his time.

As a leader and ruler of men he was ordinarily merciful and kind; but he became, when occasion called, a man of iron with the courage of a lion. The very passion of his existence as President was to save the Union. To save the Union, he called to his Cabinet every man who had been a formidable candidate to his Cabinet every man who had been a formidable candidate against him for the nomination for President in 1860. Seward, his chief rival, he made Secretary of State; Chase, Ohio's favorite son, he made Secretary of the Treasury; and Cameron, Pennsylvania's man, Secretary of War. When Cameron failed and Lincoln felt he must have a man who would rule with an iron hand, he turned to Edwin M. Stanton, of Cincinnati, a Democrat, who up to that time had been the severest critic which the administration had had. This was the same Stanton who 20 years before had administered the severest insult the young backwoods lawyer had ever received, and this man Stanton he made Secretary of War.

What turbulent times Lincoln had with these men! Again and again he found it necessary to ignore Seward, plead with Chase, and bear with Stanton in order to keep them working at the tremendous tasks which he knew must be performed. How perfectly he managed them is best shown by Stanton's statement immediately following Lincoln's death, as he stood just outside the little room down there on Tenth Street, in Washington, and referring to the death chamber said: "In there lies the most perfect ruler the world has ever known." After that, it is not surprising that in later years Grant said: "He was indeed a commander of commanders and incontestably the greatest man I ever knew.

Somebody has said that a truly great man is just a common man enlarged. The mountain is composed of exactly the same substances as the plain, the only difference being that the mountain mass has been piled up into the sky. Such was the greatness of Abraham Lincoln. Born and reared amidst the humblest conditions of life, he was truly a son of the soil. Although he reached the highest heights of power with more than a million men in arms to do his will, he remained to the hour of his death, the most gentle, the most just, and the most merciful ruler the world has ever known.

I have long believed and I now believe that there was something divine in the life of this plain and simple man. If I were a clergyman I would preach a sermon on this day, and I would entitle it "The hand of God in history." I would take as my chiefest proof of God's desire and purpose that this Nation should live, the life and work of Abraham Lincoln.

In that sermon I would picture God as standing at the threshold of the nineteenth century looking adown the vista of the Seeing the formation of the black clouds of an awful civil war and realizing the need of a new and strange kind of man for leader during that period, I would picture Him as selecting the choicest spirit of all heavenly realm and giving it birth in the form of a little boy out in the wilds of Kentucky, to be known to the world as Abraham Lincoln. I would show that for his mother He chose a woman of such strong religious sentiment that although she would be with her son but nine short years, in that brief time she would instill her religious ideals into his life so deeply they would control his entire career. I would point out that for his father, God chose a roving, reckless, almost worthless fellow who would flee on westward at the first signs of civilization. Thus did He keep this boy away from the deadening leveling processes of the schools and the crushing conventionalities of civilized communities, especially great cities, depriving him of all books save such as Shakespeare and the Bible, and reared him up in nature's school so that when his great work came he, like nature, would never compromise.

Then I would show that when the one danger to the divine plan appeared in the form of his great love for that little woman, Anne Rutledge, and God saw that this man who had been the object of His special care might soon become so happy in the love of wife and home and child that he would neglect to take part in the struggles which were necessary to fit him for the leadership to which he was destined, God took her Thus was the only flower that ever budded along the hard and stony pathway of his life cut down before it bloomed, and Lincoln led to woo and win the ambitious Mary Todd who ever urged him on to position and to power.

Nor would I end my sermon here! I would point out that God caused him to choose for his life profession the law-the law, that broad but steep and dangerous pathway over which so many men have passed to ruin or to fame. I would point out that to aid his development God chose from among New England's brilliant boys the most brilliant of them all, Stephen A. Douglas, and took him out to Illinois to act as a pacemaker for this pioneer. I would show how these two men went through life together, yet opposed. During early life both lived in adjoining counties and practiced law in the same courts. Both wooed the same girl and Lincoln won her. Both served in the same State legislature together. Both were in the National Congress, Lincoln in the House and Douglas in the Senate at the same time. Both ran for the Senate in Illinois in 1858 and Douglas won, making almost certain Lincoln's election to the presidency in two years more. Then as a crowning close to all their struggles almost the last public act of Douglas's life was to hold Lincoln's hat while he took the oath of office as President. Lastly, I would show that when the awful war was done and Lincoln stood on the highest heights of fame, haloed by the homage and adoration of a world, this Divine Being took him as the Nation's last and most precious sacrifice of all that war-took him away before envy and jealousy could heap abuse and calumny upon his memory and his name.

Thus would I show how an All-Wise God had so planned this man's life, so shaped his surroundings, and so arranged his associations that by means of him he had kept us one Nation,

Sovereign, grand, and free. [Applause.]

For whom is the lesson of it all? The lesson is for the boys and girls of this Nation and for the boys and girls of all other nations, of which they will be the rulers when they are grown.

The story of his life is our greatest national asset. I know of no more hopeful sign of our country's future greatness and permanent security than the twenty millions of boys and girls in the public schools of this land who are being educated under the inspiration of his name and with reverence for his memory, because when the centuries of history shall have shaken the great characters of the past through the unerring sieve of time, one of the few that will remain is Abraham Lincoln. [Loud applause.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Pou] may be granted leave to address the House for five minutes on the subject of Abraham Lincoln. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, my love and veneration for the character of this great man is such that I would do myself an injustice if I were to remain silent while the House of Representatives is doing honor to the memory of Abraham Lincoln. One of the wonders of the life and character of the Man of Galilee is that as the centuries go by His influence grows. It is spreading, making men better wherever men live. Growing, gathering more and more influence and power, the example, the character, the life work of Abraham Liucoln will live forever. As the years go by his influence becomes greater and the love of all the people of this great Nation for him more intense. The greatest blow that could have stricken the section from which I come in 1865 was that which occurred on that fateful night in April when the life of this great and good man was taken. Our people realize that. I have wondered if the saints on high see what is taking place here below. We have a united Nation now. We all love the flag. We are all ready to fight for it. There We all love the flag. would be an instant rallying under that flag by all Americans the minute this Nation is attacked. With what glorious satisfaction the spirit of Abraham Lincoln may contemplate this realization of the great passion of the last days of his life.

Yes; we all love the flag and we are all ready to fight for it. Thank God sectional lines have been obliterated. Bitterness has passed away and in its place there is the feeling of friendly brotherhood. The yearning of the last years of Lincoln's life was to see a Nation reunited by the ties of love. Thank God, this great, grand consummation is here, more attributable, probably, to the life and character and work of Mr. Lincoln than to any other man living or dead. [Applause.] Aye, Mr. Speaker, in truth we are not enemies but friends, all Americans everywhere. So I bring you this humble little tribute to tell you how I believe my people feel toward this wonderfully good

We are building a great monument to him down on the banks of the Potomac; but we can not honor him by building that monument. We can not honor him by building any monument. We may honor ourselves. [Applause.] His statue will stand there for coming generations to look upon, but it will not meet the sunshine and the storm with calmer mien than did he, nor can its granite base be firmer than is the love of all the people of this Nation. [Applause.] That monument, that statue, in the course of time, will crumble, but the love for Abraham Lincoln will live forever in the hearts of a united people. [Applause.]

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Speaker, when, on April 15, 1865, Gen. Garfield heard that Abraham Lincoln had been assassinated he uttered the ever-memorable words "God reigns, and the Govern-ment at Washington still lives." No other sentence and no other speech ever made has more thoroughly embodied Lincoln's faith and Lincoln's sole ambition in life.

During all the four years of that terrible irrepressible conflict he constantly hoped and prayed that the Union would be preserved, and that when the time would arrive for him to hand over the reins of government to his successor, it would be a united Nation that would greet him. The battle had been fought and the victory was his, but like Moses he was not destined to reap the harvest.

In the short span of 56 years, having first seen the light of day on February 12, 1809, he wrote his name on the pages of history in such a way that time can not efface it. To have been merely the savior of the Union would have entitled him to the lasting generous regard of generations yet unborn, but to have been the one who freed 3,000,000 of men from the bondage of slavery was bound to win him such a measure of fame as to forever make his name secure not only in the hearts of his countrymen but in the memory of all mankind.

Where can you find a man whose patriotism has not been strengthened and his pulse quickened whenever he has read or heard Lincoln's Gettysburg address. Longer speeches have been made but no orator pleading for the highest interests of the Republic has ever been able to equal that address, either for purity of language or for sounding a clarion note to citizens to rally to the defense of the Union.

In a few minutes of time one is unable to give full expression to that nobleness of character that was his by nature; to that spirit of mercy displayed by him on many an occasion when some poor unknown mother appealed to him to save her boy from death after having been condemned by court-martial; to his constant and abiding faith in Him that guides not only the destinies of men but nations as well; to that inborn wit and humor that immediately removed the seriousness on the faces of the members of his Cabinet; and to his genuine loyalty to the generals in the United States Army who achieved victories.

Fifty years have come and passed away since Lincoln was taken from us. The Union has grown larger and stronger each The bitterness of civil strife has gradually melted away until now all men, whether descendents of those who fought for the gray or those who battled for the blue, have come to recognize the greatness of the man who stood by the helm of the ship of state during the four trying years of 1861 to 1865.

Men have commenced to judge him rightly until now in more than half of the States in the Union his birthday is observed as legal holiday. I am looking forward to the time, and I believe it will be very shortly, when Congress will take action toward observing the day in the same manner in the city of Washington. Then indeed shall we have visible evidence and give proof to the world that the men of the South and the North have at last joined hands in acknowledging Lincoln's greatness and able achievements and at the same time forever cemented the ties that bind us together as a Nation, so that this "Government of the people, by the people, and for the people shall not perish from the earth," but shall always be a power seeking to be at peace with the world, at the same time commanding universal respect for our flag both at home and abroad.

Men and rulers may come and go, but as long as men can read so long will Abraham Lincoln's loving memory and his noble deeds survive.

Mr. Speaker, a year ago the Outlook published an article on Abraham Lincoln by Mr. E. S. Nadel, formerly in the Diplomatic Service of the United States, so full of recollections and comparisons of Abraham Lincoln that I deem it worthy of being read here to-day. It is as follows:

I, LINCOLN AND STANTON.

I am indebted to a friend, who was not one of Lincoln's admirers, for

I am indebted to a friend, who was not one of Lincoln's admirers, for the following:

"When the last call for troops was made and a conscription ordered, the proportion assigned to the city of New York was some thousands in excess of what some people believed to be our legal liability, and our committee on volunteering were certain they could prove this if they could have access to the books of the War Department. The committee—Orison Blunt, John Fox, Smith Ely, and William M. Tweed—went to Washington and asked Secretary Stanton's permission to examine the records, which was brusquely refused on the pretext that the books were in constant use. The committee then went to the White House and saw Lincoln in his private office. After asking them to be seated, he resumed his chair, in which he sat partly on his back, with his heels literally on the mantlepiece. His linen bosom was unbuttoned, exposing his red flannel shirt. He was told that we had furnished, in excess of previous calls, more than enough to exempt us from the present call, which we would prove if we could have access to the records for any two hours during the night when they were not in use. He was also assured that in no event would a conscription be needed in New York, as we were getting 50 volunteers daily, and a short postponement of the draft would enable us to supply all the demands, just or unjust. He listened with an expression of profound sadness, and said he thought the request a reasonable one, but he feared if the order for a draft was postponed volunteering would cease. He said that a similar committee from Cincinnati had applied to him for a postponement of the draft, as they were getting 20 volunteer appeared. 'That,' said Lincoln, 'is human nature. When you think death is after you, you run; but as soon as death stops, you stop.' At this he sprang from his chair, throwing his arms about, and laughed loudly at his own dismal joke. Lincoln gave the New York committee a note to Stanton, substantially as follows:

"Dear Secretarax: These

"'Dear Secretary: These gentlemen from New York ask only what I think is right. They wish access to the records, with two accountants, for two hours at any time to-night. I have told them that they may have double that time.

"'Yours,

A. Lincoln.'

"Yours,

"They took the note to Stanton, who handed it to Frye. The latter glanced at it, and, saying, 'Take seats,' left the office. In a few minutes he returned and said, curtly, 'The order is annulled; you can't see the books.' The committee withdrew and returned to New York the next forenoon. The clerk of the committee, Eugene Durbin, said that late in the evening an Army officer with two orderlies called at the committee's rooms and presented the chairman with a note, which read as follows: 'The Secretary of War expects to be informed that the committee on volunteering from the county of New York have left Washington prior to noon to-morrow.' The committee, after their return, said it was Stanton, and not Lincoln, who was President of the United States."

Washington prior to hoon to-morrow. The committee, after their feturn, said it was Stanton, and not Lincoln, who was President of the United States."

The gentleman to whom I am indebted for this—Mr. Smith Ely, a former mayor of New York and a Member of Congress—was a Democratic political leader of war times, and, although one of the most amiable and kind-hearted of men, had, of course, to some degree the feelings regarding Lincoln shared by the men who in those days frequented the Manhattan Club. He does not see much point in Lincoln's remark about death and the draft. To me the point seems clear enough. "When the devil was sick, the devil a saint would be," etc. Nor will the reader conclude with the committee that Stanton was President and not Lincoln. Stanton was a man of great administrative ability, a kind of human dynamo, such as you could hardly duplicate in the country, a patriot and honest man besides. As long as the issue was one of no great importance—which seems to have been the case here—Lincoln let him have his way.

Stanton was probably the greatest man in civil life produced by the war—of course, after Lincoln. My earliest recollection of him is seeing him at the trial of Sickles for the murder of Key, which took place when I was a boy at school in Washington. He was one of Sickles's counsel. The acquaintance which Sickles formed at that time with Stanton was in part the cause of Sickles's success as a soldier in the Civil War. Stanton advanced and supported him. I remember at the trial a thick-set man with a heavy beard, who sat behind the other lawyers, and who would occasionally interpolate a remark in a gruff voice. He had that physical build which is said to be one of the best for strength—very broad shoulders and deep chest, a large body set on short, stout legs. He had Herculean powers of labor. I suppose he was honest, but I do not suppose that he was an overscrupulous man. He would have been out of place as war minister if he had been. When some one complained to him of Gen, Meigs, who find it hard to do." One wonders what the things were that Stanton would not do.

I am able to make only one original contribution to the history of Stanton. A young girl once told me this incident about him. The reader, of course, knows Coleridge's poem beginning—

"All thoughts, all passions, all delights,
Whatever stirs this mortal frame,
Are but the ministers of love,
And feed his sacred flame."

This girl's father was a client and a great friend of Stanton's, and she used to make long visits to Stanton's family during the war. She was a pretty girl and a belie of those days. She said that Stanton worked all the time and that the only relaxation he allowed himself was that on Sunday afternoon for an hour or so he would read poetry to her, and she told me that the poem he read oftenest and with the greatest pleasure was "All thoughts, all passions, all delights."

II. LINCOLN AND FORESIGHT.

greatest pleasure was "All thoughts, all passions, all delights."

It is strange that Lincoln with his thoughtfulness should not have in some degree foreseen the approach of secession and war. He had been in Congress and must have known the southern people fairly well. He was undoubtedly a foreseeing kind of man. No one saw more clearly than he did that the country could not continue to exist "half free and half slave." It seems strange, therefore, that he had not some notion of what was coming. But who does foresee what is ahead? Benjamin Franklin was a foreseeing kind of man one would suppose. He spent a number of years in France before the Revolution, knew the country well, and was on intimate terms with the leading people of France. He remained there till 1785. In eight years from that time the King's head was off; and yet the wise, observant, thoughtful, and presumably farsighted Franklin never seems in the least to have suspected what was coming. The French Revolution would indeed have been very difficult to foresee, as perhaps our Civil War was in a less degree. But there are other things not so difficult to know beforehand which are not foreseen. I was in the House of Commons one night during the Franco-Prussian War when Vernon Harcourt, who was at that time unconnected with the Government, accused the Government of shortsightedness in not foreseeing the war, implying that he had foreseen it. Robert Lowe, an extremely clever man, got up to answer for the Government, and said: "Because the gentleman foresaw this war he thinks that everybody else should have been as clever as he was. I am free to say, however, that the whole thing was a complete surprise to me." Men are always too busy with present matters to bother with what is problematical. Take the case of the present war. Half a dozen European mations have each been holding for 40 years a loaded pistol with the finger on a hairtrigger, and yet how surprised we were when, in the lapse of time, one of the pistols went off. Much had been said about "the

as bores or cranks.

There were, however, some prescient souls who did foresee our great struggle. Webster, no doubt, had some prevision of that conflict in which his only son was to die—"When my eyes shall be turned to behold for the last time the sum in heaven," etc. Mr. S. J. Tilden said to John Bigelow some years before the war: "If Mr. Bryant and those who think as he does succeed in what they are about the streets of this city will run red with blood." They did run red during the draft riots, much redder than is commonly understood. Mr. Loyall Farragut tells me that his father, Admiral Farragut—then Capt. Farragut—and he were on the balcony of the old Metropolitan Hotel in Broadway one night in 1858 and were looking at a Republican torchlight procession, when his father said: "I don't like these marching men. It looks to me like war."

he were on the balcony of the old Metropolitan Hotel in Broadway one night in 1858 and were looking at a Republican torchlight procession, when his father said; "I don't like these marching men. It looks to me like war."

My father had a friend, John Heart, who was a Federal office-holder at Washington under Buchanan. He was from South Carolina, and had been the editor of the Charleston Mercury. He came to pay us a visit in Brooklyn in the summer of 1860. He had just been in Charleston, and from what he told us we could have no doubt that South Carolina would secede if Lincoin were elected. I had been lately much in the South, and, although only 17 years old, knew enough of the temper and characteristics of the southern people to be aware that secession once started, it would be very difficult to prevent the spread of it. But youth is sanguline and precipitate. I wanted to see the power of slavery curtailed and was willing to take the chances, and other boys and young men felt as I did.

Calhoun, perhaps the most prescient of American statesmen, foresaw the struggle and wanted to bring on the war before the strength of the rapidly growing North should prove too great to be withstood by the South. The scheme of the North should have been to put off the struggle as long as possible for the same reason. If Calhoun saw what was for the interest of the South, it should not have required superhuman intelligence on the part of the North to see where its interests lay. No one, however, at the North seemed to see this point quite as sharply defined as Calhoun did. But there were those in the North who saw that great danger, perhaps disunion and war, would follow antislavery agitation, and who wished to adhere to the status quo, preferring post-ponement and the chances of the future to the present probabilities of secssion and war.

But would it have been possible, after the repeal of the Missouri agitation, and who wished to anners to the states que, probabilities of ponement and the chances of the future to the present probabilities of secession and war.

But would it have been possible, after the repeal of the Missouri compromise, to put off the war? If Douglas, the marplot, or demagogue, or egotist, or whatever he was, could have been suppressed, it might have been possible to postpone the war for four or eight years, or even longer. But with the repeal once passed, and Pandora's box open, and the newspapers and all the poets and orators hounding the country on to war, was it possible to do it? You can not teach tact and discretion to 20,000,000 people. One night in Plymouth Church in Brooklyn, a few weeks before John Brown's execution—so a friend told me who was there—Wendell Phillips, a Massachusetts man, said: "The State preclamations of Massachusetts onclude with the words, 'God save the Commonwealth of Massachusetts'; but if Massachusetts allows John Brown to be hanged, I say, 'God damn the Commonwealth of Massachusetts', but if Massachusetts allows John Brown to be hanged, I say, 'God damn the Commonwealth of Massachusetts,'" The effect of this spoken to a vast, crowded, and sympathetic audience with the utmost passion by a perfectly honest fanatic, who was at the same time an incomparable orator, may be easily conceived. When such incidents were possible, war could not be far off. If the war was to come, Lincoln was the perfect and apparently heaven-appointed leader, and it was perhaps fortunate that he was no wiser in advance than he was.

We are fortunate to have had in our short career two such characters. Washington and a course, a man of much less sellent characteristics within Lincoln. The young Chastellux found, "his distinction to be in the harmonious blending of his characteristics rather than in the existence of marked special qualities." So he has always scenned to his have supposed. Albert Gallatin said that of all the inaccessible people have supposed. Albert Gallatin said that of all the inaccessible people have supposed. Albert Gallatin said that of all the inaccessible people have supposed. Albert Gallatin said that of all the inaccessible people have supposed. Albert Gallatin said that of all the haccessible people have supposed. Albert Gallatin said that of all the haccessible gallatin, however, knew him as a young man and was not by way of knowing him we have the control of the Karner Brills, and have the control of the control of the control of the said of him that "George was just Oliver with the judge left and the said of him that "George was just Oliver with the judge left in the said of him that "George was just Oliver with the judge left in the said of him we should have to follow him more closely than it would be necessary to do with Lincoln. But as we did so, we should of course find him a man of marked qualities. I have always found that men are more more supposed to the said of him that all the said of him closely were sone worthy to be the tenement of a mind and character as great as person worthy to be the tenement of a mind and character as great as person worthy to be the tenement of a mind and character as great as his. Washington, however, had not at all a great opinion of himself. He does not seem to have set even a fair estimate upon his own powers his. Washington, however, had not at all a great opinion of himself. He was not himself, and the washington and when the was not through the said of the him. There see this basis there was superposed something of Leatherstocking and something of Cincinnatus.

But he was essentially an aristocrat. Read his letters, and you will see that the tone of them is unmistakably aristocratic. He belonged to a world of classes, a world in which the existence of classes was the natural and inevitable order of things. But a new society was about to grow up, and it was right that this society should have its great man. In the older society the feeling of the upper class was one of marked separation from the common people. The feeling of that class was, consciously or unconsciously, that it was the business of the poor to be unhappy. A great man of the old time could not altogether escape this feeling. There had been plenty of good and kind rulers in the past, but their feeling in regard to the common people could not be the same as if they had themselves been of that class. Lincoln, on the other hand, was of that class. In him we have a great man unlike the good rulers of the past, not a Haroun-al-Raschid mixing with his people or an Alfred burning the cakes, but the real thing. The fact that he was from that class, that he belonged to it not only by birth and experience but by nature (for birth would not have been sufficient if it had not been that in his heart and his profound sympathies he was a democrat to the core), was an important element of his fame.

Of course, it is Lincoln's power of sympathy that attracts men: But that would not of itself have been enough. What endears Lincoln especially to men is the union of sympathy with faith and great strength.

It is very unusual to find these qualities united. In the list of English and American worthies I can think of but one other who was like him in this respect. I mean Dr. Johnson. Scott had this union of qualities, although in a less degree; and I have sometimes had a fancy, if there be not a certain temerity in the suggestion, that you might descry some such association of characteristics in the vast and vague personality that lies remote and in shadow behind the writings of Shakespeare. But in Lincoln and Johnson it is clear and marked, and it is the reason of their great power of winning affection. Men wish to attach themselves to such characters. The thought of each man is, "He would have been my friend."

The peculiar character of Lincoln's genius also was in part the cause of his power of winning our affection. No great public man has had such strong human intuitions. Certainly no man in our history is his equal in that respect.

It appears from the recent life of Hay that it took Lincoln's secretaries a year or more to find out that their chief was a great man, and that they found it out before other people did. In talking with people who knew Lincoln before the war, most of whom are now gone, it has always been easy for me to see that they thought the modern notion of him extravagant. They may have had some jealousy of him or may have felt something of pique and vexation that they had not been clever enough to find out all this for themselves, but that was what they thought. Of course, they were too prudent to say that, but you could see it in their faces. The devotion of the people of this country to Lincoln is, however, not merely a matter of opinion. He has got hold of their hearts as no other American ever did, not even Washington, and he has held them for 50 years; and there is no indication that this sentiment is on the wane.

The Washington Herald on February 7, 1917, printed an article entitled "Man who helped everybody," by Orison Swett Marden, and it pays a tribute to Lincoln in a manner worthy of permanent preservation, and I therefore read it at length:

MAN WHO HELPED EVERYBODY. [By Orison Swett Marden.]

One of the most beautiful examples of magnanimity in confessing past injustice and acknowledging a tremendous change of feeling toward Lincoln was the utterance of the London Punch years ago. In its recantation of the sneering criticism and caricature with which it had relentlessly pursued him, Punch said:

"Yes, he lived to shame me from my sneer,
To lame my pencil and confute my pen—
To make me own this hind of princes peer,
This rail splitter—a true born king of men."

To lame my pencil and confute my pen—
To make me own this hind of princes peer,
This rail splitter—a true born king of men."

As the stress and anxiety of the great war increases one of the most noticeable things in England is its increasing admiration and appreciation of the greatness of Abraham Lincoln.

Leading English publications recently printed long articles about him, and English statesmen have quoted his words and acts as precedents for their guidance in momentous crises developed during the war.

The reason why Lincoln is so loved and admired to-day, not only by the people of this own land but by the people of every land on the earth, was never more clearly and briefly stated than in those words by a well-known Chinese diplomat.

In an address to the Union League Club of Brooklyn, on the ninety-second anniversary of Lincoln's birthday, Mr. Wu Ting-fang, then the Chinese Minister to the United States, said: "To Lincoln may be applied the words which a Chinese historian uses in describing the character of Yao, the most revered and honored of the ancient rulers of China; 'His benevolence was boundless, his wisdom was profound, to anyone approaching him he had the genial warmth of the sun.' When viewed at a distance he seemed to have the mysterious warp of the clouds; though occupying the highest station he was not haughty; though controlling the resources of the whole Nation he was not lavish; justice was the guiding principle of his actions; nobleness was written on his face."

That "nobleness was written on every linement of his face," and that he was destined for greatness was apparent to the reader of character when Lincoln was still a youth.

Capt. John Le Mar tells us that one day while riding with his father past where young Lincoln was working his father said to him is simple western fashion, "John, look at that boy yonder and mark my words, he will make a smart man of himself. I may not live to see it, but you see if my words don't come true."

Lincoln was loved in his lifetime and is loved to-d weeks ago and have seen through."

The keynote of Lincoin's greatness, of his success from first to last, is to be found in his own memorable words, "I am not bound to win, but I am bound to be true. I am not bound to succeed, but I am bound to live up to what light I have. I must stand with anybody that stands right."

Mr. Speaker, a year ago the New York Evening Sun published an editorial entitled "The Living Lincoln," and it is as

THE LIVING LINCOLN.

Better than all printed biographies are the renewals and continuations of the lives of greater men in the lives of the less. No other American, and very few men of any nation or period, have entered so intimately into the personal experience of millions as Abraham Lincoln. The words of him who never had a year in school are used in teaching college students the highest possibilities of language. His coined phrases are worn smooth and dateless in current speech. But more than that, his habit of thought has guided the thinking of errand boy and President. His faith quickens the faith of us all. Shelley wrote of Keats:

"He is made one with nature: there is heard His voice in all her music, from the moan Of thunder to the song of night's sweet bird; He is a presence to be felt and known In darkness and in light, from herb and stone, Spreading itself where'er that Power may move Which has withdrawn his being to its own; Which wields the world with never-wearded love, Sustains it from beneath and kindles it above."

Which has withdrawn his being to its own;
Which wields the world with never-wearled love,
Sustains it from beneath and kindles it above."

In such wise the man whose birth we celebrate to-day has entered into the life of his people and is in process of penetrating the wider circles of the whole world's life. This, on its earthward side, is the immortality of Abraham Lincoln.

But if ever something more than a vague admiration for a historic figure was needed it is now. The materials are at hand for such intimate and complete knowledge of the man as will expand the intellect and elevate the standards of our voters, aiding them in coming to decisions on the vital issues of the most anxious period since the Civil War. Lincoln is worth knowing well. "Thorough" was one of his own great words. Any man or woman that will give the spare evenings of the next year, or the next five years, to his life and writings will be the better and the happler for it. The Nation will be the standards of our voters, which was a standard of the next five years, to his life and writings will be the botter and the happler for it. The Nation will be the standard of the next five years, to his life and writings will be the botter and the happler for it. The Nation will be the standard of the next five years, to his life and writings will be the obtained the happler for it. The Nation will be the standard of the next five years, to his life and writings will be the obtained the happler for it. The Nation will be the standard of the next five years, to his life and writings will be the better and the happler for it. The Nation will be the standard of the next five years, to his life and writings will be the better and the happler for it. The Nation will be the standard of the next five years, to his life and writings will be the better and the happler for it. The Nation will be the standard of the next five years and the next five his of the National Male and the next five his will be the standard of the next five his will be his will be his David Homer Bates, in his Lincoln in the Telegraph Office, pictures the scene in which the Emancipation Proclamation was wrought out, Grant's Memoirs furnishes a sidelight or two, and Blaine's Twenty Years in Congress is one of the most admirably balanced presentations of the legislative aspects of the war, with clear pictures of many leading men. The later controversies in which Blaine was involved should not be permitted to obscure his value as a historian.

Immediately after the war J. G. Holland gathered from living witnesses fresh impressions of Lincoln, many of which are more convincing than some of the later testimony. Ida Tarbell did a great service in gathering facts that had remained unpublished down to our own day.

in; than some of the later testimony. Ida Tarbell did a great service in gathering facts that had remained unpublished down to our own day.

These are by no means all even of the primary sources, but they are enough to blaze for the reader a trail through the biographical tangle. It is fair to add the name of one of the few books that attempt analysis—Rothschild's Lincoln, Master of Men.

But if the choice must be made between the books other men have written about him and Lincoln's own words the letters and addresses hold first place. He can be trusted as the best witness in his own case. His word was as good as his bond and his life was as good as his word. Speech was the water from a living well, under which the stream of character never failed.

Probably the majority of men desire to be counted on the side of truth. But few will make any great effort to find what is true. And as Sir Thomas Browne declares, not every man is a fit champion of truth. For when the man who is right in principle fails in the trial by combat, the cause suffers in his defeat.

Aoraham Lincoln was not a speculative philosopher, an originator of systems of thought. But he was one of the greatest exponents and defenders of truth in its applications and illustrations in human experience that the world has ever seen. His life and words—which are inseparable—perfectly teach the balance between thought and act, principle and practice, general truth and particular fact.

As a boy he was irritated by the lack of clearness in the talk of his elders. He determined to find words that should tell to other men what was in his own mind so that nobody could misunderstand him. He held to that resolve. And with it went the passion for clear thinking. The Cooper Union speech is perhaps the best illustration of what has just been affirmed. Lincoln probably took more pains with it than with any other single production. Note how he divides his main subject into three or four allied themes, establishes the facts on which his argument is to be based, and joins the whole structure. He takes his opponent's words for a beginning:

"Our fathers when they framed the Government under which we do now."

He takes his opponent's words for a beginning:

"Our fathers when they framed the Government under which we live understood this question just as well and even better than we do now."

This sentence he repeats wholly or in part about twenty times, with illustrations and reenforcement. His second theme is the question:
"Does the proper division of local from Federal authority, or anything in the Constitution, forbid our Federal Government to control as to slavery in our Federal Territories?"

This he repeats or refers to nearly a score of times, interweaving it with the first theme as Bach would compose a fugue. The result is perfection, and to perfection there is no answer. His address is a model for all discussion in public or in private. Anc it is a helpful model because it does not require genius to follow it.

The same is true of the letters, which are full of keen and kindly applications to the life of each one of us and of the whole people. Even with Gettysburg and the second inaugural in mind, we have found a more nearly complete and satisfying expression of the man in his letters than in his addresses. In them he confounds the enemies of the Republic, admonishes, warns, and instructs his people, and comforts the broken-hearted with a tenderness that had blossomed upon the graves of Nancy Hanks and Ann Rutledge and upon those of his children.

For in this man reason and emotion were joined like form and color in a flower. He rejoiced in the exercise of his mind, but he had none of that intellectual arrogance that denies all it can not comprehend or prove. The charge of atheism is the most futile of all that have been brought against him. As an inquiring boy he read Tom Paine and wrote an essay along radical lines; but the pressure of human need constrained him to turn to Divinity.

Prayer was the very breath of his later life. Gen, Daniel Sickles was hardly the man to invent a pious tale. He has repeated to many witnesses the story of Lincoln's prayer before Gettysburg. But it is inconceivable that so ho

In to-day's Washington Post appears a modest autobiography which Lincoln penned at the request of a political friend at Springfield, Ill., on December 20, 1859, and is as follows:

I was born February 12, 1809, in Hardin County, Ky. My parents were both born in Virginia, of undistinguished families—second families, perhaps I should say. My mother, who died in my tenth year, was of a family of the name of Hanks, some of whom now reside in Adams, and others in Macon County, Ill. My paternal grandfather, Abraham Lincoln, emigrated from Rockingham County, Va., to Kentucky about 1781 or 1782, where a year or two later he was killed by the Indians, not in battle but by stealth, when he was laboring to open a farm in the forest. His ancestors, who were Quakers, went to Virginia from Berks County, Pa.

YOUTH IN BACK WOODS.

My father at the death of his father was but 6 years of age, and he grew up literally without education. He removed from Kentucky to what is now Spencer County, Ind., in my eighth year. We reached our new home about the time the State came into the Union. It was a wild region, with many bears and other wild animals still in the woods. There I grew up. There were some schools, so called, but no qualification was ever required of a teacher beyond readin', writin', and cipherin' to the rule of three. If a straggler supposed to understand Latin happened to sojourn in the neighborhood, he was looked upon as a wizard. There was absolutely nothing to excite ambition for education. Of course, when I came of age I did not know much. Still, somehow, I could read, write, and cipher to the rule of three, but that was all. I have not been to school since. The little advance I now have upon this store of education I have picked up from time to time under pressure of necessity.

RAISED TO FARM WORK.

I was raised to farm work, which I continued until I was 22. At 21 I came to Iliinois, Macon County. Then I got to New Salem, now in Menard County, where I remained a year as a sort of clerk in a store. Then came the Black Hawk War, and I was elected a captain of volunteers, a success which gave me more pleasure than any I have had since. I went through the campaign, was elated, ran for the legislature the same year (1832) and was beaten—the only time I ever have been beaten by the people. The next and three succeeding biennial elections I was elected to the legislature. I was not a candidate afterwards. During the legislative period I had studied law and removed to Springfield to practice it. In 1846 I was elected to the lower House of Congress. Was not a candidate for reelection. From 1849 to 1854, both inclusive, practiced law more assiduously than ever before. Always a Whig in politics, and generally on the Whig electoral tickets, making active canvasses. I was losing interest in politics when the repeal of the Missouri compromise aroused me again. What I have done since then is pretty well known.

PERSONAL APPEARANCE.

If any personal description of me is thought desirable, it may be said I am, in height, 6 feet 4 inches, nearly; lean in flesh, weighing on an average 180 pounds; dark complexion, with coarse black hair and gray eyes. No other marks or brands recollected.

History takes up the story where Abraham Lincoln left off, and tells how he was elected President of the United States, how he guided the Nation through the Civil War, how he brought about the abolition of slavery, how he was reelected, and how he was shot down by an assassin, John Wilkes Booth, on the night of April 14, 1865, dying early the next morning.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, let me read the ODE FOR THE FUNERAL OF ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

[By William Cullen Bryant.]

(Read in New York, Apr. 25, 1865, at the martyred President's obsequies.)

Oh, slow to smite and swift to spare, Gentle, and merciful, and just! Who, in the fear of God, didst bear The sword of power—a Nation's trust.

In sorrow by thy bier we stand, Amid the awe that hushes all, And speak the anguish of a land That shook with horror at thy fall,

Thy task is done—the bonds are free— We bear thee to an honored grave, Whose proudest monument shall be The broken fetters of the slave.

Pure was thy life; its bloody close Hath placed thee with the sons of light,
Among the noble host of those Who perished in the cause of right.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. LINDBERGH. Mr. Speaker, before I use the high privilege that I have here, to prefer these articles of impeachment, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to proceed for four minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to proceed for four minutes, prefatory to his motion of impeachment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LINDBERGH. Mr. Speaker and fellow colleagues, in preferring these articles of impeachment, which I am about to begin to read, I realize that I am taking a serious and important step. But I have given much thought and consideration to the step which I am about to take. I shall make no motion after I have read these articles of impeachment, but shall leave it to the House to act upon that question. I realize that often a motion to lay upon the table is what follows the reading of important articles, and I think these are of that character; and if they are disposed of in this way I wish to say to the mem-bership of this House that that is not the way to dispose of these articles which I shall read. It would not be doing justice to the country if it is done in that way. Either I am right in presenting these articles of impeachment or I am wrong. If I do injustice to the House, if I do injustice to the country in preferring articles of impeachment which ought not to be preferred, then it is the duty of the House to discredit me for doing that thing. I do not, however, expect to be discredited, though undoubtedly powerful influence will be used to prevent favorable action on the articles of impeachment. Therefore, I shall proceed with the reading of the articles, and at the close I shall ask unanimous consent for the privilege of extending my remarks upon this question and the incidental questions that are

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman can ask that at the conclusion of his remarks.

The SPEAKER. I thought he was asking it now.

The SPEAKER. I thought he was asking it now.

Mr. LINDBERGH. No. I wish the House to know what is in the articles of impeachment before I ask that privilege.

The SPEAKER. All right.

Mr. LINDBERGH. Mr. Speaker and the House of Representatives, I, Charles A. Lindbergh, the undersigned, upon my responsibility as a Member of the House of Representatives, do hereby impeach W. P. G. Harding, governor; Paul M. Warburg, vice governor; and Frederick A. Delano, Adolph C. Miller, and Charles S. Hamlin, members, each individually as a member of the Federal Reserve Board, and also all of them collectively as the five active working members of said board, of high crimes and misdemeanors.

I, upon my responsibility as a Member of the House of Representatives, do hereby impeach the said W. P. G. Harding, governor; Paul M. Warburg, vice governor; and Frederick A. Delano, Adolph C. Miller, and Charles S. Hamlin, members, and each of them as members of the Federal Reserve Board, and also impeach all of them collectively as the five active working members of the Federal Reserve Board, of high crimes and misdemeanors in aiding, abetting, and conspiring with certain persons and firms hereinafter named, and with other persons and firms, known and unknown, in a conspiracy to violate the Constitution and the laws of the United States and the just and equitable policies of the Government, which said conspiracy developed and grew out of and was consummated from the following facts and acts, to wit:

First. On or about the month of July, 1906, the exact date being unknown to the relator, the late J. P. Morgan, of the firm of J. P. Morgan & Co., and the said firm, private bankers and brokers, with their main office in New York City and doing business all over the world; Paul M. Warburg, of the firm of Kuhn, Loeb & Co., and the firm of Kuhn, Loeb & Co., also private bankers and brokers, doing business all over the world, with their main office in New York City; Lee, Higinson & Co., also private bankers and brokers, doing business all over the world, with their main offices in Boston and New York; Kidder, Peabody & Co., also private bankers and brokers, doing business all over the world, with their main offices in Boston and New York; the National City Bank of New York, with its office in the city of New York and doing a general banking business, domestic and foreign; the First National Bank of New York, with its office in New York City, doing a general banking business, do-mestic and foreign; and various others persons and firms, known and unknown to the relator, did conspire with each other to devise a means through social, political, and other ways of strategy and by general chicanery, to deceive the people of the United States, the Congress, and the President of the United States for the purpose and with the object to secure an act of Congress providing for a new monetary and banking system, to have in it a provision for a managing board vested with unusual and extraordinary powers, and to secure the appointment upon the board of management that should be provided for in the act persons for membership on the board who would, by subterfuge, manipulation, and false administration, so manage as to avoid the spirit and the purpose of the people of the United States, the Congress, and the President aimed at in the passage of such an act, and instead of administering the act to meet with the spirit and comply with its terms, to induce and secure such board to enter into the conspiracy aforesaid, to administer the act for the special benefit and advantage of all of the said conspirators hereinbefore named, and their associates, and contrary to the letter, intent, and purpose of the act itself and in contravention of the Constitution and law; that in order to start the campaign with a plan well matured to succeed in said conspiracy, Paul M. Warburg, now vice governor of the Federal Reserve Board, but then a member of the firm of Kuhn, Loeb & Co., was a most active participant in drafting the main features and principles which should be embodied into whatever bill might be put through Congress, and did also assist in a plan for a secret campaign, to be kept from the knowledge of the President, with the appointing power, and from the Senate, with the confirming power in the selection and confirmation of all high Federal appointive officials, in order that a board of administration should, when the time came for its selection, be appointed that would carry out the designs of the conspirators aforesaid; that there were many secret meetings held by the conspirators for this purpose, which under the very circumstances would be screened and kept from the public and made practically impossible to discover, but nevertheless made certain of the fact because of the acts which point back to their creation; that one of such meet--which your relator does not undertake to verify the truth of its holding, but is reliably informed that it was held-is described in Leslie's Illustrated Weekly Magazine in the October 19, 1916, number thereof, which is hereby referred to as showing the method most likely to have been followed for planning the then contemplated act of Congress, which is now the act known as the Federal reserve act.

Second. That in pursuance of said conspiracy to promote the object of the conspirators aforesaid and as a part of their general scheme to induce Congress to legislate upon the monetary and banking system as stated hereinbefore, said conspirators caused to be organized the so-called Citizens League, with headquarters in the city of Chicago, to act as a mother organization and promoter to induce organization in the several States of auxiliary and affiliated leagues, and by misrepresentation to the public as to the origin of the said mother league and its purpose to induce citizens who should have no knowledge of the said conspiracy and would be innocent of any wrong intention, and whose motives and intent would be to act in the common interests of their country, to join in the formation of auxiliary leagues throughout the several States in order to give the out-ward and surface appearance of respectability and honor, and that in pursuance of that plan the conspirators succeeded in organizing affiliated leagues in 45 of the States; that when organized the conspirators hereinbefore named, themselves directed who should be sent to these organizations as speakers and instructors, and also the kind of literature that should be distributed to the members and to the general public, the design of which was to have only such speakers, instructors, and literature as would discredit the then existing banking and currency system and prejudice the people in every way possible against it; but notwithstanding the then existing banking and currency system was bad and unfitted to the demands of the Nation and the needs of commerce and trade, such campaign was by its conspirators aforesaid directed not to designate to the public what sort of a banking and currency system would be adopted in its stead, but the promoters of the conspiracy should pretend that the object of the campaign was to aid in every way to create a new monetary banking and currency system to take the place of the then existing bad one, and, as far as it could be done, the conspirators should prevent the people getting together to prepare a plan of their own to be presented to Congress; that the purpose of the conspirators was simply to make the public believe that a new banking and currency system was absolutely necessary and at the same time keep the public from finding out what would be its form and details, all this for the reason that the conspirators aforesaid had their own preconceived plan prepared as a part of their conspiracy, which they would secretly manage in their own way to have presented to Congress as the plan in response to all this public sentiment which the conspirators themselves had ingeniously worked out through the campaign aforesaid, and with the intent that Congress and the President would legislate the conspirators' said plan into effect; that it was a part of said plan to create many offices and positions with lucrative salaries, which offices and positions would be equivalent to a bid for the ambitious to support it, because these offices and positions would be filled by the leaders and most active persons who would join in the campaign to put the conspirary into effect and influence Congress and the President for the purpose of securing the legislation.

Third. That in further pursuance of said conspiracy and to be in control of the information and literature that should be distributed throughout the Nation, the said conspirators then having control of a large number of magazines, newspapers, and publishing companies, used all of these, and proceeded to procure control of as many more as could be purchased or subsidized to publish articles prepared by subsidized writers who would criticize the then existing banking and currency system so as to create public sentiment against it; that of the thousands of country newspapers, a majority of them use so-called "patent" articles not edited or even practically controlled by the owners of the papers, which patent articles are commonly called "boiler-plate" stuff, and no responsibility as to the influence such articles have upon the public attaches to anybody; that those writing this "boiler-plate" stuff so published, many of them were also subsidized and controlled by the said conspirators, so that the small newspapers were practically forced to carry on a campaign against the then existing banking and currency system along the same lines of the others referred to hereinbefore; that readers generally do not have the opportunity to distinguish between "boiler-plate" articles and the articles which the editors of the smaller papers write themselves; that the news-distributing agencies through the telegraph and telephone were then and still are largely controlled by said conspirators, and the operators of the news agencies have been allowed to report only such news relating to a new banking and currency system as would promote said conspiracy, and required to suppress any and everything in the way of information or news that would tend to encourage the people to prepare for themselves a concrete plan for banking and currency in the interest of all the people; that the general plan of the conspiracy was to suppress every article, statement, and thing, so far as possible, which would give any information as to the exist-ence of said conspiracy, all of which was for the purpose of enabling the conspirators aforesaid to deceive the people as well as Congress and the President, in order that said conspirators might finally consummate their aforesaid conspiracy.

Fourth. That in consequence of the campaign carried on by said conspirators stated and recited in paragraphs named "First," "Second," and "Third" in these impeachment articles, and numerous secret, clandestine, and underground methods employed by said conspirators, the people of the United States, the Congress, and the President were deceived, and as the first official act in the consummation of the objects sought by said conspirators Congress did legislate and pass an act of Congress which was signed by the President, and is known as the Federal reserve act, which act is substantially the plan prepared by the said conspirators as aforesaid.

Fifth. That immediately upon the passage of said Federal reserve act the said conspirators disorganized the so-called "Citizens' League" and all the affiliated leagues in the 45 States referred to in the paragraph named "Second" herein; that prior to such disorganization the said conspirators had by secret and underground methods, and for the purpose of using the same in completing and perpetuating their conspiracy, organized another "association" and called it the "United States Chamber of Commerce," giving it that name in order to deceive the public by making it appear that it is a department of the Government, which organization is administered with more intricate machinery for management than the so-called "Citizens' League" was, and with a purpose of taking up the work of coordinating everything social, political, business, and other, to work for the benefit of the said conspirators in carrying out their plan to force the masses of all mankind into absolute and abject industrial slavery; that the methods and the design of the "United States Chamber of Commerce" are set forth in remarks which your relator placed in the Congressional Record March 10, 1916, and are hereby referred to for more specific detail; that the influence of the "United States Chamber of Commerce" is one of the agencies being used as an aid to further consummate the conspiracy charged in these articles of impeachment.

Sixth. That the said Federal reserve act is so framed that it has the possibility and contains the provisions which, under proper and impartial administration, would furnish a remedy to some of the faults that existed in the banking and currency system which it superseded, but also contains provisions which, under a bad and improper administration, makes it more dangerous to the public welfare than even the old banking and currency system was; that the main feature of the said Federal reserve act in giving effect to it is the authority vested in the Federal Reserve Board and the discretion intrusted to the members thereof in its "administration"; that the "administration" of said Federal reserve act is vested in the Federal Reserve Board, advised by the Federal reserve advisory council made up of 12 persons, 1 selected by each of the 12 Federal reserve banks; that the 5 active working members of the Federal Reserve Board are the said W. P. G. Harding, governor; Paul M. Warburg, vice governor; and Frederick A. Delano, Adolph C. Miller, and vice governor; and Frederick A. Delano, Adolph C. Miller, and Charles S. Hamlin, members; and that the Federal reserve advisory council is formed by the following persons, to wit: Daniel G. Wing, of Boston; J. P. Morgan, of New York; Levi L. Rue, of Philadelphia; W. S. Rose, of Cleveland; J. N. Norwood, of Richmond; Charles A. Lyerly, of Atlanta; J. B. Forgan, of Chicago; Frank O. Watts, of St. Louis; J. R. Mitchell, of Minneapolis; E. F. Swinney, of Kansas City; T. J. Record, of Dallas; and Herbert Fleishhacker, of San Francisco; that the said Federal Reserve Board and the said Federal reserve advisory council held many meetings and are now and have been ever council held many meetings and are now and have been ever since the Federal reserve act was passed, fully advised as to the financial and business conditions, domestic and foreign; that the members of the Federal Reserve Board and the members of the Federal reserve advisory council are men with enormous business interests, and each of them have been for more than 15 years last past, and are now, extensive operators and speculators for individual profit and gain in the markets, and control several of the largest banks in the country; that J. P. Morgan, jr., is the leading member of the firm of J. P. Morgan & Co., one of the firm hereinbefore charged with being a party to the conspiracy aforesaid; that several of the members of the Federal reserve advisory council own stock in the National City Bank of New York and the First National Bank of New York, they being the two banks charged hereinbefore with being parties to the said conspiracy, and said members also own stock and are interested in business managed and controlled by the parties specifically named as the conspirators in the paragraph hereinbefore designated as "First"; that Paul M. Warburg, a member and vice governor of the Federal Reserve Board, was at the time of the original formation of the conspiracy aforesaid a party to the said conspiracy, and a partner and member of the firm of Kuhn, Loeb & Co., one of the conspirators; that each of the members of the Federal Reserve Board and of the Federal reserve advisory council are associated with and form a part of a group of promoters and speculators, the individual members of which reside in various parts of the United States, principally in the large cities, and a few of them live in Europe, which said group individually and collectively deal in credits, stocks, bonds, securities, and various promoting enterprises from which they have made billions of dollars in profits, and still operate and propose to continue their operations for the purpose of making still greater profits upon their future dealings; that in further pursuance of their said purpose, they joined in the original conspiracy aforesaid and it was planned as a part of the said original conspiracy to create several great business and finan-cial centers in different parts of the United States in order to facilitate and celerify a coordination of all big business and all financial control, for the benefit of the said conspirators in carrying out their plan of personal gain in contravention to the public welfare; that said group instigated the campaign which finally resulted in the passage of the Federal reserve act; that in the administration of said act by the said five active working members of the Federal Reserve Board, and through the influence exercised over them by the members of the Federal reserve advisory council, and collectively all of the members and membership of both the Federal Reserve Board and of the Federal reserve advisory council, a part of and influenced by said larger group" in this paragraph designated as having joined in the conspiracy aforesaid, the said five active working members of the Federal Reserve Board, each individually and all collectively, at all times since they became members of the said Federal Reserve Board, knowingly and intentionally have been improperly influenced by the said "group," and because of such influence have failed to administer the Federal reserve act in accordance with the spirit, letter, and intent of Congress and the President when the act was passed; but, on the contrary, the said five active working members of the Federal Reserve Board hereinbefore specifically named as such, with intent to evade and set aside by "administration" all the purposes of Congress and of the President in the passage and approval of the act, and of the act itself, have administered, and are now administering, the Federal reserve act with the intent to coordinate "big business' and "speculation" for the benefit of the said "group" of operators and speculators hereinbefore designated as having taken part in the original conspiracy; that said National City Bank hereinbefore named, in which many of the other conspirators own stock, acts as the "official mouthpiece" for them all, to give technical information to enable them all to act in concert; that to facilitate its distribution said bank issues a monthly bulletin; that in its February, 1917, bulletin, in an article dealing with the present plethora of money and credit available, among other "tips" intended for the conspirators to act upon, is the following-and I would like the House to hear it-this is what is contained in the bulletin which the National City Bank issued:

Under the circumstances money promises to be in abundant supply, but if bankers have a proper regard for their responsibilities it will not be correspondingly cheap. Compensatory rates for money and ample reserves should be consistently maintained.

That said bulletin was sent to the Federal Reserve Board, to all the Federal reserve banks, to all the larger National and State banks and trust companies, in order to "tip" off to the conspirators and those acting in concert to tighten the rates of interest; that such "tips" are a common practice and do prevent the reduction of interest rates to borrowers for legitimate business, contrary to the intent and purpose of Congress and the President and in contravention of the act itself and to the enormous loss of the people and injury to the general welfare.

Seventh. That there are approximately 20,000 State banks and trust companies in the United States, incorporated and organized under the State laws of the respective States in which their offices and places of business are located, and doing a general banking business, State and interstate, many of which are eligible to become members of the Federal Reserve System, and many not now eligible could become so without an increase of their capitalization; that of those now eligible and that could qualify for membership in the Federal Reserve System without an increase of their capital, they have more than half of the capitalization of all the banks not now included in the Federal Reserve System; that the capitalization of State banks and trust companies which are not members of the Federal Reserve System exceeds the capital of the banks which are members of the Federal Reserve System; that the governors and other high and administrative officials of the 12 Federal reserve banks, through their influence with member banks, wittingly or un-wittingly, but most of them wittingly, became accessories to the said conspiracy of the said persons and parties named in these articles of impeachment in the paragraph herein designated as "First" and have caused a boycott of all banks not members of the Federal Reserve System by influencing the member banks to hamper, inconvenience, and annoy the patrons of the nonmember banks by discrimination against them in the clearing of checks drawn upon them and otherwise; that they threaten and seek to cajole the nonmember banks in an attempt to force them to become members of the Federal Reserve System; that the said five active working members of the Federal Reserve Board are cognizant of the same; that the intent, purpose, and aim of each and all of the said conspirators aforesaid is to compel the State banks to join the Federal Reserve System for the purpose of bringing the said banks under the jurisdiction of the Federal Reserve Board in order that all of the banks, National and State, may become one gigantic combination with an absolute and complete monopoly and have the power of exploiting the people for the benefit of the conspirators aforesaid.

Eighth. That Congress in creating the Federal Reserve Board had in mind, and it is the spirit of the Federal reserve act, that the said board should keep a guardian watch over the operations of the banking and currency system and report to Congress and the country from time to time such facts and occurrences relating to banking and currency as affect the business of the people in trade and commerce exchanges, domestic and foreign, so that Congress should receive information that would give to Congress the facts upon which to base any necessary amendments to the act in order to make it responsive to the general welfare; that, contrary to the spirit of the Federal Reserve act, the aforesaid five active working members of the Federal Reserve Board have willfully failed to keep the public and Congress informed of the inflation of bank credits and the effect of it that has taken place under the "administration" of the said act, and in violation of the spirit thereof said members have conspired with the members of the Federal reserve advisory council and their business associates hereinbefore named and have aided and abetted in a conspiracy to a systematic inflation of bank credits for the benefit of the said conspirators and against the public welfare; that in consequence of said unlawful acts and misfeasance in office of the said members of the Federal Reserve Board the banks have, for private gain. increased the bank credits of the country since the passage of said act approximately seven thousand millions of dollars and without effecting a corresponding reduction in the interest rate, thus increasing the aggregate amount of interest paid by the people to the said banks equal to that charged upon said sum; that the effect of the inflation of bank credits has been and is to also increase speculative credits enormously more than equal to the inflation of bank credits, and that such increase since the Federal reserve act took effect has been billions of dollars; that the increase in the aggregate sum of interest paid to the banks upon the said inflated bank credits and the increase caused by the said inflation in the speculative values upon commodities required to supply the necessities of life for the people has been many billions of dollars, which have been added to the cost of living for the people to pay; that said increase in the cost of living is mainly the profits that the conspirators have added to their individual fortunes to the equivalent loss of the people generally and to the Government as well.

Ninth. That as part of the said conspiracy and in furtherance of the same the said aforesaid conspirators, in violation of the Nation's heretofore established economic policy of conservation of material and natural resources, conspired with European speculators to draw upon the material resources of this Nation for export with no corelation between the value of the materials exported and the value of the materials imported; that in consequence of the conspiracy to affect said export of material resources belonging to this Nation and to the people of it approximately eight thousand millions of dollars in value of the material resources have been exported since the war in Europe began; that as a result thereof the said conspirators acted with the said five members of the Federal Reservate Board in manipulating bank credits, and through credits the markets increased the cost to American consumers in the same period approximately sixteen thousand millions of dollars in excess of the real values, which extra cost has mainly been the profits that have been added to the fortunes of the aforesaid conspirators; that as an additional and future loss to the people of this Nation in consequence of the facts aforesaid, the natural material re-sources of the Nation are forever less, and the costs made for-ever higher than they would be if trade and commerce were not manipulated through a false administration of finances

Tenth. That to further carry out the said conspiracy the aforesaid conspirators have, ever since the Federal reserve act took effect, sought to influence, and in fact have influenced, said five members of the Federal Reserve Board in an attempt to further deceive Congress to secure legislation granting to the said board enlarged powers of "administration"; that in the Sixtyboard enlarged powers of "administration"; that in the Sixty-third Congress the said board, concealing the real purpose to aid said conspirators, deceived the Senate Banking and Currency Committee to get it to report for passage the then Senate bill 6505, and it passed the Senate and subsequently came before the House Banking and Currency Committee and was favorably reported, your relator, however, filing a minority report in oppo-sition. Later, on the floor of the House, the chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee withdrew action on the bill; that the aim of said bill was to give the Federal Reserve Board greater "administrative" power over the gold supply, so that it could, whenever the conspirators aforesaid wished it, inflate still further the banking credit by an issue of the Federal-reserve notes for the benefit of said conspirators; that again in this Sixty-fourth Congress said five active working members of the Federal Reserve Board alleged, repeatedly sought the House Banking and Currency Committee to report a bill giving greater "administrative" powers to said board than is authorized by the original act; in fact, to give said board power to force from banks all over the country the gold in their vaults and into the 12 Federal reserve banks, there to form a basis upon which to issue still more Federal-reserve notes and further inflate credit without causing a reduction of interests that in the aggregate would equal the charge made on the inflated currency, but serving mainly as a guaranty to reenforce the conspirators hereinbefore named in exploiting of the people for private gain.

Eleventh. That the Federal reserve act obligates the United States to redeem in gold at the United States Treasury all Federal reserve notes, and as a part of the said conspiracy and in furtherance of the same, and to extend the speculation of the operators and perpetrators of the said conspiracy to include Europe and other foreign territory, they, most of them being international as well as domestic bankers, seek to dominate the relations of the United States with foreign countries and to selfishly influence the same by means of the control of finances, and in furtherance of said branch of their speculations have conspired with the said five active working members of the Federal Reserve Board to secure aid from the Federal Reserve System for said selfish purposes and not in the interest of the public, the conspirators in connivance with the said five active working members of the Federal Reserve Board had the said board select and appoint, through the Federal reserve bank of New York, the se-called Bank of England as its agent, thus putting the credit of the Government of the United States back of this foreign corporation, organized for private gain, which is no longer able to make payments in gold and fails to give a statement of its true conditions; that said Federal Reserve Board is threatening to permit and also to render aid to the international bankers in America who dominate the banking system, to enter into further entangling alliances with bankrupt countries of Europe at the very time this Government contemplates issuing hundreds of millions of dollars of interestbearing bonds upon the credit of the people of the Nation to meet the Government expenses.

Twelfth. That during the Civil War the Government of the United States issued money commonly called "greenbacks"; the same being issued upon the credit of the people of the Nation; that of said "greenbacks" so issued there have been ever since their issue and now are outstanding and in general circulation based upon the credit of the people of States $346,681,016, for which a reserve of $150,000,000 in gold is held by the Government to guarantee their redemption if demanded; that said circulating "greenbacks" have already saved the Government from paying approximately $1,000,000,000 interest during the time they have been in circulation and are now saving the Government approximately $6,000,000 annually; that in furtherance of said conspiracy in these articles of impeachment alleged and as a part thereof, the conspirators have sought and by secret connivance now seek to have the said "greenbacks" retired and the $150,000,000 of gold guarantee placed in the Federal reserve banks on which to base the loaning of "bank credits" as a substitute for the money owned by the people; that if the Federal reserve banks are allowed to secure possession of said gold, when the time comes that the conspirators aforesaid shall be able to use additional bank credits to their advantages in exploiting the people, the same would become the basis for additional bank inflation, directly and indirectly, to the extent of over a billion dollars upon which the banks would collect a great sum of interest, and the speculators would scalp even greater profits from additional manipulation of the markets, all of which would be added to the cost of living for the people to pay.

Thirtcenth. That in furtherance of the said aforesaid conspiracy and as a part of the same the said five active working members of the Federal Reserve Board, in their capacity as members, have arbitrarily at all times and with intent to prevent the legitimate business interests of the country securing the advantages that Congress sought to give by the passage of the Federal reserve act, and in connivance with the big reserve and central reserve banks controlled by the conspirators aforesaid, established rediscount rates for member banks desiring to borrow from Federal reserve banks above the rates charged by the reserve and central reserve banks, which creates an excuse for the member banks in the country to charge higher rates of interest to legitimate borrowers than they otherwise would; that the interest rates charged by the reserve and cen-tral reserve banks, on the one hand, and the higher rates charged by the Federal reserve banks on the other hand, is maintained at certain times when the conspirators aforesaid desire to draw the reserves of the country banks to the reserve and central reserve cities for the interest that these reserve banks pay on deposit balances and in anticipation of times when the country banks may wish to rediscount paper with said banks; that by following the arbitrary practice of redis-counts aforesaid the said conspirators are enabled to and do go on with their speculations, manipulate the markets, and exploit the people, and whenever they find themselves in financial stress they can raise the rates of interest in the reserve and central reserve banks, which they control, above the Federal reserve bank discount rates, thus forcing the country banks, which may have rediscounted with reserve banks in order to give accommodations to their borrowers, to rediscount with the Federal reserve banks to enable them to repay the reserve and central reserve banks, in order to create free money and credit for said conspirators to carry on their speculations; that the Federal reserve act contains several provisions which when applied under the "administrative" power of the Federal Reserve under the "administrative" power of the Federal Reserve Board serve as a means of taking or imposing a toll in the nature of discriminatory interest rates in order to force a shift of money and credits from one section of the country to another, or out of the country and to foreign countries; that this discriminatory power vested in the Federal Reserve Board is willfully abused by the said five active working members of the said board for the benefit and in the interest of the said aforesaid conspirators; that the people of the United States have been injured to the extent of several billions of dollars by reason thereof.

Fourteenth. That in furtherance of said aforesaid conspiracy and to give the said aforesaid conspirators complete practical power to carry out and put into effect their purpose of making the masses of mankind absolutely dependent upon "big business," and in order to create industrial slaves of the masses, the said aforesaid conspirators did conspire and now conspire to have the Federal reserve act "administered" so as to enable the conspirators to coordinate all kinds of "big business" and to keep themselves in control of "big business," in order to amalgamate all of the "trusts" into one great trust in restraint and control of trade and commerce, and thus be able to exploit the masses and take from them their cornings expent what the masses and take from them their earnings, except what they would require for bare subsistence; that to that end and to give them power to accomplish the same said conspirators have marshaled all of the different kinds of "big business" and induced those in control to use their means and whatever kind of patronage and favors they have to give in such way as to promote the objects and purposes of said conspirators and to enslave the masses of humanity; that at the same time that the said conspirators marshal their own "big business" supporters by a coordination of all their interests they have used every trick and subterfuge possible to create friction among the masses and divide them into hostile contending factions, thus keeping the masses from coordinating their affairs to promote the general welfare; that the said aforesaid five active working members of the Federal Reserve Board have all the time, by a willful and wrongful "administration" of the Federal reserve act, aided and abetted the said aforesaid conspirators in promoting and carrying out the objects of their said con-spiracy and have refused and failed to so administer the Federal reserve act as to have the same promote and operate in favor of the general welfare.

Fifteenth. That the Federal reserve act is void and unconstitutional, but that, notwithstanding, the conspirators aforesaid have so manipulated things as to prevent the question of constitutionality of the act from being brought before the courts.

Charles A. Lindbergh.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. LINDBERGH. I suppose my privilege stops now, does it?

The SPEAKER. It does.

Mr. LINDBERGH. I ask for five minutes in which to answer the question of the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHERWOOD. I understand the gentleman to say the National City Bank now controls the official action of the Federal Reserve Board.

Mr. LINDBERGH. I said they have that effect, along with the other parties associated with them.

Mr. SHERWOOD. In case the Senate should sit as an impeachment court, you have evidence to establish that charge?

Mr. LINDBERGH. I want to say this: I have spent enough time and made enough investigation of this case to know that I can demonstrate-not accurately, I may say, but to a mathematical certainty-that the charges in this impeachment are substantially true. I may not be able to establish by direct proof that some of these meetings to which the impeachment refers were held, but that the charges are substantially true, I will certainly

Mr. SHERWOOD. That is, by substantial evidence?
Mr. LINDBERGH. By substantial evidence, and by effects which the business of this country demonstrates beyond question.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to insert, following the reading of these articles, my remarks upon them and the questions that are incidentally involved in the impeachment articles.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record. Is there objection?

Mr. SIEGEL. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York objects.
Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the impeachment articles be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and on that I demand the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina moves that the impeachment articles be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and on that he demands the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion to refer.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I call from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 19119, the District of Columbia appropriation bill, with Senate amendments, and ask that the Senate amendments be disagreed to, and that the conferees be appointed on the part of the House.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to call to the attention of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Page] amendment No. 98, on page 123 of the bill, which provides for increases in compensation. In the legislative appropriation bill, which bill is still in conference, in the House we agreed to a provision for an increase of 10 per cent on salaries less than $1,200 and 5 per cent on salaries between $1,200 and $1,800, as I recall.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Yes. Mr. MANN. That bill is still in conference. The Senate struck out the House provision in that bill and inserted the same provision in that bill which is inserted in this bill. The Agricultural appropriation bill carried the same provision as it passed the House that we agreed to in the legislative appropriation bill. The Senate has amended that. If we should just disagree to this Senate amendment and send it to conference, it is not within the power of the conferees to report a provision that corresponds with what the House did on the legislative appropriation bill and the Agricultural appropriation bill, and if those provisions should remain in conference in those two bills the conferees on the part of the House in the District bill could not put them in.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I think the gentleman is entirely right.

Mr. MANN. I suggest to the gentleman that before sending the bill to conference he move to concur in Senate amendment No. 98, with an amendment striking out all of the amendment and inserting the same provisions that we have carried in the other bills, so that the matter will be in conference in this bill in orde: that whatever action is taken it may be uniform in the three bills.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that that is entirely agreeable to me, and in case it is the only way—

Mr. MANN. It is the only way by which it can be done.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. It is the only way, possibly, by which we can get uniformity.

Mr. MANN. It is the only possible way by which you can get uniformity unless you get unanimous consent or a rule.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Unless in conference upon the other bills the present Senate amendment were agreed to. Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, the bill is not yet before the House, is it?

Mr. MANN. I have no objection to the matter being laid before the House without now disagreeing to all of the Senate amendments

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, pending that, I would like to ask the gentleman from North Carolina if the House will be accorded a vote upon Senate amendment No. 97, relating to the tax upon intangible property?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the gentleman that the House has that privilege now. Of course, if there is any expression on the part of the House that they want to vote, they will be given that opportunity before the conferees reach an agreement.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the bill H. R. 19119, the District appropriation bill, with Senate amendments thereto.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House disagree to all of the Senate amendments, excepting Senate amendment No. 98, on page 123, and Senate amendment

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield before that is done?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I observe there is a Senate amendment providing for a municipal hospital and to change the location of that hospital from Fourteenth Street and Upshur Street to Reservation No. 13. which means out here where is now located the Washington Asylum. For a long time there has been a contention here in the District with reference to this hospital, and after a considerable while and considerable opposition to the location of the hospital where it ought to go, if it is to be constructed, they have changed it to place it on what is called Reservation No. 13. I do not believe we ought to do that. In the first place, I think we ought not to build a hospital at all; but if it is to be built, then it seems to me we ought to agree on building the hospital where it ought to be built, and I hope the gentleman will not agree to any amendment at all, but if he has to agree to it, that he will not agree to report the provision locating the hospital on Reservation 13, but where it ought to go, regardless of what some people in the District may think is a wrong place to put it. We have no municipal may think is a wrong place to put it. hospital except the Washington Asylum.

I say this, that I do not think there is any place in the United States where the indigent poor who are sick are better taken care of than they are in the city of Washington. I think some improvement might be made in the Washington Asylum, as it exists now, but there has been a continual fight on the part of the residents of the District against any improvements of the surroundings or betterment of the conditions in the Washington Asylum, because they have hoped to force through Congress this municipal hospital; and then, after Congress talked of building it where it ought to be placed, if it is going to be built at all, they undertake to force that hospital away from that place and back up here on the Anacostia River, or whatever that branch of the Potomac is called. I do not think a few people, who have, as they think, some esthetic notions about this matter, ought to be able to dillydally around for years and finally force Congress to do something that is wrong because of these notions of what they think should be done and what they think should not be done. I hope the gentleman, in the first place, will not agree to this amendment at all, but if he can not get along without it, that he might give this House an opportunity to vote upon it, because there is some difference in opinion in the House with reference to whether the hospital should be built at all or not.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I yield to the gentleman. Mr. DYER. I would like to know why the gentleman from Illinois said we should not have a municipal hospital in the city of Washington, in view of the fact that we have none that is at all suitable, and that the one we do have is in a dilapidated building, without any means whatever of giving decent treatment to the people therein?

Mr. FOSTER. I will say to the gentleman that the Government has two buildings out there worth half a million dollars fit for a hospital. Mr. DYER. Out where?

Mr. FOSTER. At the Washington Asylum; and yet the people have steadfastly refused the other location because of the great scheme of building a highway around the city, which, they fear, might be interfered with by this proper location at Fourteenth and Upshur.

Mr. DYER. Does the gentleman mean the old jail building? Mr. FOSTER. Yes; and the Government is to lose the value of buildings worth, as they told me when I was out there, three or four hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Will the gentleman state what those buildings were constructed for?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; they were constructed for a workhouse.

Mr. DYER. A jail.

Mr. FOSTER. But that does not mean that people are to go into a workhouse or go into cells. The gentleman knows better than that. These buildings, for one-half or one-fourth of the money that a municipal hospital will cost, can be fitted up to take all necessary care of the indigent poor, but they have refused to do it, because they thought it was in the line of a great boulevard that it was proposed to build around the

Mr. SHERWOOD. Is not that a better location than down on the Anacostia River?

Mr. FOSTER. Very much. First they wanted it located up here, and then they began to holler again to have it located out there, and they have finally succeeded in inducing the other body to do what they ask.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foster] will permit, I am anxious to get this bill to conference and not consume the time of the House, but I know when I am held up. I will say to the gentleman that the conferees on the part of the House will give the House an opportunity to vote on this hospital proposition.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Still reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I make the same request of the gentleman from North Carolina relative to Senate amendment 97.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. What is that amendment?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. It is the intangible-property tax amendment.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I will make the same statement to the House with reference to that amendment-that if it becomes necessary to do so I will bring it back to the House.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. So that we may have a separate vote?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. So that we may have a separate vote on that amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to take this bill from the Speaker's table, disagree to all the Senate amendments except 13 and 98, and ask for a conference.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Is Senate amendment No. 97 included in that?

included in that?

The SPEAKER. No.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I thought that was understood.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I have made a statement to the gentleman that I will live up to, if it becomes necessary.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Very well, that is satisfactory.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Very well, that is satisfactory. The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Now, the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. Miller] makes a motion which the Clerk will report, as to amendment No. 13.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Pending the motion of the gentleman from North Carolina I send to the Clerk's desk a motion to concur in Senate amendment No. 13, relative to motor vehicles, with an amendment which I ask the Clerk to report.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will first report Senate amendment No. 13, and will then report the amendment of the gentle-man from Dalaware,

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment numbered 13: Page 31, lines 5 and 6, after "thereunder" insert Provided further. That motor vehicles, owned or operated by persons not legal residents of the District of Columbia but who shall have complied with the laws of the State of their legal residence requiring the registration of motor vehicles or ilcensing of operators thereof and the display of identification or registration numbers on such vehicles and which identification numbers shall be displayed on such motor vehicles as provided by the laws and regulations of the District of Columbia while used or operated within the District, shall not be required to be licensed or registered or bear other identification numbers under the laws and regulations of the District if the State in which the owner or operator of such motor vehicle has his legal residence extends the same privilege to the motor vehicles owned or operated by legal residents of the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will now report the amendment of the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. MILLER].

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. Miller of Delaware moves that the House conferees be instructed to concur in Senate amendment numbered 13 to H. R. 19119, with the following amendment:

Add on page 26, line 9, the following——

Mr. MANN. Add at the end of the Senate amendment.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, we can not hear what is being said over here

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. The amendment of the gentleman from Delaware is to follow the language of the Senate amendment.

Mr. MANN. To add to the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add at the end of the Senate amendment the following: Provided further, That on and after July 1, 1917, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized and empowered to make and enforce all regulations governing the speed of motor vehicles in the District of Columbia, subject to the penalties prescribed in the act approved June 29, 1906.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I think the Clerk read that as a motion to instruct the conferees. I hope the gentleman from Delaware will modify his motion so as to move to concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment, so that if the amendment is agreed to the whole thing will go to conference.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. That is satisfactory to me. drew that motion before the gentleman from North Carolina

[Mr. Page] made his motion.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the amendment to the amendment will be so modified.

Mr. WINGO. Reserving the right to object, is it proposed that we concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment? The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. That would send it all to conference.

Mr. WINGO. I would like to have the language of the bill which it is proposed to amend read.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. It has been read.

Mr. WINGO. I know, but I would like to hear it read again.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Senate amendment will be read again.

The Senate amendment was again read.

Mr. WINGO. I should like to ask the gentleman from North Carolina what is the necessity for this amendment? Have we not already a law regulating the speed? And is not the trouble we have to get the enforcement of the present law?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. No. I will say to the gentleman that under the present law the Commissioners of the District of Columbia have not the authority to regulate the speed of motor vehicles in the District.

Mr. WINGO. Have we not a law prohibiting excessive speed in the District?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. There is a law that fixes the limit of speed in the District at a uniform figure of 12 miles an hour all over the District. The purpose of this is to put into the hands of the commissioners the power to regulate the speed, so that in the regions of denser traffic it may be put at a very much lower limit and in the suburbs at a greater limit.

Mr. WINGO. I am in sympathy with something that will check reckless running in the city. My peculiar interest at this time has been aroused by the fact that within the last three days I have had to exercise the agility of a tomcat to avoid a District of Columbia motor-driven vehicle on one of the principal thoroughfares in the residential part of the city.

If that is the object of the gentleman's amendment, I do not object, but I was fearful it might repeal the present existing law by transferring to them the right to make some regulations when my observation of their handling of the motor-vehicle question has been rather exasperating, to say the least of it. I withdraw any objection.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Mr. Speaker, I do not care to discuss my amendment unless some gentleman desires further explanation.

Mr. DILL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. I will.

Mr. DILL. Is the purpose of this amendment to give the commissioners the power to change the existing speed rate of automobiles in the District?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. It is; either to raise or lower it.

Mr. DILL. That is to change the law passed by Congress?
Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Yes; and to fix a zone of speed; that is the real object. The gentleman from Delaware, who offers the amendment, will tell the gentleman in regard to

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the gentleman from Washington and anybody else in the House who is interested in the matter, that the section in the District appropriation bill as passed by the Senate practically contains a new automobile law for the District of Columbia, with one exception, namely, the regulation of speed. It provides a new system of automobile licenses, it provides for reciprocity, and the provision which I submit, after consulting the District authorities who are interested and who would enforce the law, provides that the District Commissioners shall have the right to regulate the speed. I will say further to the gentleman before he interrupts me that to-day they have the right to regulate everything in connection with the operation and control of automobiles in the District except that of speed. year I introduced a bill regulating the speed and operation of motor vehicles that went to the District Committee and which was ordered reported, but which has not been done up to date, and I understand this is practically the amendment they would

Mr. DILL. If I understood the reading of the amendment correctly, it provides they shall fix the penalties.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. No; right there I will say to the gentleman, the penalties are taken care of under this provision, "subject to the penalties prescribed in the act approved June 29, 1906," and that contains very proper and adequate penalties.

Mr. DILL. If they raise the rate of speed from 12 miles an hour to 18 miles an hour a violation of the speed limit would be punished in the same way as it is now?

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. The same penalties as are now in force

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. I will ask if the commissioners have not had the right heretofore to regulate the speed of automobiles? Mr. MILLER of Delaware. I will say to the gentleman speed is the only thing in connection with the operation of automobiles in the District of Columbia that they have not the right to regulate or control. It is now fixed at 12 miles an hour, and without speaking with any authority I understand that if they are given this power they are going to place it at 15 miles an

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. In certain parts of the city.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware, In certain parts of the city.
The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentle man from Delaware to concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move to concur in Senate amendment No. 98 by striking out the Senate language and inserting the language that I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina moves to concur in Senate amendment 98 with an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the Senate amendment and insert in lieu thereof the Strike out the Senate amendment and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"Sec. 7. That to provide, during the fiscal year 1918, for increased compensation at the rate of 10 per cent per annum to employees who receive salaries at a rate per annum less than $1,200, and for increased compensation at the rate of 5 per cent per annum to employees who receive salaries at a rate not more than $1,800 per annum and not less than $1,200 per annum, so much as may be necessary is appropriated: Provided, That this section shall only apply to the employees who are appropriated for in this act specifically and under lump sums or whose employment is authorized herein: Provided further, That detailed reports shall be submitted to Congress on the first day of the next session showing the number of persons, the grades or character of positions, the original rates of compensation, and the increased rates of compensation provided for herein."

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 1174. An act granting to the State of Iowa all the right, title, and interest of the United States in and to the land within the meander lines, as originally surveyed, of the lakes within said State; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATION BILL (H. REPT. NO. 1452).

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Military Affairs I report a bill making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 20872) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order on the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California reserves all points of order on the bill. The bill is ordered printed and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL (H. REPT. NO. 1451).

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution reported from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 499.

House resolution 499.

Resolved, That it shall be in order while H. R. 20632 is being considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider as amendments to the bill (H. R. 20632) entitled "An act for making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes," the following matter, the general rules of the House to the contrary notwithstanding:

Amendment offered by Mr. Padgett: Page 5, after line 7, insert as a separate paragraph:

"To enable the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy to secure, by purchase, condemnation, donation, or otherwise, such basic patent or patents as they may consider necessary to the manufacture and development of aircraft in the United States and its dependencies, for governmental and civil purposes, under such regulations as the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy may prescribe, $1,000,000. Secretary of $1,000,000.

$1,000,000.

"Provided, That such arrangements may be made in relation to the purchase of any basic patent connected with the manufacture and development of aircraft in the United States as in the judgment of the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy will be of the greatest advantage to the Government and to the development of the industry.

"Provided further, That in the event there shall be pending in court litigation involving the validity of said patent or patents, bond, with good and approved security in an amount sufficient to indemnify the United States, shall be required, payable to the United States, conditioned to repay to the United States the amount paid for said patent or patents in the event said patent or patents are finally adjudged invalid."

Amendment offered by Mr. Pargett: After line 19, page 59, insert as

Amendment offered by Mr. Padgett: After line 19, page 59, insert as a new paragraph:

"(a) That the word 'person,' as used in paragraphs (b), (c), (d) next hereafter, shall include any individual, trustee, firm, association, company, or corporation. The word 'ship' shall include any boat, vessel, submarine, or any form of alrecaft, and the parts thereof. The words 'war material' shall include arms, armament, ammunition, stores, supplies, and equipment for ships and airplanes, and everything required for or in connection with the production thereof. The word 'factory' shall include any factory, workshop, engine works, building used for manufacture, assembling, construction, or any process, and any shippard or dockyard. The words 'United States' shall include the Canal Zone and all territory and waters, continental and insular, subject to the jurisdiction of the United States.

"(b) That in time of war, or of national emergency arising prior to March 1, 1918, to be determined by the President by proclamation, the President is hereby authorized and empowered, in addition to all other existing provisions of law, and within the limit of amounts appropriated therefor:

President is hereby authorized and empowered, in addition to all other existing provisions of law, and within the limit of amounts appropriated therefor:

"First. To place an order with any person for such ships or war material as he many require and which are of the nature, kind, and quantity usually produced or capable of being produced by such person. Compliance with all such orders shall be obligatory on any person to whom such order is given, and such order shall take precedence over all other orders and contracts theretofore placed with such person. If any person owning, leasing, or operating any factory equipped for the building or production of ships or war material for the Navy shall refuse or fail to give to the United States such preference in the execution of such an order, or shall refuse to build, supply, furnish, or manufacture the kind, quantity, or quality of ships or war material so ordered at such reasonable price as shall be determined by the President, the President may take immediate possession of any factory of such person, or of any part thereof without taking possession of the entire factory, and may use the same at such times and in such manner as he may consider necessary or expedient.

"Second. To modify or cancel any existing contract for the building, production, or purchase of ships or war material; and if any contractor shall refuse or fall to comply with the contract as so modified the President may take immediate possession of the entire factory, and may use the same at such times and in such manner as he may consider necessary or expedient.

"Third. To require the owner or occupier of any factory in which ships or war material are built or produced to place at the disposal of the United States the whole or any part thereof without taking possession of the United States the whole or any part thereof in such quantities and at such times as may be specified in the order at such reasonable price as shall be determined by the President.

"Third. To require the owner or occupier of not any contract or agreement with the owner or occupier of sacarfactory.

"Fifth, To waive all provisions of law restricting the hours of labor of persons in the employ of the United States or of persons in the employ of contractors therewith when employed on work in connection with such ships or war material; Provided, That wages of Government employees shall be computed on a basic day rate of eight hours' work, with overtime rates to be paid for at not less than time and one-half for all hours worked in excess of eight hours.

"(c) That no person shall, directly or indirectly, induce any person employed in any factory and engaged on work for the United States to leave his employment or to cease such work.

"(d) That any person who violates or fails to comply with any provision of paragraphs (b), (c), or any order given, direction, regulation, or restriction made or imposed thereunder shall be subject to a fine of not more than $10,000 or to imprisonment for not more than two years, or both.

"(e) That whenever the United States shall cancel or modify any contract, make use of, assume, occupy, requisition, or take over any factory or part thereof, or any ships or war material, in accordance with the provisions of paragraph (b), it shall make just compensation therefor, and in default of agreement upon the damages, compensation, price, or rental due by reason of any action hereunder, the person to whom the same is due shall be entitled to sue the United State to recover his fair and reasonable damages in the manner provided for by section 24, paragraph 20, and section 145 of the Judicial Code."

Mr. MANN. Oh, do not do that.
Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KEATING. In case the Speaker should find that a quorum was not present, would the vote come automatically?

The SPEAKER. Yes. The gentleman from Texas [Mr.
CALLAWAY] raises the point of no quorum. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and twelve gentlemen are present, not a quorum. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll. Those in favor of this resolution will, as their names are called, answer "yea," and those opposed will answer "nay."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 282, nays 19, answered "present" 2, not voting 130, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present. The Doorkeeper will open the doors.

On motion of Mr. Pou, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing the correspondence between the President and the Federal Trade Commission on the proposed food investigation.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, are the letters to the Federal Trade Commission identical with the letters to the Secretary of Agriculture?

Mr. BORLAND. I understand so. I did not examine the letters from the Secretary of Agriculture, but I understand they are identical.

Mr. MANN. I shall not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CARY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print in the Record resolutions passed by the Milwaukee Common Council in regard to boat lines.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, the motion was not made awhile ago to reconsider and lay on the table, was it?

The SPEAKER. Yes; it was. Mr. PADGETT. Very well.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. Dyer, by unanimous consent, was granted leave to withdraw from the files of the House the papers in the case of H. R. 13294, a private claim bill of Henry Hochner, first session, Sixty-fourth Congress, an adverse report having been made thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. Shackleford, indefinitely, on account of illness. To Mr. Hulbert, indefinitely, on account of illness.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 20632) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes.

Mr. CROSSER rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?
Mr. CROSSER. To make a parliamentary inquiry.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. CROSSER. This being District of Columbia day, will a motion be in order to go into the Committee of the Whole for the consideration of District business? Is such a motion as that in order now?

The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Pap-The SPEAKER. GETT] moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the naval appropriation bill. That is a preferential motion.

Mr. CROSSER. If that motion fails, the motion I suggested would be in order?

The SPEAKER. Of course it would. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the naval appropriation bill.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. CROSSER. A division, Mr. Speaker. The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks for a division.

The House divided; and there were ayes 87, noes 5.

So the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr.

Pagel will please take the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 20632) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes, with Mr. Page of North Carolina in the chair.
The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 20632) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. Hum-PHREY

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the amendment be again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will again be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Humphrey of Washington: Page 58, line 16, strike out the word "eighteen" and insert "fifty."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amend-

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to proceed for one minute. Is there objec-

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I must object to debate. The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard. Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Then, Mr. Chairman, I make the point that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington makes the point that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and forty-two gentlemen are present—a quorum. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. A division, Mr. Chairman. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington demands

The committee divided; and there were-ayes 58, noes 87.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Garp-Without objection, the Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Gardner: Page 58, line 12, beginning with the word "Three," strike out all down to and including the word "each," in line 18, and insert the following: "Four battleships, $15,500,000 each; 2 battle cruisers, $19,000,000 each; 4 sout cruisers, $6,000,000 each; 20 destroyers, $1,300,000 each; 1 destroyer tender, $2,300,000; 1 submarine tender, $1,900,000; 18 coast submarines, to have a surface displacement of about 800 tons each, $1,300,000 each; 9 fleet submarines, $1,850,000 each."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amend-

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected. The CHAIRMAN. The next amendment is that offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Burnert]. Without objection, the Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BURNETT: Page 58, lines 12 and 13, after the word "amounts," in line 12, strike out "three battleships, $10,500,000 each." and insert in lieu thereof the following: "One battleship, $15,500,000, and 30 coast submarines, $1,800,000 each."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amend-

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. BURNETT. A division!
The CHAIRMAN. 'The gentleman from Alabama demands a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 31, noes 79.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The next amendment is that of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER], which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on page 58, by inserting, at the end of line 25, the following proviso: "Provided, No money herein appropriated shall be expended in the construction of any vessel unless the period of time for the final completion of said vessel shall be fixed at not exceeding 38 months."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment. The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. Padett) there were—ayes 38, noes 78.

Mr. OLIVER. I demand tellers on that.

Tellers were refused, 18 Members, not a sufficient number, seconding the demand.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the other amendment of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on page 58, line 13, by inserting, after the word "each," the following proviso: "Provided, No money herein appropriated shall be expended in the construction of battleships until contracts shall be first made for the construction of the battle cruisers herein appropriated for."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk, resuming the reading of the bill, read as follows: Increase of the Navy, torpedo boats: On account of submarine torpedo boats heretofore authorized, $16,816,110, and on account of the 18 additional coast submarine torpedo boats herein appropriated for, $6,115,170; in all, submarine torpedo boats, $22,931,280, to be available

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I should like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill a question. I notice the committee have recommended, in a paragraph which we have already passed, the building of a single battle cruiser. Four were authorized a year ago.

Mr. PADGETT. There were six authorized and four were appropriated for.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. PADGETT. Leaving two to be constructed hereafter, of which we now appropriate for one.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Six were authorized and four were ordered built. This appropriates for one, and if all of them are built we will have five. Has it not been one of the contentions of the Navy, and of the gentleman himself, that you could not build these excepting in groups of two? And if there is a reason why we can now build one by itself and not build two, I should like to know it.

Mr. PADGETT. We authorized six last year and appropriated for four, leaving two for the remaining two years of the program. There were also six battleships; so that in this bill we are providing for one-half of the battleships and one battle cruiser, which is one-half of the remaining battle cruisers, leaving three battleships and one battle cruiser for the bill of next year to complete the three-year program.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Is it not a fact that, if we build one battle cruiser this year and another next year, in time we will have two battle cruisers, and therefore will have a moving unit, and if we kept on building one each year we would have four, which would be a group that they could maneuver?

Mr. PADGETT. This is on the basis of a group of three, not four.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I thank the gentleman. I bring this up simply for the reason that two years ago, when this bill was before the House, I took occasion to make some remarks advocating the construction by our Government of battle cruisers, but I did not get very far. I intimated then somewhat the reason why I had the temerity to suggest the building of battle cruisers—that I had talked with a great many men who are charged with the duty of actually operating fighting ships, and I certainly found quite a number who believed that battle cruisers were essential to anything like an adequate modern Navy for the United States. I was met constantly by the statement that one battle cruiser would not be of any value, that two would not be of any very great value, that we needed four in order to have a naval unit which they could maneuver and operate. I thought then that if we built one that year and one the next year we would have two, and if we kept it up for four years we would have four; but that Every single officer who appeared before us said that the supreme demand of our Navy is for battleships. Gentlemen speak of the speed. A cruiser is a fast vessel, sacrificing its fighting power for speed, but did not seem to prevail on the minds of the gentlemen who were then hugging the delusion that we should build battle-ships alone in order to secure the safety of the United States. Now I find that the committee are recommending the construction of a single battle cruiser, and I have no doubt the Navy Department have recommended it.

Mr. PADGETT. Last year we authorized six and appropriated for four, and one this year will make five, and one next year will make six.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I am not speaking about authorization; I am speaking about construction. We might authorize a million, but if we did not build any of them we would not have anv.

Mr. GORDON. But we appropriated for four last year and one this year.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Then we will have a moving unit of four, with one over.
Mr. GORDON. Why, yes.
Mr. PADGETT. The unit

Mr. PADGETT. The unit is three, not four. Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Then they have changed their position, because when I talked to them some years ago four constituted the unit.

Mr. PADGETT. The unit for battleships is four and for battle cruisers three.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Then, it is purely theoretical, and next year they may operate battleships in units of three and battle cruisers in units of four or five.

Mr. GORDON. Then, the information which the gentleman has elicited is this, that when we get this battle cruiser that we are now appropriating for constructed, and four others, we will have five.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. By that time I hope we may have authorized others, so that we will have 8 or 10.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I know it is about the meanest thing any man on earth can do to hash up something that may not be pleasant for some one else to listen to or to think about. There were quite a number of individuals in this House who for a number of years thought we ought to build some battle cruisers. On February 5, 1915, almost exactly two years ago, when the naval bill was before the House, I had the temerity to

The lesson taught by history is that speed is one of the vitally essential things in a fighting ship. This bill provides for two battleships, and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Hobson] moves to increase the two to four. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] moves to reduce them to one. It is all on the question of battleships.

I hope the membership of the House will bear in mind that this is only two years ago, when the very distinguished leader of the Democratic side of the House, instead of urging an increased building program, was trying to cut the number of bat-tleships from two to one, and that in continuation of the fact that the first year that our friends the Democrats controlled the House they did reduce the number of battleships we were building a year from two to one. I quote further:

There is no provision in the bill, none suggested, for ships of the battle-cruiser type. I strongly believe our Navy needs a unit of battle cruisers more than it needs an addition of any other fighting craft.

There is something more that might be quoted.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Just what is the technical meaning of the term "unit," as the gentleman is using it now-

I mean in naval construction?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. As I understand, the unit as used in this connection means a unit for mobilization purposes, and in order to have ships sufficient for a fighting unit it requires four. Four ships are required as a fighting unit in the battleship class, and, as the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Padgett] has just said, three in the battle-cruiser class. Next year they may change that to make it another number. That is a technicality. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Padgett], the chairman of this committee, when later on we were trying to add battle cruisers to the building program at that time had this to say-and I do not offer this as a matter of criticism, because I think he correctly stated the facts, but merely as a matter of history:

a battle cruiser of 30,000 tons displacement would cost $20,000,000, as against $15,000,000 for a battleship. It would cost 25 per cent more a year to operate it than it would a battleship. So that we come down to the vital question in this matter, Shall we stand by and take the recommendation and the opinions of the men who know, and the men upon whom we must rely in time of battle?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? There was no objection.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I simply bring this to the attention of the House to show that only two years ago, at least, those who appeared before the Naval Committee, who are our naval officers, did not emphasize the need of battle cruisers.

Mr. GORDON. But they changed the next year.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Then it was not appreciated how important they would be to our Navy, that within two years' time we now know that the greatest need our Navy has, not excluding submarines, is for a quota of fast-moving, swift-moving battle cruisers, with the speed of meteors, as it were, mounting the biggest guns that a ship can carry.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I want to ask the gentleman from Minnesota a question in my time, if his time has expired, and that is if he does not know that the naval bill last year when it came into the House from the House committee provided for four battle cruisers and no battleships at all?

Mr. BUTLER. Five.
Mr. CALLAWAY. Five battle cruisers and no battleships at all, and that the chairman of the committee defended the change on the floor of the House for the same reason that has been suggested by the gentleman from Minnesota, and that when the bill went over to the Senate they changed it. Did the gentleman know that?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I had forgotten it for the moment, but I recall now that that is the situation that existed then, and I thought of making the same speech then that I have just now, but I did not.

Mr. CALLAWAY. I want to further state for the information of the gentleman that the price of battleships and battle cruisers has been reversed since that time, and battle cruisers now cost $26,000,000 while battleships cost $28,000,000 each.

Mr. PADGETT rose.

Mr. CALLAWAY. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.
Mr. PADGETT. I simply wanted to make this statement:
That the policy of the general board was that until we got up to a certain strength in battleships, other construction should give up, and after we got up to a given strength in our battleships, then they recommended battle cruisers, and the chairman last year did emphasize the value and the importance of battle cruisers at that time under the conditions that were existing, and we had the approval of the general board.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Texas yield?

Mr. CALLAWAY. Yes.
Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The gentleman just made a statement that surprises me. The bill speaks of three battleships at $15,500,000 each and one battle cruiser at $19,000,000. The gentleman has just stated to the gentleman from Minnesota that a battle cruiser is to cost $26,000,000 and a battleship $28,000,000.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Just the shell of the ship is provided for in the bill, without armor and general equipment. I am talking about the battle cruiser and the battleships complete, ready to

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. So that these are the figures, so far as the hulls are concerned?

Mr. CALLAWAY. Yes; the hull, without the armor.

Mr. BURNETT. That is, this is just a starter.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Yes.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Texas yield? Mr. CALLAWAY. Yes.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. As I understand, from about 1904 to 1907 there were four or six-I do not remember which-scout cruisers authorized by our Government, of which the Memphis was one; the Tennessee, I think, was another; the Charleston another; and so on. Have those ever been found to be of any value to the Navy?

Mr. CALLAWAY. They have not found any vessel of any value as vet.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Well, have they been of any value as scout cruisers?

Mr. PADGETT. They were of value in their day and in comparison with other ships of their time.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. What was their speed?

Mr. PADGETT. They were ships of about 23 knots, as I remember.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I did not think they were as much as that. I did not know they would make more than 20 or 21.

Mr. PADGETT. Oh, yes; scout cruisers are ships of about 23 knots, as I remember. Since then the development and progress in ship building is such that the battle cruisers provided for in the bill of last year and appropriated for in this bill are to have a speed of 35 knots.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Of course that will answer all possible requirements. One further inquiry. You are providing in this bill, the same as you did a year ago, for some scout cruisers. They are different from the battle cruiser. What is to be their speed?

Mr. PADGETT. They are similar ships in speed-something like 30 knots

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Well, scout cruisers, however, to be of any value must have a speed greater than a battleship?

Mr. PADGETT. Oh, yes; battleships are down to 21 to 23 knots.

The Clerk read as follows:

Total increase of the Navy heretofore authorized and herein appropriated for, $174,762,323.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer an amend-ment. It was recited in the rule that it should come after line 19, page 59, but the Clerk has read line 20, and I will ask to offer this amendment to come after line 21.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will send his amendment to the Clerk's desk. The gentleman from Tennessee offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. PADGETT. The Clerk will read where I have marked it with a pencil.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. PADGETT. The Clerk will read where I have marked it with a pencil.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PADGETT: After line 21, page 59, insert as a new paragraph:

"(a) That the word 'person' as used in paragraphs (b), (c), (d), next hereafter shall include any individual, trustee, firm, association, company, or corporation. The word 'ship' shall include any boat, vessel, submarine, or any form of aircraft, and the parts thereof. The words 'war material' shall include arms, armament, ammunition, stores, supplies, and equipment for ships and airplanes, and everything required for or in connection with the production thereof. The word 'factory' shall include any factory, workshop, engine works, building used for manufacture, assembling, construction, or any process, and any shipyard or dockyard. The words 'United States' shall include the Canal and the control of the United States, 'the control of the purisdiction of the United States, 'the production of the United States, 'the production of the United States, 'the production of the President by proclamation, the President is hereby authorized and empowered, in addition to all other existing provisions of law, and within the limit of amounts appropriated therefor:

"First. To place an order with any person for such ships or war material as he may require and which are of the nature, kind, and quantity usually produced or capable of being produced by such person. Compliance with all such orders shall be obligatory on any person to whom such order is given, and such order shall take precedence over all other orders and contracts theretofore placed with such person. If any person owning, leasing, or operating any factory equipped for the building or production of ships or war material for the Navy shall refuse or fall to give to the United States such preference in the execution of such an order, or shall refuse to build, supply, furnish, or manufacture the president may take immediate possession of any factory of such contractor, or any part t

"(d) That any person who violates or fails to comply with any provision of paragraphs (b), (c), or any order given, direction, regulation, or restriction made or imposed thereunder shall be subject to a fine of not more than $10,000, or to imprisonment for not more than two years, or both.

"(e) That whenever the United States shall cancel or modify any contract, make use of, assume, occupy, regulsition, or take over any factory or part thereof, or any ships or war material, in accordance with the provisions of paragraph (b), it shall make just compensation therefor, and in default of agreement upon the damages, compensation, price, or rental due by reason of any action hereunder, the person to whom the same is due shall be entitled to sue the United States to recover his fair and reasonable damages in the manner provided for by section 24, paragraph 20, and section 145 of the Judicial Code."

During the reading of the amendment,
Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman—
The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman

Mr. KEATING. For a parliamentary inquiry.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. KEATING. Would it be in order at the end of the amendment to offer amendments to any part of the amendment? I understand we are not reading it by paragraphs.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks so; the amendment is being considered as a whole.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the amend-

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is this an amendment to the amendment or a substitute to the amendment?

Mr. BUTLER. It is an amendment to the amendment. Chairman, it is to the last paragraph of the Padgett amendment, and inasmuch as we are reading the Padgett amendment as a whole I presume it will be in order to offer it now.

The CHAIRMAN. It is an addition?

Mr. BUTLER. It is an amendment to Mr. PADGETT's amend-

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Amend Mr. PADGETT's amendment by adding to the last paragraph the following: "(e) In the proper district court of the United States, irrespective of the amount claimed and on application from and by petition or by such claimant or claimants or the United States"—

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, might we wake up, all of us. I would ask the Clerk to read the paper I sent up there. It reads this way:

Amend, page 6, paragraph (e), line 7, by striking out all after the word "damages," on line 7 and subsequent lines, and insert in lieu thereof the following.

Now, if the Clerk will read. The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 6, paragraph (e), line 7, by striking out all after the word "damages," on line 7 and subsequent lines, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "in the proper district court of the United States, irrespective of the amount claimed, and, on application thereto by petition, either by such claimant or claimants, or the United States as the case may be, or any one in behalf of either, the said court shall appoint five discreet and disinterested commissioners, and appoint a time for said commissioners to meet, of which time and place at least 10 days' notice shall be given by the petitioners to the said commissioners and the other party; and the said commissioners or a majority of them, having been first duly sworn or affirmed, faithfully, justly, and impartially to decide and a true report make concerning all matters and things to be submitted to them in relation to which they are authorized to inquire, in pursuance of the provisions of this act, and after having heard the parties, their proofs, and allegations, they shall estimate and determine the damages, if any, sustained by the claimant or claimants, and make report thereof to the said court; and if any damages be awarded, and the report be confirmed by the said court, judgment shall be entered thereon; the costs to follow the judgment, and the court shall determine the reasonable compensation of such commissioners for their services.

"The commissioners hereinbefore provided for may be appointed either."

determine the reasonable compensation of such commissioners for their services.

"The commissioners hereinbefore provided for may be appointed either after the exercise of the powers herein conferred or actual notice of intention so to do, and upon the report of said commissioners being filed in said court, either party, within 30 days thereafter, may file its, his, her, or their appeal from said report to the said court; and after such appeal either party may put the cause at issue in the form directed by said court, and the same shall then be tried by said court and a jury; and after final judgment in said court either party may appeal therefrom to the Circuit Court of Appeals or the Supreme Court, in the manner prescribed in other cases.

"The said district court shall have power to issue subpœnas for the appearance of witnesses before such commissioners, order what notices shall be given connected with any part of the proceedings, and make all such orders connected with the practice, pleadings, forms, and proceedings either before such commissioners or in said court, as may be deemed requisite.

"Whenever any department of the Government of the United States shall have exercised any of the powers herein conferred, such department, either before or after the proceedings above mentioned, is hereby authorized from time to time to pay to the injured party or parties, either its discretion, out of any moneys appropriated for that purpose, either the whole or any part or parts of the reasonable damages admitted by such department to have been sustained, or which are likely to be sustained, by reason of the exercise of such power, without prejudice to the rights of either party by reason of such payment or payments and upon final judgment being entered in any such proceeding, the proper department is hereby authorized and directed to draw its warrant on the Treasury for the amount of said judgment and costs, and said amount for the payment thereof is hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. MANN. What is the point of order?

Mr. PADGETT. I want the Chair to rule on it. As to whether it is subject to the point of order or not I am not prepared to say. Mr. MANN. I would like to have the Chair determine whether the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee is subject to amendment at all; it is a germane amendment if it is subject to amendment.

Mr. PADGETT. It is subject to amendment in a proper way, but whether or not this substitute—

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Tennessee what his point of order is.

Mr. PADGETT. This amendment is so broad and substitutes an entirely different method of obtaining damages and making an appropriation of an indefinite amount in the future to meet awards

Mr. MANN. Well, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania provides the district court may appoint practically arbitrators or a commission. It also authorizes a suit to be brought in the district courts. The original proposition authorizes the President to fix practically the value of every-thing. It authorizes a suit to be brought. Now, it is certainly germane to a provision authorizing a suit to be brought to provide that there may be also opportunity to appoint a board of arbitrators without having a suit brought.

Mr. GORDON. Will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. MANN. Yes.
Mr. GORDON. Does it not first authorize a suit to be brought and then provide the means of prohibiting a jury trial?

Mr. MANN. Oh, no. The original amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Padgerr] authorizes suit to be brought, and the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Butler] authorizes the matter to be submitted to arbitration first. It still retains the right to bring suit.

Mr. PADGETT. There is nothing in the amendment which offered providing for arbitration.

Mr. MANN. The purpose of having the arbitration is to agree upon the damages quickly. Under the provision in the bill, while the President is given certain power to fix compensation, there is no way, unless they can come to an agreement between themselves, to fix the compensation without a suit being brought. And the modern system of settling these affairs is to brought. And the modern system of settling these affairs is to give preference to arbitration where the parties are willing to do it. Of course the lawyers do not all like it, but I do. I am not one of the lawyers that prefer litigation to settlement.

Mr. GORDON. How about the constitutional provision where a man is entitled to a suit before you can take his property?

Mr. MANN. I have said to the gentleman four times, and I hope he will listen to it this time, that the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania reserves the right to bring suit. Mr. GORDON. Then it provides for two lawsuits instead of

Mr. MANN. It provides for arbitration. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Gordon] probably does not want to have anything settled soon, but I think it is desirable, if we are going to take possession of factories or business, to endeavor to have a settlement early. Of course the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] will make his argument in reference to that. I am only

Now, we have the right under this provision also to provide that where the Government of the United States shall take possession of property and seize it we shall appropriate the money to pay for it

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I do not think the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Butler] is germane. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Padgett] gives to the President, upon the issuing of a proclamation, the right to take over plants or portions of plants of private manufacturers and to modify contracts in connection with the construction of ships or material for the Navy. And then it provides certain penalties for any person who shall refuse to work or shall violate any of the provisions. And then it provides certain penalties for any person Then it provides

That whenever the United States shall cancel or modify any contract, make use of, assume, occupy, requisition, or take over any factory or part thereof, or any ships or war material, in accordance with the provisions of paragraph (b), it shall make just compensation therefor, and in default of agreement upon the damages, compensation, price, or rental due by reason of any action hereunder the person to whom the same is due shall be entitled to sue the United States to recover its fair and reasonable damages in the manner provided for by section 24, paragraph 20, and section 145 of the Judicial Code.

These sections of the Judicial Code relate to suits by claimants against the United States. Now, the gentleman's proposal provides for a board of arbitration, with a complicated system of appeal, and then that there shall be paid to such successful claimant whatever damages may be awarded against the United States. There is nothing in the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] that warrants the payment without appropriation by Congress of any damages that may be awarded. And I submit that that, if nothing else in the amendment, makes it not germane and subject to a point of order

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think that where Congress directs the President to seize certain property it is not a germane amendment to that to provide for paying for the property as the Constitution directs?

Mr. SHERLEY. I think it is not a question of what should It is the question of germaneness. I do not think iment of the gentleman is germane. That part of it the amendment of the gentleman is germane. which provides new machinery for the adjudication of claims and provides for the payment of those claims is not germane to that part of the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee, which simply gives the right to sue in the Court of Claims to these claimants.

Mr. MANN. Suppose the gentleman from Tennessee had carried no provision at all in his amendment for making compensation, would it not be germane to offer an amendment providing for a method of ascertaining compensation?

Mr. SHERLEY. I am not prepared to admit that it would, though I do not think that that would necessarily determine the matter here presented.

Mr. MANN. It seems to me perfectly clear where we provide for the seizing of the property that it is germane to provide a method of paying for it, and if it is suggested it be done in one way it is still germane to offer an amendment to provide that it shall be done in another way. Suppose the bill had provided that it should be settled by the Court of Claims; certainly no gentleman would say it would not be germane to authorize a suit to be brought in the United States courts instead of in the Court of Claims. Now, the section which was referred to, I assume, although I have not looked it up, is the one which authorizes suits to the brought in the Court of Claims or in the district courts of the United States.

Mr. SHERLEY. Section 145 of the Judicial Code—it might be well to read it for the information of all of us. It provides:

SEC. 145. The Court of Claims shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine the following matters:

"First. All claims (except for pensions) founded upon the Constitution of the United States or any law of Congress, upon any regulation of an executive department, upon any contract, express or implied, with the Government of the United States, or for damages, liquidated or unliquidated, in cases not sounding in tort, in respect of which claims the party would be entitled to redress against the United States either in a court of law, equity, or admiralty if the United States were suable."

Then comes a proviso in regard to war claims and a paragraph in regard to set-off, counter claims, and so forth. Now, the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee extends the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims to these claims.

Mr. MANN. There being another provision of the Judicial Code providing that where suit can be tried in the Court of Claims suit may be brought in the district courts of the United States, could they under this provision do that? Or must every man, wherever his factory is located, come to Washington and bring his suit under the amendment of the gentleman from

Mr. SHERLEY. I am not familiar enough now with these sections of the Judicial Code to say when a party has the right to bring suits against the United States other than in the Court of Claims.

Mr. MANN. Would the gentleman question, then, the right of the House, as an amendment to the amendment of the gen-tleman from Tennessee, to provide distinctly, so that people would know whether they could bring a suit in the district courts or not?

Mr. SHERLEY. I did not make that the basis of my point of order. I did not make the basis of my point the providing of a different tribunal, but the fact that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania provides for the payment of the award without any further appropriation; and I insist that that is such a change as to make the whole paragraph not germane to that which has been presented.

Mr. MANN. What I understood the gentleman first to say was that the point of order was made because you provide a different and complicated tribunal.

Mr. SHERLEY. I simply said it did do that, without making that the basis of my point.

Mr. MANN. The only point the gentleman from Kentucky makes is that it provides for the payment of the amount now due. Yet we are constantly doing that, and if we have the right to seize property, as we have, for certain purposes, under the provision of the Constitution we must pay for it, and then certainly we have the right when we order the seizure to order the payment.

That is a germane proposition. That is part and parcel of the proposition. If the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee had been offered without these provisions in it providing for compensation, it would not have been worth paper it is written on, because it would be in violation of the Constitution. It would be directing a seizure of property without making compensation. Now, I contend that under the constitutional provision which says we must make compensation we have the right, when we order property seized, to provide the compensation and provide for its payment.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will permit, there is quite a distinction between the right and the duty that the Congress has to provide for compensation and the germaneness of one amendment so providing to another amendment that does not so provide. Now, whether or not we should do it is a question that will appeal differently to various men, but the question for the Chair is whether there is in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee anything that makes germane the provision in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania for the payment of damages directly out of the Treasury

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I would call attention, if the gentleman will permit it, to the fact that the amendment offered by me limited it to the method provided here, which is the court. Now, the gentleman is offering an amendment which goes away from the court and provides for arbitration. Arbitration is not germane to a provision for a suit in court. It is an additional and entirely different method of settling disputes. It is a method that the country has never admitted. I might call attention to the merits of it as set out in the letter of the Attorney General. It is subjecting the United States to a trial before a jury, something that the Government has never done. The Government has never consented that it should be sued before a jury. Mr. STAFFORD.

Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield in that particular? Does not the gentleman in his own pro-

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Gordon] was very much afraid the gentleman from Tennessee was trying to give a trial by jury, and now, when it appears that the gentleman from Pennsylvania is trying to give a trial by jury, we see my friend from Ohio changing his view.

Mr. GORDON. I am not changing anything.
Mr. BUTLER. It is provided in this amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Padgett] that the Government shall make just compensation in the event that it seizes the property of an individual or corporation, and by this amendment which I have offered I have done no more than to extend the authority to the court, or the jurisdiction to the court, to ascertain the damages in another manner

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will yield right there—Mr. BUTLER. Of course, I will yield right there. I do not know whether I will be able to answer the gentleman, because I am not enough of a lawyer, you understand—I am not a lawyer; I am simply a member of the bar [laughter]—but this amendment was drawn, I will say to the gentleman, by the best authority in the State of Pennsylvania. He is a Member of this House and in our State he stands high as a lawyer, one of the very best therein. I will ask the Chair to hear my colleague, Mr. STEELE.

Mr. SHERLEY. The question does not relate to the wisdom of the proposal or its practicability. You do not simply provide a new forum, you do not simply provide a new method of determining damages, but you go forward and appropriate money to pay the verdicts that may be rendered. I am not saying why, what the reason is, but in that particular you differ so widely from the proposal of the gentleman from Tennessee that you make your amendment not germane.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, let us see if I can answer the gentleman from Tennessee before my colleague, Mr. Steele, makes his argument in favor of this amendment. Of course, it is expected that the Government will pay the damages, and if we pass a law and do not provide for payment, I doubt very much whether the law would be a good law. Furthermore, it is provided in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee that compensation shall be made by the Government, and this is one of the methods of making the compensation through the district court. That is the only answer I can give. If I do understand the gentleman from Kentucky, I tried to answer him; I am unable to further answer his question. I have given the best answer I could.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have no time to yield, but will the Chair now hear the gentleman who drew this amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to hear the gentleman on the point of order, the specific point made by the gentleman on the germaneness.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, it is said that this amendment is not germane because it provides, as I understand, for the payment of money without specifically providing in the amendment that the money must be paid out of money appropriated by Congress

It is provided in this amendment which I have offered that whatever is assessed by these arbitrators shall be paid out of money appropriated by Congress for the very purpose. Now, I repeat what I said to the Chair when I made the first statement, which was this: That the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee provides two forums, either one of which may be used by claimants to recover damages. If the Chair will look at the bottom of paragraph (e), the first is through the district court authorizing the claimant to bring suit in the district court. The second is the Court of Claims. Now, if this amendment of mine should be adopted, either court will have jurisdiction-either the Court of Claims or the district court. Now, the amendment does no more. It certainly refers to the same subject—the collection of compensation from the Government for property taken or destroyed by the Government for such purposes as are stated in this amendment. Then it follows that we have the authority to enlarge the jurisdiction or the power given to the district court to enable it to appoint arbitrators, to assess damages immediately. This is modeled after the form of law that is found in each State in the Union, far as I know-it certainly is in our State-to enable a claimant to collect his damages expeditiously on account of property taken from him adversely or where the right of eminent domain is exercised by the corporation taking the property.

I have nothing further to say. I am not able to say anything more than this, for I do not know any better way to say it.

The amendment is certainly germane.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I understand practically the only point of order now being urged is against that part which provides for the payment of the judgment on recovery. If the Chair will notice the amendment, he will find a provision that the President shall have the authority to place an order for material, which order is obligatory, which should take prece-dence, and if they fail he may seize and take immediate possession of any factory or any part thereof-

At such reasonable price as shall be determined by the President.

That same provision is carried in various other places.

At the bottom of page 4: Third, the President may require the owner or occupier of a factory to deliver such output or parts thereof in such quantities and at such times as may be specified in the order at such reasonable price as shall be determined by the President.

And the bill makes provision for the payment of those amounts.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman allow the Chair to ask him a question?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the provisions contained in the committee amendment, would it not require an appropriation by Congress to meet these things?

Mr. MANN. Why certainly not—an appropriation made after the amount is determined?

The CHAIRMAN. How would the appropriation be made unless the amount had been determined?

Mr. MANN. Because the bill expressly provides that it shall be paid out of any amounts which are appropriated. Under paragraph (b) in the middle of page 3—

The President is hereby authorized and empowered, in addition to all other existing provisions of law, and within the limit of amounts appropriated therefor—

First, second, third, fourth, and fifth, to do various things. Now, the Chair will recall that while this is an appropriation bill, this item is not subject to the rules governing appropria-tion bills. This is a legislative item, and we always have the right in a legislative item to make an appropriation to carry it into effect. Most legislative bills which involve the expenditure of any money at all have a provision in them making appropriations to carry those bills into effect when enacted into law, being a legislative determination, not confined by the rules relating to appropriation bills. This provision is taken out from under the limitation of the rule that you can not make an appropriation unless authorized by law. Now, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Butlera] proposes to make an appropriation as a part of this legislation. That is in order and germane. If the Committee on Naval Affairs had reported this as a legislative bill, it would be in order to provide the appropriation to pay the money which is found due.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, if the Chair will turn to Hinds' Precedents, volume 5, section 5850, he will find this statement:

To a bill authorizing the Court of Claims to adjudicate a claim, an amendment providing for paying the claim outright was held not to be germane.

And in section 5851-

To a proposition to pay a claim an amendment proposing to send the claim to the Court of Claims was held not to be germane.

Now, that is the exact point that I make here. Here is a proposal not simply providing for a different tribunal but providing for the payment of the claim when the tribunal shall have determined its amount, making an indefinite appropriation. Now, the proposal that was up and which was ruled upon, Now, the proposal that was up and which was ruled upon, quoted in Hinds' Precedents, was a bill to confer jurisdiction on the Court of Claims in the case of the Methodist Episcopal Church South against the United States. To that was offered an amendment to pay the claim outright, and the Chair held that was not germane, and I submit that that decision is exactly upon all fours with the proposal here presented.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I presume that the Chair is familiar with the fact that originally no one, citizen or alien, could sue the Government of the United States. We broke over that old rule by establishing the Court of Claims, in which a claim could be prosecuted against the United States and the amount of it determined, but without giving that court any power of judgment. We then made in the Judicial Code a fur-ther extension of the right to sue or bring suit against the Government, and that is the provision that is contained in the twenty-fourth section of the Judicial Code which defines the powers of the district courts of the United States. Under paragraph 20 of that twenty-fourth section is the following language. to which I would like to have the attention of the Chair:

Concurrent with the Court of Claims, of all claims not exceeding $10,000, founded upon the Constitution of the United States or any law of Congress, or upon any regulation of an executive department, etc., jurisdiction is given to the district courts of the United States.

That is, the claimant has the choice of bringing his claim either in the Court of Claims or, if it is less than $10,000, in one of the district courts of the United States. If it is more than $10,000, however, there is no court in the United States in which he could bring his claim except the Court of Claims. provision of the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] is to establish a new and a further method of establishing claims against the United States, and that by arbitration. It occurs to me that the very statement of that fact shows that it could not possibly be germane to this bill, for the reason that this bill provides that it must be brought under the provisions of paragraph 20 of section 24. In addition to the fact that it provides an entirely different method of trial in suits against the United States, the provision making an appropriation in advance for the amount of the recovery, is certainly a variation, and a strong variation, that would show it is not germane to this provision. Another provision of the bill, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] argues, stating that these amounts must be within the appropriations, would have no applicability to this proposition. This is an unsettled and an undetermined claim. No such claim ever would arise. No such claim could possibly be within the contemplation of Congress. There could be no appropriation, because it could not be contemplated that the need for any appropriation would arise. It would appear clear that the method of payment is a clear departure from any provision of the bill.

Mr. GOOD. Does not the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Padgett] establish a different method of arriving at the amount? That provides that the President shall fix the amount-not the Court of Claims, nor the court of the United States

Mr. TOWNER. That is, of course, in the first instance; but it gives the party claimant, if he is not satisfied with the action of the President, the right to go to the courts; and, so it seems to me clearly, the point of order that is made by the chairman of the committee against the germaneness of this amendment is well taken.

Mr. STEELE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, this bill proposes the most drastic exercise of the right of eminent domain ever attempted in this country. It proposes to vest in the officers of the General Government the power of condemning real and personal property without limit for the purposes of the Government. Of course, under the Constitution we are bound to provide compensation for the payment of damages. It may be that it is not necessary that those damages should be paid coincident with the exercise of this power by the General Government, but it seems to me that in the exercise of so comprehensive a power as this some method should be provided for the immediate ascertainment of these damages, because under the provisions of this bill any manufacturing plant engaged in the manufacture of munitions or articles of war, or in the manufacture of ships, can be taken over by the General Government without making any immediate compensation whatever. In the meantime what will happen? Those plants will lose any earning power they may have possessed, and the Government has possession of their property, without any means of income, without any means of paying dividends to the stockholders, or any means whatever of making their plant, so far as its financial operations are con-cerned, a going concern while the stockholders are deprived of their property. The purpose of this amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania is simply to provide some immediate remedy by which these damages can be ascertained and at the same time preserve the right of the Government, in the event that they are not satisfied with the action proposed in the amendment.

The act itself provides, as correctly stated by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Towner], that the procedure shall be either in the district court when the amount is under the sum of $10,000 or in the Court of Claims when the amount is in excess of that figure. Manifestly the exercise of so large a power will in almost every case exceed the sum of $10,000, so that the effect of this act would be to relegate for the ascertainment of damages all these cases to the Court of Claims. The chief justice of the Court of Claims, when he appeared before the Judiciary Committee of the House, of which I happen to be a member, stated within the past year that there were pending in that court more than 4,000 cases at the present time, and with that large calendar to impose this additional duty upon it would mean it would take years for the ascertainment of the amount of damages that would arise under the terms of the act.

much for the propriety of the remedy proposed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is arguing the merits of the proposition.

Mr. STEELE of Pennsylvania. I understand. The point of order is that this proposed amendment makes an appropriation. I understand that it is not seriously disputed but that the general features for ascertaining these damages would be a proper amendment. This amendment does not provide anything outside of the district court. It does not provide for an arbitration outside of the district court. The bill itself provides that you can have a remedy in the district court of a limited character. This simply enlarges the jurisdiction of the district court beyond that provided for in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Padgett].

Now it simply proposes a new procedure in the district court.

Now, it simply proposes a new procedure in the district court, simply leaving the jurisdiction where it was but enlarging the amount. It simply provides that any claimant or the United States can go into the district court and ask by petition for the appointment of commissioners to determine the amount of damages, and either party who may not be satisfied with their award can appeal to the district court and have it determined by a jury. It simply leaves the whole matter to the determination of the district court in practically the same way as provided in the Judicial Code—first to appoint commissioners to ascertain the amount and then provides in addition that the amount can be determined in the district court. So far as appropriating money is concerned, the amendment itself authorizes any officers of the Government to draw on account out of any money appropriated. That certainly does not make an appropriation. It leaves the amount to be appropriated, and in the final clause it does say that where the final judgment is once reached that then the amount of the final judgment, including the costs, is authorized to be paid by the officers of the Government, and that amount is appropriated. And when the gentleman said that the United States never agreed or authorized that in cases of eminent domain that the case should be tried by a jury, he is mistaken. I refer to the act of 1888, when this House passed an act, which was approved by the Senate, authorizing the con-demnation of some property of the Monongahela Navigation Co., where the identical language was used as in this amendment for the procedure to be in accordance with the laws of Pennsylvania and other States, which provided the same method as pro-ment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, we find, as I understand the two, this situation. The amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee in substance provides that upon a certain state of facts, there shall be a liability on the part of the Government, and for the discharge of this liability, the Congress must thereafter make a special appropriation. On the other hand the amendment on the part of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, provides a method of ascertainment of liability and the appropriation in advance of a sum to be drawn upon for the discharge of this liability.

Mr. HASTINGS. Which might run into a billion dollars

Mr. SAUNDERS. Oh, yes. The amount to be provided is altogether indefinite and uncertain. There is certainly a great difference, in substance between the two propositions, and that being so, having in mind the continual and increasing tendency manifested in the precedents of this House to narrow the rule of germaneness, a tendency which has been noted by everyone who has followed these rulings, it seems to me that the amendment offered on the part of the gentleman from Pennsylvania is not in order

The CHAIRMAN. In the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee provision is made in the last clause, page 6: It shall make just compensation therefor-

That is, the property that has been taken by the Governmentand in default of agreement upon the damages, compensation, price, or rental due by reason of any action hereunder the person to whom the same is due shall be entitled to sue the United States to recover his fair and reasonable damages in the manner provided for by section 24, paragraph 20, section 145 of the Judicial Code.

Which, as the Chair understands it, would allow suit in the Court of Claims for damages. Now, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania that suit may be brought in proper district court of the United States, or that within the jurisdiction of this court it may be arbitrated, in the judg-ment of the Chair and in the opinion of the Chair that part of the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania is germane to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee. But in the later clause of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania he creates an indefinite and continuing appropriation, and the question of germaneness, as the Chair has stated, in the first part of the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, he would hold it was germane, but in the opinion of the Chair the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania creating a continning and indefinite appropriation destroys the germaneness, and the point of order is sustained.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer another amendment. I desire to say, in order not to take up the time of the committee, that this is exactly the same amendment I offered before, but leaving out the part which the Chair has ruled not to be in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend page 6, paragraph (e), line 7, by striking out all after the word "damages" on line 7, and subsequent lines, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "in the proper district court of the United States, irrespective of the amount claimed, and, on application thereto by petition, either by such claimant or claimants, or the United States, as the case may be, or anyone in behalf of either, the said court shall appoint five discreet and disinterested commissioners, and appoint a time for said commissioners to meet, of which time and place at least 10 days' notice shall be given by the petitioners to the said commissioners and the other party; and the said commissioners, or a majority of them, having been first duly sworn or affirmed, faithfully, justly, and impartially to decide, and a true report made, concerning all matters and things to be submitted to them in relation to which they are authorized to inquire, in pursuance of the provisions of this act; and after having heard the parties, their proofs and allegations, they shall estimate and determine the damages, if any, sustained by the claimant or claimants, and make report thereof to the said court; and if any damages be awarded and the report be confirmed by the said court, judgment shall be entered thereon, the costs to follow the judgment, and the court shall determine the reasonable compensation of such commissioners for their services.

shall determine the reasonable compensation of such cours for their services.

"The commissioners hereinbefore provided for may be appointed either after the exercise of the powers herein conferred or actual notice of intention so to do, and upon the report of said commissioners being filed in said court, either party, within 30 days thereafter, may file its, his, her, or their appeal from said report to the said court; and after such appeal either party may put the cause at issue in the form directed by said court, and the same shall then be tried by said court and a jury; and after final judgment in said court either party may appeal therefrom to the Circuit Court of Appeals or the Supreme Court in the manner prescribed in other cases.

"The said district court shall have power to issue subpœnas for the appearance of witnesses before such commissioners, order what notices shall be given connected with any part of the proceedings, and make all such orders connected with the practice, pleadings, forms, and proceedings either before such commissioners or in said court, as may be deemed requisite."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On the second page of the amendment, in line 2, strike out the words "and a jury" following the word "court."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, of course the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Padgett] is subject to a point or order, being an amendment in the third degree. I did not make the point of order because I thought it wise to leave it to the judgment of the House whether they had reached that point where they proposed to abolish trial by jury.

Mr. PADGETT. I have a letter here from the Attorney

Mr. MANN. I have no doubt the Attorney General wants to abolish trial by jury. I never knew a time when the defendant

Mr. PADGETT. It says here that a jury trial is provided for, whereas the United States has never consented to be sued before a jury.

Mr. MANN. The Attorney General is in error. He does not know what the law is on the subject. There is a trial by jury now in the district court in a suit against the United States.

Mr. TOWNER. Will the gentleman yield to me to show the genfleman?

Mr. MANN. I will be very glad to yield.
Mr. TOWNER. The language of this provision that was put originally by the gentleman from Tennessee in the bill, referring to this paragraph 20, section 24, says that these suits may be brought either by law or at equity. If they were brought at law they would employ a jury trial.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, after all it does not make so much difference about that. Here is a proposition that the Government of the United States shall walk into a man's factory and take out any part of it, either of his product or his machinery, or take out all that he has, confiscate, in effect, and then say to him, "You shall not have a chance to lay your matter before a jury." Is not that giving him little enough? When you seize his property, is it not giving him little enough to give him a chance before a jury? I want the Government to be careful before it takes the property, and if it selzes the property of an individual it ought to be willing to recompense him and leave it to a jury, not to a packed court, a court perhaps wanting promotion at the hands of the President, and seeking to get the favor of the administration. It would not be the first time that had occurred.

Mr. PADGETT. I want it distinctly understood that I am opposed to this entire amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Butler], and I hope that the House will vote it down. But before it is voted upon as a whole it ought to be remedied as far as possible of objectionable details. The gentleman says "a packed court," in referring to the court. Every man here knows what it means to subject the Government to a suit before a jury. There is no use of mincing words about it. Every condemnation proceeding that is had, where a jury condemns, we know the Government has to pay two, three, or four prices; and to subject the Government to a suit before a jury in the district court where the jury is taken out from around and among those interested in the establishment and the manufactory would put the Government at a great disadvantage.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. If this amendment is to be adopted at all, it ought to be amended so that the Government, when it consents to be sued, should consent to be sued in the court and tried by the court, and not before a jury.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Padgett] yield to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Smith]? Mr. PADGETT. I do.
Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Is it not true that the Government appoints the court, and that you would be trying a man before a court appointed by the plaintiff in the case?

Mr. PADGETT. That is so far-fetched that I do not think it needs any answer. But we do know the operations of juries where the Government is sued, and I think the amendment I have offered should be agreed to.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, have we reached the merits of the dispute?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. We have.

Mr. BUTLER. Very well. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say something before this proposed amendment is voted on, and I wish every Member would express himself so that the country might understand where he stands on the proposition that wish every Member would express himself so that the country might understand where he stands on the proposition that suitors shall not have their disputes at law settled by their Government confiscated his yards. The grand old shipbuilder peers. I repeat what I said heretofore. I requested the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Steele] to prepare the amendment which I offered to secure to the people of the United States—who are unfortunate enough to have their property taken forcibly from them under war conditions—an opportunity taken forcibly from them under war conditions—an opportunity to have their disputes tried in the ordinary way and by ordinary courts of justice. In the State of Pennsylvania, where Mr. Steele and I live, he having had much experience and I having had but little, we do know this, that wherever the property of an individual is seized he has the opportunity, first, to have his damages assessed by seven men appointed by the court of common pleas of the county in which his property is located, and then if the award is not satisfactory to either party intersected an appeal is allowed him that he may try before a jury ested an appeal is allowed him that he may try before a jury of the county in which the property is located the question of how much compensation he in justice ought to have. The Govern-ment ought to ask no greater privilege, and the claimant surely is entitled to that much.

Mr. GORDON. Will the gentleman yield?
The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania rield to the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.
Mr. GORDON, The amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Padgert] provides that the President of the United States shall fix the value of this property, and if they are not satisfied with his judgment they then may appeal to the court. Do you think the President of the United States is liable to oppress your citizens temporarily? Is not that as much of a safeguard, in other words, as the system you have just described as in force in your State?

Mr. BUTLER. I do not agree that the President of the United States should be the sole arbiter, and beyond this I want to inquire whether or not small manufacturers of the State in which Mr. Steele and I live shall have justice. And I do not want to see the right of the injured party turned over to the Government of the United States to do with it as the Government may see fit; to take him where the Government shall direct and in the manner which the Government may dictate and in its own time determine what damage the Government may have done him in the forcible occupation of his property. I wish the injured party to have a quick remedy and an inexpensive one.

They are not asking to have their property taken. They have offered them, but if any dispute should arise between them and the Government as to the amount of damage, it must be settled somewhere and by some tribunal. Why should the Government, being the aggressor, select the place of trial and the manner of the remedy.

Mr. Chairman, let me tell you a rather sad story that belongs to my district, and one that led me to ask this learned gentleman to prepare this amendment. John Roach built the first man to prepare this amendment. John Roach built the list ships of the new Navy of the United States. He built the Dolphin, the Atlanta, the Boston and the Raleigh. Before they were completed his shipyard was seized by the Government. It used his tools and burnt his coal and greatly damaged his plant. It confiscated his property to suit the views of the officers and officials of the United States Government, who charged him with inability to complete his contracts. It drained Mr. Roach's purse, it broke his heart, and destroyed his life, and 13 years did his family labor before they finally recovered through the Court of Claims, and procured an appropriation by Congress to reimburse them. There was no question of their right nor any question of the honesty of the claim.

Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to Mr. TALBOTT. me for one moment?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes. Mr. TALBOTT. All the trouble about the Roach case was

Mr. BUTLER I was here when the appropriation was made. Mr. TALBOTT. Now, wait. All the trouble about it was this, that the Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Robeson, made a contract with the Roaches to build a vessel without authority of law.

Mr. BUTLER. No, sir; that was not the reason which the Government assigned for the confiscation.
Mr. TALBOTT. That was the whole of it.
Mr. BUTLER. I know that Whitney was Secretary of the Navy at the time, and seized John Roach's plant, and said the Dolphin was defective—structurally weak. Yet she has sailed around the earth several times. She is the best ship the Navy ever had. It was stated repeatedly that the plant was seized because the shaft of the Dolphin had been defectively made. It of Chester, remembered for his skill and beloved for his integrity, was buried long before his family received the damages they were entitled to. In his day he had built more than 200 ships and never had a dispute with a customer, except his own Government. I do not want to see such occur again, and it was to avoid a similar catastrophe that my colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. Steele] prepared the amendment and I offered it, so that if hereafter a man whose property is seized, whether he is a rich man or a poor man, whether he has notes in the bank or a deposit to his credit, there shall be given to him an early and quick remedy by which he can recover justly what is due him. [Applause on the Republican side.] And if you take from him the right of trial by jury, and deny him the remedy herein provided, I shall make my best effort to put this House upon record. [Applause.]

Mr. GORDON. You are not asking for a jury trial?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, I rise to say only one word. I heartlly agree with my friend from Pennslyvania [Mr. Butler] that every man ought to have his day in court, but I believe that that ought to be applied to all citizens of the United States. I think it ought to be applied to the munition manufacturers; I think it ought to be applied to the big corporations, as in this case, and to every individual case without reference to his station in life. But, Mr. Chairman, I rose for the purpose of inviting attention to the fact that we find upon the House Calendar to-day 50 or 75, or maybe 200 or 250, little bills to refer individual claims to the Court of Claims, and when Members get up on the floor in behalf of the little fellows, in behalf of these little claims, to refer their claims against the Government to the Court of Claims, you invariably find some objection made on that side. I am very glad that there is a change of heart, that we find our friends willing to have these cases referred to a court for adjudication. I am not only in favor of referring these claims to a court to be adjudicated, but I am in favor of referring all claims where the interests of the Government are properly safeguarded in the bill to some court for adjudication.

or adjudication. [Applause.]
The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, the Federal Government is not always a fair debtor, and it is not always a fair debtor because its citizens unfortunately are so frequently unfair to it. Any man who has served any length of time in this House knows how careful men must be in examining claims against the Government in order that the Government may not be robbed, and the result of that is that the Government frequently leans backward and refuses to pay its just debts knowing it is frequently asked to pay what is not just.

But what is the proposal before the House? The proposal is that in this particular matter you shall have a different sort of procedure from what you have in other matters of claims against the Government. Now, if the gentleman had proposed a summary proceeding by way of arbitration for the settlement of these questions I might have listened with more patience, but what he is proposing is simply to add a form of arbitration to the court procedure so as to give an additional reason for delay in final adjudication. His amendment provides that there may be these arbitrators, and then their decision being final upon nobody, the right shall exist to an ordinary trial in a court by a jury, and he insists on the right to appeal to the circuit court of appeals or the Supreme Court, as the facts may warrant in the particular cases

Now, what is the present law? The present law is that as to all claims over $10,000 suits shall be brought in the Court of Claims, where a jury trial does not exist. Suits brought in a district court that are properly suits for determination by a jury and which have to be less than $10,000 may be tried by

He proposes now to have a jury trial in all instances. Well, there have been discussions since the beginning of the Government and probably will be until the end of it as to the merits of the jury system, as to whether it does or does not promote equity; and I probably would not have said anything about the matter if it had not been for the suggestion made by several that because Federal judges, forsooth, are appointed by the United States Government therefore they can not be expected to be honest and impartial in dealing with suits against the Federal Government.

I think that is an undeserved and unwarrantable reflection upon the character of the judiciary of the United States, and I would be false to myself if I did not protest against an assertion of that kind. There is nothing in the history of these judges that warrants men to believe that in trying matters between the Government and its citizens they will not do full and exact justice. If we are going to change the rule, let us change it as to all manner of cases. There is no more reason for providing for a jury trial in this class of cases than there is as to any other suit brought by citizens against the Federal Government. I submit that what we are likely to do in passing upon amendments that we have only heard read, and have not been able to examine, is to create a very cumbersome machinery for the consideration of these cases that will result in expensive litigation before the rights of parties are determined. The proposal of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Padgett] is simply to extend the existing machinery for the adjudication of claims against the Government to such claims as may arise under this legislation.

Mr. DALLINGER. Does not the gentleman see any difference between the case of a citizen voluntarily selling something to the Government, and the case provided for by this extraordinary amendment?

Mr. SHERLEY. I do in one sense, and I do not in another. I do not think the citizen who has his property taken over in time of national peril is in such a terribly desperate state and has such peculiar equities that he should ask favors that are not given to the ordinary creditor of the Government. a time when all men's property should be subject to the com-mand of the Nation that makes their property worth while by the defense that it gives to them and to their property, and I see nothing so very sacred in the character of these claims as against claims of other kinds that may exist against the Government. I want my Government to do justice as to all claims, but I do not think the jury system necessarily guarantees a better solution of these cases, and I think it will serve to lengthen very greatly the time before final judgment is had and the matter is settled.

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, it is a well-known rule of common law that a sovereign is not subject to be sued by a subject or citizen without consent. That being the established rule of all Governments, this Federal Government years ago gave a common rule of consent by which the citizen might sue the Government through the Court of Claims, and I am unwilling to go out and scatter all over this Republic a thousand or a hundred thousand suits to be defended at different and converse times by district attorneys all over the country, prolonging the litigation, in time of war. In time of war you can confiscate, conscript, and condemn human lives and compel them to Money is no more sacred than men.

Mr. SWITZER. I should like to ask the gentleman a ques-

Mr. SWITZER. This is not limited to time of war. It says, in time of any national emergency."

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. Imminent danger of war.

what is contemplated. It will never be exercised otherwise. Mr. SWITZER. Then why not strike out the word "emergency

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. A national emergency is such an imminent danger as necessitates immediate preparation for war. That is understood. There is certainly no contention about that. Now, the Government having established this process by which citizens can reach the Government in suit on cause of action, I do not want to hamstring and hogtie the Federal Government by prolonging and scattering and disseminating litigation all over the Republic. I support the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee to the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Padgett] to the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER]. The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. PADGETT) there were—ayes 48, noes 63.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER].

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr.

BUTLER) there were—ayes 32, noes 78.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT].

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment to the amendment: In line 17, on page 3, strike out the word "he" and insert in lieu thereof the words "the necessities of the Government."

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I think the chairman of the committee will agree to that. That leaves it, not as he may require but as the necessities of the Government may require.

Mr. PADGETT. Who would require it?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The President has the authority. Mr. PADGETT. I know; but the word "he" gives him the

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. To be determined by the Presi-

Mr. PADGETT. My amendment says:

To place an order with any person for such ships or raw material as he may require.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I will amend my amendment in this way, Mr. Chairman:

To be determined by the President.

Mr. PADGETT. Who would give the order for it? The President is to give the direction for them to do something.

Mr. LENROOT. That direction is in (b), which authorizes the President to place the order. This has nothing to do with the order. It still will remain as it was. The President will be authorized to place the order,

Mr. PADGETT. How does your amendment read?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Let the Clerk read it. The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment as modified: Strike out the word "he" and insert "the necessities of the Government, to be determined by the President."

Mr. PADGETT. I have no objection to that.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Strike out the words "as he may require and" and insert "as the necessities of the Government, to be determined by the President, may require."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will again report the amendment as now modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the words "he may require and" and insert "as the necessities of the Government, to be determined by the President, may require."

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, referring to the taking over of certain plants by the Government, I was sufficiently fortunate yesterday to meet a gentleman who left England less than two weeks ago, who is the representative there, and has been for many years, of one of the largest manufacturing establishments in the United States.

He is familiar with nearly every condition under which manufacturing is being carried on in England at the present time, and with the methods in use by the English Government, especially in the use of private manufacturing establishments for Government work. The English Government has not confiscated a single manufacturing plant, as we here understand the term. It has built many factories for the exclusive uses of the Government.

Of course, it is true, too, that hundreds of the manufacturing establishments of England are being operated exclusively for the Government, but there has been no taking over, such as we contemplate doing by this measure that is now before the House.

I have here positive information, at first hand, of exactly the plan as operated by our friends across the water.

In the first place, the English Government has made a census, or survey, of all manufacturing establishments, as we have already done in this country, and from that list they have selected various establishments which are suitable for the manufacturing of such items as the Government needs. The idea is to send to the factory the general agent of the English Government to inform them that that Government has decided to purchase of them certain items which it needs, and he presents a list of those items, designated as "A," "B," "C," "D," and so forth. "A" represents the item most suitable for the plant to manufacture and most needed by the Government. "B" represents the item second in importance, and for the "B" represents the item second in importance, and for the manufacture of which the plant is suitable. "C" "D" and "E" follow along the same line in the order designated.

The representative of the Government says, "Gentlemen, we want this factory to put all its endeavors on this line of work. After the items we have laid out here have been manufactured, if you have any facilities left for other purposes, you will be permitted to manufacture and sell them elsewhere, as you have heretofore.

Now, when it comes down to the matter of a settlement or terms for the manufacturing for the Government, there is no question as to any arrangement as to interest on the investment or anything of that sort. The Government simply assumes the rôle of a customer, the same as any other purchaser, at the prices made by the maker, and the maker bills them up to the Government, exactly as he would to any other buyer, and when the year end comes he is permitted to make a profit of 6 per cent on his entire capital and investment, and after that, if there is any further profit he divides that equally with the Government.

Now, gentlemen, that seems to me to be a very satisfactory and feasible method of handling this whole proposition. There is no confiscation. There is no reason in the world why any manufacturing establish in this country, or any other, would not be willing to do business with the Government on this basis. There is no opportunity for graft; no incentive for a concern to charge more than a reasonable profit, because it can have only a fair share of that profit and the Government will get the balance.

The plant goes along from the time the arrangement is made with the Government exactly as before, except it may be possible that its facilities will also allow it to operate on other lines not needed by the Government at the same time. It bills up its business in a regular way. The Government has no regular or specific terms, no fixed set of terms with which the manufacturer must comply. Instead, the Government accepts the individual terms of the manufacturer, as to prices, and so

Now, it seems to me if some plan of this sort could be adopted and followed by this Government, in case it became necessary to secure the aid of many private concerns, there would be very little difficulty, very few claims to adjust, and very little trouble, if any, for the factory to return from Government work to its former production of its general business output.

I feel, as a manufacturer myself, that this method is, perhaps with some few details changed, which might be necessary under our laws, would be a most suitable one and very much more satisfactory in this country than anything which has been presented along this line up to the present moment. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Cooper].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, in order to make clear some matters here, I desire to transpose certain words. On page 3 of the resolution, the proposed amendment, in lines 14 and 15, occur the words "and within the limit of amounts appropriated therefor." I think it would be well to strike out those words as they appear in paragraph (b) and insert them in line 16 of the same page, just below, so that it would read:

First. Within the limit of amounts appropriated therefor, to place an order with such person—

And so forth, and to insert the same words after the word Second," in line 10, page 4.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would suggest that the committee act upon one of these at a time.

Mr. PADGETT. Then, Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the words "and within the limit of amounts appropriated therein lines 14 and 15, on page 3, and to insert the words "within the limit of amounts appropriated therefor" after the word "First," in line 16, page 3, and to strike out the capital "T" and insert a small "t" in the word "To."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on page 3, by striking out, in lines 14 and 15, the words "and within the limit of amounts appropriated therefor": and insert, after the word "First" and before the word "To," in line 16, the words "within the limit of amounts appropriated therefor," and change the capital letter "T" to a small letter "t."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the amendment does not strike me favorably, even to accomplish the purpose that the gentleman desires to accomplish. I am not very much enamored at the gentleman's amendment at all. Here is a proposition conthe gentleman's amendment at all. Here is a proposition consisting of a number of paragraphs, all preceded by certain general provisions—"in time of war," "or of national emergency arising prior to March 1, 1918," "to be determined by the President by proclamation," "the President is hereby authorized and empowered," "in addition to all other existing provisions of law." All of those are preliminary and necessary to each or of the other experience and included in it can each one of the other separate provisions, and included in it as one of these is the provision "within the limit of amounts appropriated therefor." The gentleman might just as well strike out "in time of war" or "any national emergency." where it occurs, and insert it each time after the number of each succeeding paragraph. Why is it not better to have it in general language to begin with? It applies to all of the paragraphs.
Mr. PADGETT.

No; it does not; and that is the reason I desire to explain it to the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. Oh, it does apply to all of the paragraphs,
Mr. LENROOT. It does, but it should not.

Mr. PADGETT. There is where we differ. In paragraph "First" it applies, and it applies to paragraph second, but it would not to paragraph third, to require the owner or occupier of any factory in which ships or war material are built or produced, and so forth, for there is no appropriation made.

Mr. MANN. There is an appropriation made for war material. Of course, that makes it worse from my point of view. If it is the intention of the gentleman to give to the President power to do all of these things, regardless of appropriations, that is one thing. I am opposed to the amendment, even within the limit of appropriations; but if the President is to have the power to seize everything, regardless of any appropriations which are made, I am that much more opposed to the amendment.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. In a moment. Mr. PADGETT. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Len-BOOT] called my attention to this matter. When I first introduced the resolution and it was printed, it had a provision for an appropriation of $150,000,000 to care for all of these things, and it was drawn with reference to that provision in the bill. The Rules Committee did not report and make in order that provision, so that as we have it before us we do not have the appropriation which was originally contemplated.

Mr. MANN. Well, you do not have any appropriation. For instance, you do not have any appropriation to give to the President power to place an order with any person for such ship or war material, and so forth. You have no specific appropriation. You have no appropriation with reference to modifying or canceling any existing contract; but you have certain appropriations to acquire certain things, and you can only do these things and obligate the Government to the extent of those appropriations. If you remove the limit, there is no limit at all to the authority of the President to seize anything he pleases and obligate the Government to pay the bill.

Mr. PADGETT. I am proposing to remove it from that place and insert it at all of the other places where it belongs.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no; the gentleman does not propose to insert it at all of the other places where it belongs.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; I do. I have not gotten through with my amendments.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman stated he did not propose to apply it to the third or fourth item.

Mr. PADGETT. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Len-ROOT] suggested to me that in paragraph (b) an appropriation would be construed as precedent to the authority of the President to require the owner or occupier of any factory to do the things provided in paragraph 3. It would be precedent to the right and authority of the President as provided in paragraph 4 and also precedent to the reading of the language in section 5, where there were no appropriations, and none are provided for in this resolution, and as it was originally framed and drawn by us-it was changed by the Rules Committee-there was an appropriation, a lump-sum appropriation caring for all of these

Mr. MANN. Let me tell the gentleman what he is running into. If you do not put that in, the authority authorizes the President to require the owner or occupier of any factory in which ships or war material are built or produced to place at the disposal of the United States the whole or any part of the output of any such factory, and to deliver such output or parts thereof in such quantities and at such times as may be specified in the order. Now, supposing there is no appropriation, and the President of the United States takes possession of every shipyard in the United States and requires the output of every shippard to be turned over. No money to pay for it. Does the gentleman want to give that authority to the President? We are making a very large appropriation in the naval appropria-tions this year, and this would give the authority to the President to add to the naval appropriation by threefold. He could take possession of everything and every shipyard in the United States without regard to any appropriation at all. I think we are making enough appropriations in the naval bill this year anyhow. I am not in favor of letting the President spend five or six hundred million dollars and, in addition to that, obligate the Government to pay for it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, with reference to this matter I asked the chairman of the committee whether it was the intention of the committee to make any specific appropriations for taking over these plants. He said while that was originally contemplated, it is not now the committee's intention so to do. I then called his attention to the fact that unless specific appropriations were made, if the language remained in the amendment; it would not authorize the President to take over a single plant, because the language specifically declares his authority upon these very things, the existence of war, an emergency arising, and that they shall be within the limits of amounts appropriated therefor. It is entirely clear, therefore, that if no money is appropriated for taking over the plants the President would not have jurisdiction at all to take them over. Now, clearly what is in contemplation by the committee is that the President, without this specific appropriation, shall have the power to take over these plants, but as to the products of the plants, he shall not have power to get a greater product than authorized by law in the way of appropriations.

Mr. PADGETT. That is limited by the other amendments.

Mr. PADGETT. That is limited by the other amendments.
Mr. LENROOT. Now, he suggests an amendment, in line 16, after the word "first," "within the limit of amounts appropriated therefor." That will take care of every proposition in that paragraph only. The same amendment will take care of other provisions in paragraph 2, but the gentleman from Illinois is right that there should be a provision in paragraph 3, not at the same point however as the amendment proposed for the other two paragraphs because paragraph 3 begins with for the other two paragraphs, because paragraph 3 begins with the power to take over the plants, but when it comes to the product of this plant that should be limited by the appropria-tion, and I suggest to the gentleman if he will offer the same amendment at the end of line 22, with relation to the product only, that entire matter will then be taken care of.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.
Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, on page 4, line 10, after the word "second," insert the words "within the limit of amounts appropriated therefor," and change the capital "T" to a

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, after the word "second," in line 10, insert the words "within the limit of amounts appropriated therefor."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, page 4, after the end of line 22, after the words "and at such time," insert "and within the limit of amounts appropriated therefor."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 4, after the words "and at such times," in line 22, insert the following "and within the limit of amounts appropriated therefor."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, does it not seem to be a more proper place to have it after the word "and" in line 21? That would harmonize with the provision inserted in the other That would harmonize with the provision inserted in the other item. It is rather awkward where the gentleman now seeks to apply his amendment. I suggest it would be better to insert it after the word "and" in line 21.

Mr. PADGETT. I think the suggestion a very good one, and I ask that the amendment suggested follow the word "and" in line 21, page 4, so it will read then "and with the limit of amounts appropriated therefor to deliver."

The Clerk will report the amendment.

Page 4, line 21, after the word "and," insert the words "within the limit of amounts appropriated therefor."

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, I make this motion for the purpose of asking unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing therein a patriotic letter received from a very distinguished and intelligent German citizen of my district expressing some views with regard to the present international situation.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing a letter from one of his constituents. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I do that for the purpose of propounding some questions to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Paderti], if I may have his attention for a moment, in regard to some provisions in the amendment before I offer a formal amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Green] referring to the present amendment?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I misunderstood the situation.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the pending amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.
Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, in order to remove any doubt, as I have been asked several times about it, on page 5, line 14, in paragraph (c), as it is now written or printed, you will see that it reads "that no person shall, directly or indirectly," and so forth. Then I wanted to insert after the word "that," in line 14, the words "in time of war or of national emergency arising prior to March 1, 1918," so as to make it clear that this paragraph and the powers given in that paragraph are limited the same as in paragraph (b).

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state Mr. LENROOT. Will the gentleman yield? The gentleman will state his amendment.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. I suggest he add the words "as aforesaid," to cover the proclamation by the President.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair suggests that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Padgett] prepare his amendment and send it up here.

Mr. PADGETT. I send the amendment to the Clerk's desk. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Pad-CETT] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, if the amendment now offered by the chairman is adopted, will it prevent the making of a motion to strike out subdivision (c)?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. I wish to make the motion to strike out.

Mr. PADGETT. It has to be perfected first.
Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Then any motion will be in order.
The CHAIRMAN. The motion of the gentleman will be in order after the section is perfected.

The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 5, line 14, after the word "that," insert "in time of war or national emergency arising prior to March 1, 1918, to be determined by the President by a proclamation as aforesaid."

Mr. PADGETT. Strike out the words "as aforesaid." Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. MANN. An amendment to the amendment is not in order. It would be an amendment of the third degree. Of course, it could be offered by unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT].

Mr. MANN. Under the construction given it by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Padgett], how far down in the langauge, beginning in paragraph (b), on page 3, "that in time of war or of national emergency," and so forth, is it operative? How far down in the bill is that operative?

Mr. PADGETT. I understand that the words "or of national emergency arising prior to March 1, 1918," applied to the whole bill.

Mr. MANN. If they do apply to the whole bill, and then you somewhere stick in the same words again, the Lord could not tell what they do apply to.

Mr. PADGETT. Some gentlemen wanted to make it certain and I said that I had no objection to making it specific.

Mr. MANN. I suppose that that applied to the rest of the bill, except the bringing suit, perhaps, or a claim. But certainly it does not do to have language to apply to the whole bill, and then use the language again saying that it did not mean to apply to the whole bill, unless you are certain what you are doing. It may be that you hold it only applies down to the end of the fifth. I do not know.

I would like to ask the gentleman before I take my seat another question. What does this language mean, "or a national emergency arising prior to March 1, 1918"? Could the President, whoever may be President 20 years from now, seize property on the ground that the national emergency arose prior to March 1, 1918?

Mr. PADGETT. I think the powers given in it are limited to 1918, March 1, and after that down-

Mr. MANN. Oh, no; that power to selze is not limited to March 1, 1918. The power to selze is limited only to a national emergency which arose prior to March 1, 1918, but if it is intended that the power to seize shall end March 1, 1918, let us Do not leave that open.

Mr. PADGETT. That is what we want to say, if the gentleman will offer a suggestion that will make it clear. That limitation was not in the original resolution, but it was inserted by the Rules Committee, and if it is not clear I would be very glad to avail myself of the suggestion of the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman admits it is not clear. The President might declare it 20 years hence.

Mr. HOWARD. I wanted to ask the gentleman this question. I noticed over on page 3, line 10, that the date of March 1, 1918, appears. Now, then, the gentleman has offered an amendment inserting the same date in another portion. Now, would not that naturally carry with it that it did not apply to the other sections which it does not specifically state?

Mr. MANN. I suppose it would be claimed by whomever it was that suggested this amendment be offered, that the first provision only applies to the first, second, third, fourth, fifth, and so forth.

Mr. HOWARD. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANN. And that (c), or what is under (c), is on the same basis as that under (b). I do not know. It is as clear as mud to me.

Mr. LENROOT. Right on that point, it seems very clear to me that is not proper. We have five paragraphs (a), (b), (c), (d), (e), and (f). Now (b) relates only to the emergency contained in the various paragraphs under (b), and it certainly does not relate to (c), because they are separate paragraphs and entirely distinct from each other. For instance, (a) is the first paragraph of the amendment. It is a definition, and then (b) relates to the emergency in time of war, and (c) is silent upon those points.

Mr. MANN. (d) is apparently an authorization to the President to do certain things. I rather think the gentleman is correct about that. But on this other point I would like to hear from the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Lenroot], who probably prepared it. [Laughter.]

Mr. LENROOT. The gentleman from Wisconsin did prepare the limitation, but he will state very frankly that he did not have in mind the point that the gentleman from Illinois now raises.

I think that should be corrected.

Mr. PADGETT. What is the point?

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Wisconsin and I agree that the amendment is proper, but that there ought to be another one.

Mr. LENROOT. I wanted, however, to make a slight correction of a statement made inadvertently, I am sure, by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Padgett] wherein he stated that these amendments were put in by the Committee on Rules. In defense of the Committee on Rules, I will say the committee did not attempt to legislate, and the changes were suggested when the committee was assured by the gentleman from Tennessee that he would be glad to adopt any suggestions that were made.

Mr. PADGETT. I insisted, if the gentleman will permit me, on the provisions contained in my original proposal. But when I was assured by the Rules Committee that I could not get that,

I said I would take what I could get. Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman from Tennessee let me have a little talk with him? [Laughter.]

Mr. PADGETT. Yes. Mr. BUTLER. I understood that there were 21 members on the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir. Mr. BUTLER. We met and we agreed upon this provision. I have no complaint because I was unsuccessful in attempting to amend the bill, and although the chairman agreed upon this provision, we voted it out here practically unanimously. The chairman of the committee now sees fit to have changes made without consulting any of us on this side.

Mr. PADGETT. No, sir. The chairman insisted on the provision as reported by the Committee on Naval Affairs, and the Committee on Rules assured me that they would not report that. I tried to get as much of it as I could, and I succeeded in obtaining what is embraced in this reported resolution. The rest of it I could not get, and a half loaf is better than no bread.

Mr. BUTLER. I know, but the committee had agreed upon all bread.

Mr. PADGETT. They did, and I could not get all bread. Mr. BUTLER. Suppose they did not want half bread? Mr. PADGETT. I tried to get all, but I could not get all of it. I did get what is here, so that it can be amended. If the majority of this House want to restore it as it was before the committee eliminated certain things, it is in the power of the House to do so.

Mr. BUTLER. Of course, the Committee of the House is not going to do that after the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs has said we agreed to these things reported by the Committee on Rules. I want to find out whether or not it is important that I should attend the meetings of the Rules Com-

[Laughter.]

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that it is a mistake to place these limitations in the bill. I know of no reason why we should discriminate, in enacting a law of this kind, between the war to give orders for ammunition or any war material, and if the orders were not filled to seize any manufacturing plant capable of producing ammunition or any other war material; and those concerns would either be compelled, under the provisions of that law, to furnish the very things the Secretary of War has requested them to procure, providing the plant was suitable for producing those things or the Government would take over the plant and produce them.

It seems to me that is what should be done for the Navy. This provision leaves the President without any power at all unless we first make appropriation for that purpose.

Now, after the present emergency passes, say, in a couple of years, when Congress is adjourned, an emergency might arise when the President would want to take possession of some of these manufacturing plants, and he could not do it if it was to procure things for the Navy, but he could do it if it was to procure things for the Army.

Now, what is the use of having these two different systems? I would like to have the attention of the chairman of the committee in regard to this matter. Why should we, in this regard, have two different systems, one for the Navy and one for the Army, and why is it not better and more patriotic to have that broad provision such as was incorporated in the national-defense act, to give the President, in time of war or national emergency, the right to reach out the strong arm of the Government and take possession of the plant whose owner was not patriotic enough to do the things that the Government wants done?

Mr. PADGETT. I introduced the provision as indicated by the gentleman, but the Rules Committee declined to report it in that way and inserted this limitation. Then various Members upon the floor have been to me privately and have expressed anxiety about an unlimited provision. By extending it to March 1, 1918, that will take care of any emergency, and there will be an intervening session of Congress before that time; and, as I have stated, I took these limitations under the circumstances which I have detailed.

Mr. GOOD. I wish to suggest to the gentleman also that the penalties in the Army bill and in this provision are altogether different for the commission of exactly the same offenses. The Army bill provides a fine of $50,000 and imprisonment for three years, whereas this provides a fine of $10,000 and imprisonment for two years. It does seem to me that when we are providing a law for the two branches of the Government that are so nearly alike, designed to bring about the same thing, the penalties for violation ought to be the same.

Mr. PADGETT. It is open to amendment, and I have no objection to striking out "ten" and inserting "fifty," and to striking out "two" and inserting "three."

Mr. GOOD. It seems to me that ought to be done; but what we ought to do is to pass just such a provision as we did in the Army bill, and not have a provision here that would leave the President without authority if at some time in the future, when Congress was not in session, he needed the authority that Congress a few months ago thought he should have in times of emergency so far as the Army is concerned.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I call the attention of my colleague to the fact that we are now discussing an amendment to a provision that is not in the Army national-defense act at all, an amendment to an extremely drastic provision that I think ought to have not only the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Padgert], but a further amendment which I shall offer later on. This amendment which is now before the House is to division (c), and if the gentleman will examine the peculiar provision of this division (c), under which a person with the most innocent intent may subject himself to an extreme penalty, I think he will see some reason for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee and other amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Padgett].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. Howard: Page 5, line 14, strike out all of lines 14 to 17, inclusive.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman from Iowa

[Mr. Green] want to offer an amendment to section (c)?
Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I offer a preferential amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. Green of Iowa: Page 5, line 14, after the word "indirectly," insert "with intent to hinder or delay the completion of work being done for the United States."

Mr. PADGETT. I have no objection to that amendment,

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question reverts to the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Howard] to strike out the language in lines 14, 15, 16, and 17 of page 5 of the committee amendment.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, my amendment is to strike out all of lines 14 to 17, inclusive, on page 5. I want to call the attention of the committee to this particular provision, which is peculiarly drastic and I believe unnecessary. I believe that cash registers have been the cause of manufacturing more thieves in this country since their invention than all other things put together, because when a clerk in a store sees one of them it certainly carries with it the imputation that he is under suspicion, and that he might as well be dishonest in fact

I had the pleasure and the honor of serving for a little over a year in the Spanish-American War. I was in a very large regiment, which had 1,352 men in it. The boys from the State I was in a very large of Georgia who constituted that regiment were, 90 per cent of them, boys out of the machine shops, clerks in stores, and off the farms, and only about 10 per cent of them were sweetscented dudes.

This section practically conscripts; in other words, it is equivalent to peonage on the part of this Government, and the imputation is that the laboring men of this country are not patriotic, and that they will not respond to the call of their country. Now, if this country should become involved and it should become necessary to mobilize the industrial and the military strength of this Nation, I have no hesitancy in saying that the industrial strength of the Nation will be recruited long before we really begin the recruiting of our military strength. I see no necessity for this clause to remain in this bill. It is a slap in the face of the laboring men of this country. and if you will take the history of the English Government and look back two years and a half and see what effect such attempted legislation as this had in Great Britain I think you will vote upon this particular section with much caution. Why should this provision be in the bill? When has the laboring man of America proven himself unpatriotic? When has he held back when the honor of the Republic was in the balance? He has given freely his brain, muscle, skill, and his life's blood whenever his country called.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOWARD. Yes. Mr. KELLEY. It developed in the hearings when the shipbuilders were before the committee that private shipbuilding plants manufacturing commercial ships were making so much larger profits that they are able to pay higher wages than can be paid in yards that are doing largely Government work, and commercial shipbuilders are constantly taking away employees from yards doing Government work and thus reducing the output by causing a shortage of help.

This provision, in its first inception, was intended, I feel quite sure, simply to prevent a commercial shipyard from taking away the men from a yard employed on Government work in time of war or imminent danger.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I am very glad the gentleman has given me that information, because that explains why these contracts for the Government ships are not being completed. If it were not for the fact that these private shipyards are making such enormous profits in building these ships for private concerns, the Navy battleships and the auxiliaries of the Navy would not be in the woeful, uncompleted condition in which they are to-day. The gentleman has given us the very reason.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. HOWARD. Yes. Mr. KELLEY. It further developed that the shipyards that are building the warships for the Government are engaged only in a very limited degree in the commercial shipbuilding business and those engaged in the commercial shipbuilding business are doing only a very small amount of work for the Government, and so this provision was put in to save the employees to those shipyards that were doing Government work, in order that the ships for the Navy might be completed more quickly.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I thank my distinguished friend from Michigan for his further explanation. This is an unnecessary piece of legislation. I think it is ill-considered legislation. I think if there is any piece of legislation in this bill that would place a damper on the patriotism of the American wage earner, it is the fact that the great Government under which they live has not enough confidence in their patriotism to trust them to come to the rescue of the Government with their skill, their brawn, and their ability.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia

has expired.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes. Is there objection? There was no objection.

Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. MANN.

Mr. HOWARD. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Under the language of this paragraph, if one should offer employment innocently to somebody employed in a yard engaged in work for the United States, and the man should accept the employment, would the one offering employment not have indirectly caused the man to leave his employment?

Mr. HOWARD. Yes.

Mr. MANN. And be subject to imprisonment to two years?

Mr. HOWARD. Yes; and to pay a fine of $10,000.
Mr. MANN. That is what I thought.
Mr. PADGETT. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Green], which was agreed to, removes any such interpretation.

Mr. MANN. None of us heard the amendment, so we did not

Mr. PADGETT. That amendment removed any such inter-

Mr. HOWARD. I did not hear the amendment thoroughly. I hope it does.

Mr. PLATT.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. HOWARD. Yes.
Mr. PLATT. The gentleman says this is a slap in the face of labor, which I think is largely true. Is not the whole proposition applicable to all of the American people?

Mr. HOWARD. I would not like to say that as to the whole of it, but here is the distinction: In the first place, these are relations between a shipbuilder and the Government, which are contractual relations.

Mr. PLATT. Not when the shipyard is seized.

Mr. HOWARD. That is to say, the work has to be carried on beyond the day. The distinction between the laborer and the shipbuilding concern is that a man's labor is extended only from Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOWARD. Yes.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Will not this provision prevent any competition among employers in securing labor? Will it not prevent one employer from offering larger wages than his neighbor is paying?

Mr. HOWARD. Yes; it prevents that, and, as I said in the outset, I have studied that section pretty closely and think I am putting the proper construction upon it. Men have been sent to the penitentiary in this country for peonage under a statute that is not as drastic as that, and that is what this means. That is what the Navy Department wants to do. It means penal servitude and nothing else for the laborers of this country. As I said, it is a slap in the face of patriotism, and I for one would not vote for such a provision, because I believe that the American laboring man from one end of this country to the other is just as patriotic, is just as true to that flag, as any other man in this country, and he does not deserve any such attempted legislation as this. [Applause.]

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I rise to support the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia, and in doing so I want to read the section under discussion.

SEC. (c). That no person shall, directly or indirectly, induce any person employed in any factory and engaged on work for the United States to leave his employment or to cease such work, and any person who shall violate these provisions shall be subject to a fine of not more than $10,000 or to imprisonment of not more than two years, or both.

This provision has been amended in two particulars. First, its operation has been limited to March 1, 1918; second, the words "with intent" have been added.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. I understand the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. He does not quite get the effect of it. It is "with intent."

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. I know the gentleman inserted the words "with intent."

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I think the whole section ought to be stricken out.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. I am glad my colleague from Iowa is of that opinion. As far as this legislation goes, it serves no purpose, as has been well expressed by the gentleman from Georgia, except to cast a reflection upon a class of men that we can depend upon when this Nation's life is at stake, whether it be from invasions from without or insurrection within. have never looked in vain to them for protection in times of danger. Ninety per cent of our Army and Navy has always been made up from the working classes. We have never resorted to conscription in the past. Why should we presuppose that we must in the future? If men are to be measured by their deeds, then this provision is an insult to our most patriotic citizens.

This does not only affect the men who are working at the forge or working at the bench, it means everybody connected with an industrial organization, excepting possibly the owners, from the president down to the men performing the most menial labor. It means more than that, Mr. Chairman; it means that the management of a private factory can not take the risk of employing men who are in the Government service. It means men working for the Government can not even go across the street and enter the employment of a private factory, though the management is willing to pay twice the amount of wages.

We have to-day discussed the rights of a man whose property is taken by the Government in times of national emergency or war and have tried to incorporate in this bill legislation for his protection. Though that legislation does not protect him to the extent I wish it did, it does furnish him at least a measure of protection. In the consideration of such legislation we were concerned with the rights of capital invested in industrial plants. We were all solicitous that such capital should be furnished ample and complete protection and security, and in doing this we but complied with the constitutional prohibition against the taking of private property for public use without just compensation.

The value of an industrial plant is represented in money. The value of a day's labor is also represented in money. Why should we be more solicitous about the capital invested in the plant than in the laboring man's capital, which is his right to render a day's service for the highest wages obtainable? The only capital this man has is this right. If we take this away from him are we not depriving the laboring man of his property without just compensation? Does not the same constitutional prohibition protect his rights that protects the money represented in an industrial plant? If it does not it ought to.

I am aware that this constitutional provision is seldom invoked when the rights of labor are in question. This is no fault, however, of the Constitution. It is a lack on the part of society to assign to labor its proper position. Its policy has always been to compel labor to take a secondary place to that of money and to bend its knee to the assumed superiority of money. In view of these facts, I say it is unfair, I say it is unjust, I say it is unwise, I say it is un-American to incorporate a section of this character in any legislation emanating from the American Congress, where the rights of labor are, and of right should be, exalted above the dollar.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. This provision, and we might as well understand it, is a direct blow at the labor organizations. It is intended to prevent strikes. It is intended to take away from the labor organizations all the benefits which they have gained throughout all these years of fighting. As a friend of organized labor I can not support any such measure, and I do not believe that any Member who believes in the organization of labor ought to give this measure his support.

If this measure becomes a law the workingman in a plant that has a Government contract will be at the mercy of his employer. He will be compelled to submit to any conditions that his employer may visit upon him and to accept any wages that his employer may choose to pay. He will be compelled to sub-mit to this unless alone and single-handed and of his own initiative he quits work and leaves the place and goes somewhere else.

Are we prepared to vote for a measure of that kind? Are we ready to deny to the men who toil in this country the right to organize and to take reasonable and necessary measures for organize and to take reasonable and necessary measures for their protection to get better conditions of work and better pay for their labor? If we are prepared to deny them that right, then we may well adopt this provision.

It does not make any difference whether it is war or peace, if we choose to conscript men, let us conscript them for service under the flag, let us conscript them for Government service. I will never vote to conscript a man, whether workman or otherwise, to work for a private employer.

Mr. BLACK. I would like for the gentleman to point out that section which undertakes to conscript anybody

Mr. HUDDLESTON. The measure makes it unlawful for a "walking delegate," if you please, to confer with members of his organization for whom he may be acting with a view of bettering their conditions. It is a frank and plain proposition you are up against. Perhaps some may think a walking delegate ought to be hung; that is their privilege. As for me. I think they are entitled to respect, and I am willing to stand here and protect them so far as their activities are confined to private establishments and are legitimate activities. That is the way I feel about it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amend-

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I wish to speak a few minutes in opposition to the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Howard], to strike out section (c) of the amendment offered by the chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee [Mr. PADGETT]. That section (c) as it now stands, after being perfected by amendment, reads substantially as follows: "That in time of war or of national emergency arising prior to March 1, 1918, that no person shall, directly or indirectly, when the intent is to hinder or delay such Government work, induce any person employed in any factory and engaged on work for the United States to leave his employment or to cease such work.

It is not only incorrect, but it is unfair for any Member to state in this debate that amendment (c) will work any sort of conscription on any laboring man. It is true that H. R. 20779, as originally proposed by Mr. Padgett, did contain a section, namely, section (d), which provided "that in time of actual war that the President was authorized and empowered to draft into the naval service of the United States all officers, agents, or employees of any factory equipped for the building or production of ships or war material for the Navy"; but that provision has been eliminated. I am glad that this section (d) has been eliminated from the bill, for I certainly should have voted against a provision of that kind, because I believe it unnecessary and inopportune. I concur with the statements made by several gentlemen who have addressed the House during this debate that labor is not unpatriotic. Indeed, on the contrary, I am glad to believe that the great mass of the American people, whether they be the captains of industry, merchants in the marts of trade, workmen in mill or factory, producers on the farm, or in what-ever occupation or avocation in life, are thoroughly loyal to our common country and one flag. Of course, I believe that, and I would hate to believe anything else. This is not a provision to draft any man into service, and I defy any man on the floor of this House to show that it is. It merely provides that after the Government has exercised its power given by this Padgett amendment to requisition and take over for use or operation, in time of actual war or national emergency, these shipbuilding and munition factories, that no trouble maker and unpatriotic schemer who has not at heart the interests of the American Government shall go among these employees and incite dissatisfaction and disloyalty to the Government and induce any of such employees to quit their work in such critical times. The provision itself expressly provides that it shall not apply except in those cases where there is an intent to hinder and delay the Government work, and any lawyer who has any knowledge of legal phraseology at all knows that the intent would be the gravamen of the offense. And I say that such ought to be the law in the time of a national crisis, when it may be that the best blood of the country would be spent upon the battle field in defense of the Nation's safety and honor. No man in this House wishes any more than I that the cup of woe may be permitted to pass without our Nation drinking from its dregs, but if, unhappily, that should not be our privilege and the best blood of the country should be called to the national defense, then while they are fighting to save the country, are we going to permit trouble makers and breeders of discord to ply their avocation in the shipbuilding and munition factories, with intent to hinder and delay Government work? I say it would be monstrously unfair to the men in the field who would be spending their blood to preserve the Nation, for whom we should all be willing to make any needed sacrifice.

Mr. KEATING. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. I will. Mr. KEATING. The gentleman says it would be unfair to go into a factory under Government control. I want to call his attention to the fact that the amendment applies to all factories which may be engaged in Government work, but not necessarily under Government control, but where private contracts are under Government control.

Mr. BLACK. Exactly; but the gentleman overlooks the fact that they would have been brought into that Government service under the provisions of this bill, and that the provision has absolutely no application except in cases where the intent and purpose is to hinder and delay Government work, and that itself would be the gravamen of the offense.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. BLACK. I will.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Suppose a concern was doing one piece of work for the Government and doing another piece for a private concern. These men might be engaged partly on Government work and partly on private work. If in that case they were induced to quit work, or agree among themselves to quit work, they would have to go to the penitentiary.

Mr. BLACK. No, sir; the provision has no such meaning. It would be incumbent upon the prosecution for the United States Government to show as an element of that offense that it was done with the specific intent to hinder and delay the Government work. The burden of proof would, of course, be upon the Government, as in all criminal cases.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. Yes, sir.
Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Does not the gentleman believe that if the workingmen of America are loyal enough to enlist and go to the front and fill the trenches and the rifle pits and to be shot down, they will be loyal enough to work for the Government in the case of an emergency, and does not he think this is unnecessary and a slap at the working people?

Mr. BLACK. No, sir; I do not think it is a slap at the workingman at all. The provision of the bill is not aimed at the workingman. It will only reach the disloyal and trouble maker who comes into the factory to stir up trouble, and I can not see wherein it affects the patriotic workingman at all.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I do.

Mr. BLACK. I think it is intended to exactly apply to the man to whom it ought to apply, and that is the man who in the time of a national crisis thinks only of his own selfish desires, forgets his patriotic duty to his country, and undertakes to hinder and delay the Government work.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. I will.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I notice on page 5 the following:

Fifth. To waive all provisions of law restricting the hours of labor of persons in the employ of the United States or of persons in the employ of contractors therewith when employed on work in connection with such ships or war material.

That is, we waive all the provisions of the eight-hour law for anybody making ships for the United States.

A MEMBER. That is all right.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I am opposed to that. That would not necessarily apply to those plants that had been commandeered by the Government; not at all.

Mr. BLACK. It could not mean anything else.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. It does not mean— Mr. BLACK. I dispute the gentleman's construction absolutely, and I contend that it only applies to Government work, and that the bill very clearly shows that fact.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas

has expired.

Mr. SIMS. I would like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee in regard to paragraph (c), on page 5, where it says:

That no person shall, directly or indirectly, induce any person employed in any factory and engaged on work for the United States to leave his employment or to cease such work.

Mr. PADGETT. That has been amended by inserting in line 1 the words "with intent to hinder and delay the Government work."

Mr. SIMS. I want to know the reason why this was put in. Perhaps the enemies of the United States might get in there and undertake to delay the work in opposition to the policy of the United States in regard to any military undertaking?

Mr. PADGETT. Certainly. It is to prevent conspiracies and efforts to undermine and deter Government enterprise. It is no thrust at labor and was not intended as such.

Mr. SIMS. It is to frustrate the intent of spies and conspirators of the enemy in case we should be engaged in war or in an emergency?
Mr. PADGETT. That is the main purpose of it.

Mr. SIMS. What is the purpose that is not the main pur-

Mr. PADGETT. It would prevent anyone going in there with an intent to delay Government work and induce men to quit.

It would prevent any citizen from attempting to do that.

Mr. SIMS. Suppose you are a private contractor and have Government work, and I am a private contractor and am doing work for a private individual. I may say to your employees, "I will give you better prices if you will work for me." Would that make me a criminal under this statute?

Mr. HOWARD. It would.

Mr. SIMS. I am opposed to that, if it would.

Mr. HOWARD. Will the gentleman yield to me for a second?

Mr. SIMS. Yes. Mr. HOWARD. I will say to the gentleman that if he will read that provision containing the words "directly or indirectly" he will see that the gentleman has stated a concrete, hypothetical case; that if a man went into one of these factories and offered a man a higher wage, thereby inducing him to leave the employment of that private factory he would come under that provision and go to the penitentiary; both the man that offers and the man who accepts the inducement.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, let us have a vote on this and go ahead.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I would like to say a word upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that this debate is proceeding by unanimous consent.

Mr. KITCHIN. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee a question. Mr. PADGETT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Do you understand by your bill that paragraph (c) applies only in case of war, when the President issues a proclamation to the effect that an actual emergency exists?

Mr. PADGETT. It does. We took the words from the preceding paragraph.

Mr. KITCHIN. I overlooked that,

It was adopted here a while ago. It is the Mr. PADGETT. same language that appears on page 3. We inserted the words "in time of war or national emergency arising prior to March 1, 1918, to be determined by the President by proclamation as aforesaid." Right in there between the word "that" "therefor."

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes. Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. It says there, "in time of war or national emergency, declared by proclamation or Executive order of the President" order of the President.

Mr. PADGETT, No. It says "by proclamation." The "Executive order" was cut out.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Suppose he proclaims a strike a national emergency—an industrial strike?

Mr. PADGETT. I do not think that is a supposable case.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman a question: On page 3, at the end of line 14, the language "and within the limit of amount appropriated there-' is stricken out, is it not?

Mr. PADGETT. It is stricken out after line 14, page 3, and inserted in the other paragraph.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I understand, Mr. Chairman; and I think the point raised by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Howard] is well taken. If gentlemen will return to page 3, line 10, they will find this general provision: "That in time of war, or of national emergency, arising prior to March 1, 1918, to be determined by the President by proclamation, the President is hereby authorized and empowered, in addition to all other existing provisions of law," and so forth; and then comes "first," "second," "third," "fourth," and "fifth"—five separate things up to that point which he is empowered to do. Under "fifth" the President is authorized, when there is war, or when he thinks there is a national emergency, "to waive all provisions of law restricting the hours of labor of persons in the employ of the United States or of persons in the employ of contractors therewith "-that is, with the United Statesemployed on work in connection with such ships or materials.'

Mr. PADGETT. Now, does the gentleman object to that? That is not as broad as the existing law. If you want to strike it out and go back to existing law, very well.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Wait a moment. Then follows this proviso: "Provided, That wages of Government employees shall be computed on a basic day at the rate of eight hours, with overtime rates to be paid for at not less than time and one-half for all hours worked in excess of eight hours."

Mr. PADGETT. That is not as broad as the law exists now.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Let me finish, please. There is a discrimination here against employees of contractors. Because under this provision the President of the United States, in time of war or public emergency, to be determined by him, can also waive the eight-hour provision as to employees of contractors who are doing work for the United States

Mr. PADGETT. You can do it now—— Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. But without any increase of pay for overtime for them.

Mr. PADGETT. He can do it now under the law. The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Howard].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. PADGETT. A division, Mr. Chairman, The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 59, noes 21.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the Clerk be authorized to renumber and redesignate the paragraphs. As section (c) goes out, it will be necessary to make those changes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the Clerk be authorized to redesignate and renumber the paragraphs. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PADGETT. And I ask unanimous consent, in line 19, on page 5, to strike out the letter "(c)."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to strike out the letter "(c)" in line 19, page 5, Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. Keating: Page 5, line 10, after the word "of," strike out the words "Government employees" and insert "all employees affected by this paragraph."

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, this section provides that the President of the United States may waive all provisions of law restricting the hours of labor of persons in the employ of the United States.

Mr. PADGETT. Will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. KEATING.

Mr. PADGETT. To expedite matters I will say that I have no objection to the gentleman's amendment. It was in the original provision which I had contemplated offering, and I have no objection to it

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, may we have the amendment reported again?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the Clerk will again report the amendment.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUTLER. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado has the floor. Does he yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. KEATING. I yield to the gentleman. Mr. BUTLER. Is that as we had it originally?

Mr. KEATING. I think so. Mr. BUTLER. Have you not amended it along the line that we agreed upon at first?

Mr. KEATING. It is perfectly satisfactory to the chairman of the committee.

Mr. PADGETT. It had no express provision in it. We did not say anything about labor, but all of the shipbuilders who appeared before us stated that they would be glad of the opportunity to get the extra time and to pay for it at the excess rate.

Mr. LENROOT. If the gentleman's amendment prevails, do I understand that the law will then in express terms require private contractors to pay time and a half for overtime?

Mr. KEATING. If they are working on Government work and the restrictions are waived.

Mr. LENROOT. Now, I want to ask the gentleman whether he thinks Congress has any power to impose any such pro-

Mr. KEATING. I think the Congress has the right to specify that before the President shall waive those restrictions

Mr. LENROOT. Yes; but the gentleman does not do that.
Mr. KEATING. That will be the practical effect of it.
Mr. LENROOT. No. Does the gentleman think that with the language as he now has it, not being made contingent, as a condition of the raising of the restriction, it is within the power of Congress to require a private contractor, where we do not take over the plant, where no power is exercised under this bill with reference to that shop, to prescribe the rates of compensation that that private contractor shall pay to his employees?

Mr. KEATING. That is a very nice legal question.

Mr. LENROOT. Does the gentleman think it is a question at all, as a lawyer

Mr. KEATING. Being a newspaper man, perhaps my answer would not have any particular value. But here is one point upon which I am clear: This provision should be so worded that these restrictions will not be waived unless the contractor agrees to treat the men as the Government treats them. That is the object of this amendment.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEATING. Yes. Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Is it not a fact that at this time we have such a proposition in the Supreme Court?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes; but the question there, if I may be allowed to say so, is an entirely different question, involving a different legal principle.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Colorado

has expired.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I doubt whether this is a good proposition. I have always doubted the advisability of legislative enactment in fixing the wages of employees engaged in private employment. I will vote for any amendment that will help the workingmen and that will stop them from being drafted into the service, as provided in this provision we acted upon a few moments ago; if the call comes to join the colors the workingmen of our country will respond without waiting to be drafted into service; but I doubt the advisability, and I do not think the workingmen of this country are ready to have their wages fixed at this time by legislative enactment.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. COOPER of Ohio. In a moment. I am afraid that this amendment of the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. Keating] will provide that the Government shall have the power to fix the wages of private employees. I now yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. GORDON. The gentleman voted for the eight-hour law last fall?

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. I will answer the gentleman by saying yes; that I, with a great many other Republicans, voted for the eight-hour law, not because we thought it was such a good measure, but because the President of the United States forced the same upon Congress after he had injected himself into the controversy between the railroad employees and their employers. I doubt very much if there would have been any railroad strike if the President had kept his hands off this affair, but after he mixed into it a strike was called, and there was only one way to stop the same, and that was to pass the Adamson bill.

Mr. GORDON. Forced the Republicans to vote for it!

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. I will ask the gentleman to wait until I reply to my colleague [Mr. Gordon]. I will say this, I believe that at this time the railroad employees of the United States realize that the President's interference last fall in the controversy between the employers and the employees was not the best piece of legislation that has ever come to the railroad employees in this country.

Mr. GORDON. The gentleman made a mistake in his vote, then.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Yes. Mr. KEATING. In the first part of this section it provides that the President may waive the restrictions concerning the eight-hour day. Does not the gentleman think if he is permitted to waive those restrictions that the men should be compensated for the overtime?

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. I do; and I will say that I believe the intentions of the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. Keating] are well, and that he desires to help the workingmen out with his amendment, but as I said, I doubt the advisability of Congress fixing the wages of employees in private employment, for when that is once started no one knows what the ultimate result may be.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. Keating].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Keating) there were—ayes 14, noes 31.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, in order to make this comply with the penalties of the other section, I move, in line 22, page 5, to strike out "$10,000" and insert "$50,000," and, in the same line, to strike out the word "two" and insert the word "three," so that it will read that imprisonment is provided for not more than three years.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Page 5, line 22, strike out "$10,000" and insert "$50,000," and, in the same line, strike out the word "two" and insert the word three."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, since we have stricken out subdivision (c), will the gentleman consent to strike out "(c)," in line 19, of the same page?

Mr. PADGETT. That has already been stricken out.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, the House having decided not to amend this so as to grant the men who are working for private contractors the extra pay for work over eight hours, I wish to move to strike out, on page 5, all of lines 8 and 9, and the word " material " on page 10.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on page 5, by striking out all of lines 8 and 9 and the word material," in line 10.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, that would leave the provision reading as follows:

Fifth. To waive all provisions of law restricting the hours of labor of persons in the employ of the United States: Provided, That wages of Government employees shall be computed on a basic day rate of eight hours' work, with overtime rates to be paid for at not less than time and one-half for all hours worked in excess of eight hours.

My contention is this, that if the Government waives the legal restrictions concerning the workday of the men engaged on Government work, then all men who are taken out from under the law should be given compensation for overtime, and that if we are not to extend that compensation to all men affected by this waiver, then we should restrict the waiver. am perfectly willing that the waiver shall stand as broad as it is now; but I contend, in justice to the workingmen, that if you make the waiver so broad that it will cover the workingmen who are employed by private manufacturers, then you should insist that those men shall receive time and a half, just as the Government employees will receive time and a half under this provision.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, to agree to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Colorado would completely emasculate the bill, and there would be no expedition in the construction of ships. That is striking at the very heart of this provision, and it would be better that the whole provision go out than to agree to this amendment,

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman from Tennessee if it is not now the law that any contractor with the Government of the United States to build a ship is bound by the eight-hour law?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir.
Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Now, this amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee authorizes the President to waive the eight-hour provision so far as the Government itself is concerned and its employees.

Mr. PADGETT. And the contractors.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. And the contractors.

Mr. PADGETT. The eight-hour law allows him to do that both as to contractors and as to Government work.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes; and the gross unfairness of the thing is this, that the proviso gives to the employees of the Government time and a half per hour when they work 16, 18, or 20 hours a day, but the private contractor can work them 16, 18, or 20 hours a day with no time and a half provision, and it is an outrageous discrimination.

Mr. PADGETT. They do not have to work unless they want The private shipbuilders, all of them, said before in the hearings that they would be glad of the opportunity to pay time and a half to get the work done.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. If that is so the gentleman ought to consent-

Mr. PADGETT. The Government has no authority, and the gentleman from Ohio here representing labor appealed to the House not to insert the provision with reference to private contractors, because he said it might be construed as extending the authority of the Government to fix contracts.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Allow me to answer the gentleman right there on that point-

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out section 5 entirely

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin has the floor.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. In a moment. The Government of the United States has already provided that a contractor with the Government shall be bound by the provisions of the eight-hour law.

Mr. PADGETT. I have said that several times.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Exactly. Now, then, the appropriations we are making for the new ships—none of those ships have been contracted for?

Mr. PADGETT. A great many of them have been contracted for. There are 7 which have not been contracted for and 60 which have.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Well, but there are a great many we have not.

Mr. PADGETT. Seven; four battle cruisers and three scout cruisers

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. If we should insert in this law that any private contractor contracting with the Government of the United States where the provisions of the eight-hour law are waived shall pay time and a half overtime that would be put into his contract; otherwise he could not get the contract.

Mr. PADGETT. There is no trouble about that; they are anxious to pay them.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. And there would be nothing wrong for us to put that in the law, because it would apply only to the new contracts not yet made and it would be a perfectly lawful stipulation.

Mr. PADGETT. We ought not to limit the power of the President; we are limiting him too much as it is.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I would like to say to the chairman of the committee I have no authority to represent organized labor here on this floor

Mr. PADGETT. I understand it.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. I support the amendment offered by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. Keating], because I believe as long as the Government has no power to fix wages it ought not to have the power to fix the hours of service.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman from Tennessee turn to page 4, second provision, and he will see that the President is authorized to modify or cancel any existing contract for the building, production, or purchase of ships of war.

Mr. PADGETT. In order to expedite them, certainly he has. Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. If he can modify a contract, could not be modify it to that extent? Mr. PADGETT. If he could get the other men to agree to it, he could; and if they do not agree to do it, then the alternative is to take over the ships. The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Chairman, I never have been able to see any value whatever in this section in the bill. It is simply a declaration of existing law, so far as the right of the President to suspend the eight-hour provision or any other provision restricting the hours of labor is concerned. That being the case, it seems to me that the easiest way out of the matter is to strike the paragraph out altogether. This will let the law stand, which gives the President full power in time of war or national emergency to suspend the provisions referred to in this section. We are only multiplying words and multiplying laws, and we may just as well strike the section out.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. KELLEY. I will.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think the gentleman is a little broad in his statement.

Mr. KELLEY. No; I think not. I have considered the matter

Mr. STAFFORD. I have here the law restricting the hours of labor of those employed in Government work, and the only limitation is that it can only be suspended in case of extraordinary emergency, not upon any proclamation of the President.

Mr. KELLEY. The President can not, except in cases of war or great emergency, make any proclamation under this bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. The law would grant the exemption of limitation in cases of extraordinary emergency.

Mr. KELLEY. The transfer of the law to t

Mr. KELLEY. Just so, under the law as it stands now. Under existing law the President has power to suspend all labor restrictions in case of emergency or war. Now, that is all this section does, and I never could see any reason for its being in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. Keating].

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment which I offer. I do not think we are so very far apart, and I think I can offer an amendment which will satisfy everyone concerned.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr KEATING. Now, Mr. Chairman, on page 5, at the end of line 3, add the following, which I will read, because I question if the Clerk could read the handwriting:

Provided further, That the President shall make no such waiver as to contractors with the Government unless such contractors shall agree to pay for all time in excess of eight hours at a rate not less than time and a half for all hours work in excess of eight hours.

That means simply that the President shall not waive the eight-hour law as it affects the contractors unless the contractors agree to do what the Government is directed to do in this billpay time and a half for overtime.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman send his amendment to the desk so that the Clerk can report it?

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. Keating: At the end of line 13, on page 5, insert Amendment by Mr. Reating: At the end of the 10, on page of the following:

"Provided further, That the President shall make no such waiver as to contractors with the Government unless such contractors shall agree to pay for all time in excess of eight hours at a rate not less than time and a half for all hours work in excess of eight hours."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amend-

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Division, Mr. Chairman. The committee divided; and there were—ayes 34, noes 22,

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph including line 6 to line 13, on page 5.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan offers an amendment to strike out the paragraph included in line 6 to line 13, on page 5. Is there objection?

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had disagreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 18453) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes. for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, had insisted upon its amendments Nos. 80, 95, and 111, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and had appointed Mr. Ashurst, Mr. Myers, and Mr. Clapp as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session. The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. Leneoot: On page 5, after line 3, add: "That all authority granted to the President in this paragraph to be exercised in time of national emergency shall cease on March 1, 1918."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Lenroot] desire recognition?

Mr. LENROOT. This is to meet the point raised by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] that I think was well taken, to the effect that unless this be adopted the authority might extend beyond March 1, 1918; and this will make it plain.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, may I get the attention of the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to correct my amendment. The sixth paragraph having been stricken out, it should be offered at the end of line 5, page 5.

The CHAIRMAN. Is these objection? [After a pause.]

Chair hears none.

Mr. MANN. Why do not you put it at the end of line 15, page 3? That is where it belongs.

Mr. LENROOT. The only reason I did not do so was because of the grammatical construction.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I believe that the committee has

Mr. MANN. Air. Chairman, I beneve that the committee has changed paragraphs (d) and (c), on page 5.

Mr. PADGETT. All of those have been changed.

Mr. MANN. I think the letter (d) wants to be stricken out and the letter (c) ought to stay in. In other words, to change (c) to (d). So (d) wants to go out, (c) remain in.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous concent that the letter (d) in line 2 page 2 he stricken mous consent that the letter (d), in line 2, page 2, be stricken from the bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Padgerr] give me his attention?

Inasmuch as I was present when this bill was prepared, and I voted for it, and I feel it incumbent on me to remain here while the bill is being considered, I would like to ask the gentleman if seven hours a day in this kind of atmosphere is not

Mr. PADGETT. I think we have about completed this with the vote on this amendment. I think there are no further amendments. If we take the vote on it I will move to rise.

Mr. BUTLER. That is all right.
The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee, as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Page of North Carolina, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had been seen as ported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 20632) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. SWITZER, by unanimous consent, was granted permission, without leaving copies, to withdraw from the files of the House the papers in the case of John Henson, no adverse report having been made thereon.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by incorporating in them an address made by the Secretary of State before the alumni of Amherst College on Saturday night.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the manner indicated.

Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PATENTS TO CERTAIN INDIANS, STATE OF WASHINGTON.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas, by direction of the Committee on Indian Affairs, submitted for printing, under the rule, the conference report on the bill (H. R. 8092) confirming patents heretofore issued to certain Indians in the State of Washington.

The conference report and accompanying statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (No. 1454).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8092) confirming patents heretofore issued to certain Indians in the State of Washington, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1 and 2, and agree to the same.

JNO. H. STEPHENS, C. D. CARTER, Managers on the part of the House. KEY PITTMAN, Moses E. Clapp, HARRY LANE. Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT.

The Senate having receded on both of its amendments, the bill remains the same as when it passed the House.

JNO. H. STEPHENS, C. D. CARTER.

AMENDMENT OF THE GENERAL DAM ACT.

Mr. ADAMSON, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign regulate the construction of dams across navigable waters," approved June 21, 1906, as amended by the act approved June 23, 1910, and to provide for the improvement and development of waterways for the uses of interstate and foreign commerce.

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW-11 O'CLOCK

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock a. m. to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow morning. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the naval appropriation bill. The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record on the naval appropriation bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

JOHN B. BUCK.

Mr. OAKEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes, to give the House notice of the death of an ex-Member.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. OAKEY. Mr. Speaker, on the 6th day of this month the Hon. John R. Buck, of Hartford, Conn., passed to the "great majority.'

Mr. Buck was a Member of the Forty-seventh and Fortyninth Congresses, a man greatly beloved and respected in the State which I have the honor in part to represent; a distinguished member of the great profession of the law; a kindly, genial man; a lovable neighbor, a delightful friend; a friend of the great McKinley, a companion of the brilliant Harrison; a credit to his profession, a credit to the city that he loved, a credit to the State and the country to which he gave much of his valued service. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. COLEMAN rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Pennsylvania rise?

Mr. COLEMAN. To ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record on the subject of Lincoln and Gettysburg.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on the subject of Lincoln and Gettysburg. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

KECESS.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House stand in recess until 7.30 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foster] to preside to-night. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] asks unanimous consent that the House stand in recess until 7.30 to-night. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Accordingly (at.5 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the House stood in recess until 7.30 p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House (at 7 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) resumed its session, and was called to order by Mr. FOSTER as Speaker pro tempore.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will call the first bill on the Private Calendar.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that these bills be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that these bills be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

JOHN MINAHAN, ALIAS JOHN BAGLEY.

Mr. KINKAID. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to make a brief explanation about a bill I have here, which failed to receive consideration in the last Congress because the first Commerce, submitted for printing, under the rule, the conference evening, when private bills were considered, we began in the report on the bill (S. 3331) to amend an act entitled "An act to middle of the calendar, two bills beyond my bill, and the next time commenced at the beginning and did not reach it. The other evening, when private bills were considered here last week, we began just two bills beyond my bill, on the assumption that my bill had had an opportunity to be heard at the last session, but it had not. It was reported after the two evenings when we considered private bills at the last session. Now we are beginning at the first of the calendar and my bill is at the last, just two bills ahead of where we began last week. Therefore, as it has come over from the former Congress and never had its inning, I ask unanimous consent that it be considered

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the order fixing this evening for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar it was agreed to begin at the first of the calendar.

Mr. KINKAID. I ask unanimous consent for immediate con-

Mr. MANN. We can do so by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the gentleman desires to ask unanimous consent that this bill be taken up now, the Chair will put the request

Mr. KINKAID. That is my request.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. What is the number of the bill?

Mr. KINKAID. The bill is No. 439 on the Private Calendar,

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent that No. 439 on the Private Calendar be taken up before we begin with the first of the calendar. Is there objection?

Mr. COX. Let the bill be reported, Mr. Speaker.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report it.
The bill (H. R. 1764) for the relief of John Minahan, allas John-Bagley, was read as follows:

Be it enacted etc., That in the administration of the pension laws John Minahan, alias John Bagley, late a private in Company K, Eighth Regiment New Hampshire Volunteers, be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a private in said company and regiment on the 24th day of August, 1864: Provided, That no back pay, back pension, back allowances, or emoluments shall accrue by reason of the passage of this act.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent that before beginning the call of the calendar at the first number this bill be called. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the first bill on the Private Calendar.

THOMAS SMART.

Mr. OAKEY. Mr. Speaker, I am in somewhat the same ferryboat as the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. Kinkaid], and while I do not want to try to get in ahead of anybody else, I am a little afraid that my bill will not be reached to-night. It is No. 412 on the Private Calendar, and is a bill that I think no one has any objection to. A neighbor and friend of mine wants his military record corrected, and I ask unanimous consent that that bill be considered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent that before beginning the calendar the bill No. 412 on this calendar be first considered. Is there objection?

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Reserving the right to object, I want to say that I am not going to object, but I want to serve notice that hereafter I shall object. I think it is rather putting it over some of these other gentlemen.

Mr. OAKEY. I am afraid it is, a little; but I doubted whether my bill would be reached.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill (S. 1361) for the relief of Thomas Smart was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, or benefits upon honorably discharged soldlers, Thomas Smart, late of Company B, Eighth Regiment Connecticut Volunteer Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been present with his company and regiment from the 27th day of February, 1864, to May 27, 1864: Provided, That other than as above set forth no pay, bounty, or other emolument shall accrue by reason of the passage of this act.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill?

There was no objection. Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman if he thinks this bill will do any good?

Mr. OAKEY. I think so. It was unanimously passed by the Senate.

Mr. MANN. I doubt whether it will accomplish any purpose, but I do not object.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

CERTAIN CIVILIAN EMPLOYEES OF THE ENGINEER DEPARTMENT.

The first business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5079) for the relief of certain civilian employees of the Engineer Department at Large, United States Army.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. I object.

OSCAR FROMMEL & BRO.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2241) for the relief of Oscar Frommel & Bro.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

DOMMICK TAHENY AND JOHN W. MORTIMER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6167) for the relief of Dommick Taheny and John W. Mortimer.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?
Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

GEORGE T. LARKIN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 947) for the relief of George T. Larkin.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

CHARLES JOHNSON AND KATE JOHNSON.

8426) for the relief of E. A. Swift. The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

GEORGE T. HAMILTON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8310) for the relief of George T. Hamilton.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

LENA GARAGNON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R.

2540) for the relief of Lena Garagnon.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

ETHEL FREDERICKSON AND DAUGHTER ETHEL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2538) for the relief of Ethel Fredrickson and daughter Ethel. The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

JOHN B. BOSTICK.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9946) waiving the age limit for admission to the Medical Corps of the United States Navy in the case of John B. Bostick.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. I object.

CLARA KANE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6406) granting the sum of $480 to Clara Kane, dependent parent, by reason of the death of William A. Yenser, late civil employee, killed as a result of an accident at Philadelphia Navy Yard.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?
Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I object.
Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman withhold his objection or is he going to insist on it?

Mr. COX. I am going to insist.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then I will not take up the time of the House further.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana objects.

MISSION FARM CO.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 10869) for the relief of the Mission Farm Co., Peter Volondra, and others.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is herby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the following named corporation and persons the respective amounts, as follows: The Mission Farm Co., $1.835; Peter Volondra, $187.50; M. E. Robertson, $62.50; E. Bead, $187.50; James V. Satra, $75; Cash Rogers, $255; Ed Neiness, $87.50; Jacob Hempel, $22.50: Isaiah Davis, $187.50; Alvin Hoffman, $50; Louis Bordeaux, $1,385; Charley Pavlik, $50: George W. Coleman, $755; W. S. Hatten, $200; Frank Rothleutner and George W. Coleman, $750; Hugh Coleman, $54.50; and Charles Kolkofen, $62.50, for damages caused to each of said parties by a certain fire set by the carelessness of the employees of the Government in the regular line of their duty and as incident thereto in the Indian Service on the Rosebud Indian Reservation, in South Dakota, and across the State line in Nebraska, on the 20 day of October, 1909.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to authorize the payment of certain amounts for damages sustained by prairie fire on the Rosebud Indian Reservation, in South Dakota." FREDERICK CITY, MD.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4751) to refund to the corporate authorities of Frederick City, Md., the sum of $200,000, exacted from them by the Confederate Army under Gen. Jubal Early, July 9, 1864, under penalty of burning said city.

The Clerk read the title of the bill,

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I object,

MARYLAND TRUST CO., OF BALTIMORE.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6629) for the relief of the Maryland Trust Co., of Baltimore, Md.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this proposes to refund a certain amount of money that was collected, the claim not being presented until more than two years had passed, and it was too late for the department to allow it. Apparently the bill was not referred to the Treasury Department. There is no report on the bill from the Treasury Depart-It creates a precedent under which the Government would have to pay out hundreds of thousands of dollars, and I think we ought to be careful about passing it. Was the bill referred to the Treasury Department?

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Judging from the report, it was not. I notice the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. Price] reported it. There is a letter here—

Mr. MANN. I have read the letter from the Maryland Trust Co., but that is not a report upon this bill.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. I understand.

Mr. MANN. If they made a report on the bill, they would probably make a report with reference to similar claims.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. I will say very frankly, Mr. Speaker, it would establish a precedent in other matters of this character.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, for the present I object.

FRANK MOGRIDGE.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8089) for the relief of Frank Mogridge.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

JACOB F. WEIDNER.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8090) for the relief of Jacob F. Weidner.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

EUGENE A. FREUND AND ALFRED F. ROEMMICH.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4319) for the relief of Eugene A. Freund and Alfred F. Roemmich.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

WILLIAM S. ROTE.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7182) for the relief of William S. Rote.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object,

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1443) for the relief of Joe T. White.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

JAMES BOOKHAMER.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

D. M. CARMAN.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1425) for the relief of D. M. Carman, representing the estate of Luis R. Yangco, deceased.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

E. W. ROHMELING.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7504) for the relief of E. W. Rohmeling.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman withhold his objection? Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. WALSH. This is a bill to compensate an employee of the Fisheries Bureau who lost some personal effects and money by a fire which took place upon one of the steamers of the bureau, and it seems to me that reimbursement of this loss is in line with the policy of the Government which provides rewards for employees of the Government or others when they restore property that has been lost through carelessness or accident in various departments of the Government.

This man by his prompt action and at some risk saved property to the value of several thousand dollars to the Government, and I trust the gentleman will not press his objection, but will allow a claim that has as much justness in it as this to be passed upon and approved.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, there are a good many of these claims-quite a number of them on the calendar. It is not possible for the Government of the United States to insure the personal effects of an employee on board ship or elsewhere. It is possible for the employee to insure them, and I do not think the Government should attempt to assure an employee that if he loses his personal effects the Government will pay the bill. That is not the practice, therefore I am bound to object.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman make any distinction where the employee loses his effects in the ordinary course of events and the case where he loses them while he is performing what we might call an heroic deed, where, without consideration for himself or his property, he goes to his post of duty and as a result of that saves a vessel worth several thousands of dollars? Now, the other members of the crew were able to save their effects, but this man went immediately to the fire pumps. With two or three minutes delay he could have saved his property, but he gave that matter no thought. He went immediately to the fire pumps and put them in operation, and as a result of that saved the steamer and lost his money and personal effects.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the man performed a very meritorious service, and the memory of that ought to be a great comfort to him without expecting the Government to pay for it. There would not be any merit in it if he asked the Government to do so. I object.

HENRY S. ROYCE.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1622) for the relief of Henry S. Royce. The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD and Mr. MANN objected.

CLAIMS AGAINST CHOCTAW AND CHICKASAW NATIONS.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 10555) referring certain claims against the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations of Indians to the Court of Claims.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. I object.

STUART, LEWIS, GORDON & RUTHERFORD.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 10872) making an appropriation to Stuart, Lewis, Gordon & Rutherford, in payment of legal services rendered by them to the Creek Nation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Let the bill be reported.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill. The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Stuart, Lewis, Gorden & Rutherford, out of any funds in the Treasury of the United States belonging to the Creek Nation, the sum of $7,000, together with interest thereon at the rate of 5 per cent per annum from October 18, 1900, to date of payment, being in full settlement of the claim of the said Stuart, Lewis, Gordon & Rutherford against the said Creek Nation for legal services rendered the said Creek Nation employed by authority of an act of the national council of the Creek Nation, approved January 7, 1898, the said sum of $7,000 having been appropriated in payment of said services by an act of the national council of the Creek Nation, approved October 18, 1900.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, we had quite a discussion about this bill before. It was disapproved at one time by President McKinley. It may have been an error. I notice the bill provides for the payment of $7,000, together with is for demurrage. It may be that the Government ought to interest thereon. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Has-TINGS], I think, will recall that where there is no contract the Government does not undertake to pay interest.

Mr. HASTINGS. I am willing the amendment should be made to cut out the interest, in line 7, after "$7,000," the words "together with interest thereon at the rate of 5 per cent per annum from October 18, 1900, to date of payment." That would eliminate that feature.

Mr. MANN. Very well. I do not object. The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chairs hears none.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment. The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Oklahoma offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Hastings: Page 1, line 7, after the figures "$7,000," strike out "together with interest thereon at the rate of 5 per cent per annum from October 18, 1900, to date of payment."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 14570) for the relief of Cathrine Grace.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects. The Clerk will report the next one.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 13636) for the relief of R. L. Jennings.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, this bill is improperly on the Calendar. It never has been reported. It is a mistake on the part of somebody. The resolution was reported to refer this bill to the Court of Claims. I have a notation on the bill that the resolution has been passed. The bill never was reported. The report

HUDSON BROS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3253) for the relief of Hudson Bros., of Norfolk, Va.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Let the bill be reported, Mr. Speaker. The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to pay to Hudson Bros., of Norfolk, Va., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $620.60 for damages sustained by said Hudson Bros. on account of a collision between the United States revenue cutter Apache and barge C. T. Roveland, owned by said Hudson Bros., the collision being caused by the fault in handling the United States revenue cutter Apache, as determined by court-martial in the case.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, $160 of the amount pay demurrage, but it is not the custom. If the gentleman wants to reduce it by $160 and make it $460.60, I will make

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Do I understand the gentleman will object unless the reduction is made?

Mr. MANN.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Then, Mr. Speaker, I move that in line six the figures "$620.60" be stricken out and the sum of "$460.66" be inserted.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my objection.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 6, amend by striking out "$620.60" and insert in lieu thereof "$460.66."

Mr. MANN. Make it $460.60. Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Very well. The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. The Hilton bill?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. We have not been informed, if it has. I have not seen anybody interested in the matter for quite a little while.

Mr. MANN. I think it was paid in the naval bill at the last session of Congress.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Then I ask that the bill be passed over until I can find out about it. I am not informed of Mr. MILLER of Delaware. I shall renew the request, because a lot of these bills have been gone over before and have been objected to, and we want to get along, if possible.

Mr. STAFFORD. We are getting along pretty well.

CATHERINE BURNS, WIDOW OF PATRICK BURNS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 11661) for the relief of Patrick Burns.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object Mr HASKELL Mr Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection for a moment?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the objection.

Mr. HASKELL. Mr. Speaker, Patrick Burns, an employee of the Government, as the result of an accident which happened on April 10, 1899, at the Brooklyn Navy Yard, lost a leg. The committee have reported and recommended in his favor an amount which he would have received under the workmen's compensation act. At that time the workmen's compensation act was not in force. Here is a man who lost his leg as the result of an accident which happened on April 10, 1899, while in the performance of his duty to the United States Government. I know that after the accident and the amputation of his leg his wife and himself spent practically all of their earnings to restore him to such health where he could live and halfway enjoy life, handicapped and crippled as he was. Other bills of this nature have passed. I remember in the last session of this Congress a similar case, where the committee, following this rule, reported a bill making a recommendation of allowance upon the basis of the amount which the man would have received had the workmen's compensation act been in effect, and it was unanimously passed here on the floor of the House. submit that as an act of justice in this case this allowance ought to be made.

Since this bill was pending, and on July 24, 1916, this man, afflicted as he was, died, and I dare say the widow who survives him, now advanced in years, will shortly follow in his path. I appeal here to-night that this bill is fair and meritorious and the Government owes it to this widow. The victim of the acci-dent is dead, and if Congress is to further postpone action, even the widow will be deprived of this modest amount. I sincerely hope that the gentleman under the circumstances will withdraw his objection and allow this act of justice to be done.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, we had a long controversy and took up a lot of time the other evening on a case where a man had

Mr. HASKELL. I shall be perfectly satisfied. Mr. MANN. I do not object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Patrick Burns, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,000, in full compensation for injuries received, resulting in the loss of his left leg through no fault of his own, while performing his duties as a joiner at the navy yard, Brooklyn, N. Y., on the 10th day of April, 1890.

With the following committee amendment:

Line 6, strike out "$2,000" and insert "$1,000."

Line 4, after the words "pay to," insert the words "Catherine Burns, widow of."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. May I ask the gentleman if this injury was the cause of this man's death?

Mr. HASKELL. I can not say positively as to that. He died in July, 1916, and the accident happened in 1899.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, on the last night we had under consideration the bills on the Private Calendar, attention was called to the fact by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. Browning] that on the afternoon of the day when we passed the bill appropriating $720 for the loss of a man's leg the Senate of the United States passed a bill making an appropriation of $2,500 for the loss of a man's arm.

I found on investigation that the case passed upon by the Senate was a House bill in the interest of a man by the name of Jennings; that the House Committee on Claims reported that bill favorably, carrying an appropriation of $2,500, and that the Senate passed the House bill after we had passed it. Now, I wish to direct an inquiry to the members of the Committee on Claims to give an explanation why in the Collins case they reported and passed a bill appropriating $2,500 for the loss of an arm, and in the case then under consideration, from New Jersey, the committee reported a bill, and we passed it, providing for an appropriation of $720? And now we are it, providing for an appropriation of $720? And now we are about to pass a bill making an appropriation of $1,000, having reduced it from $2,000 to $1,000, for the loss of a leg. In other words, why is there a scale or a difference; and if so, upon what measure of justice and equity does the committee fix this standard? That is what I would like to know, in the interest of fair play, and I yield for an explanation from any member of the Committee on Claims.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi Mr. Speaker in answer to

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, in answer to the gentleman, I will say that the committee has tried very hard to live up to the policy of allowing one year's salary where a party was injured. Now, of course, the gentleman knows very well that the salary of Government employees varies very largely. Some men get $500, some get $720 per annum, some $1,000, and some $2,500, and so on; and it may be in some cases we have gone a little beyond the year's salary. I think, owing to the peculiar circumstances in the case, once or twice we have gone beyond the one year's salary, but in the main we have held it down to an amount equal to one year's salary.

Mr. AUSTIN. Does the gentleman plead guilty to a statement that his committee fixed the valuation of $2,500 in the case passed by the Senate the other day; and if so, why was an exception made in that case; and if it were possible to go beyond a year's salary in one case, why is it not possible to do the same thing in other cases?

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. It is possible, of course, Mr. Speaker, to fix any amount we care to fix; but the gentleman should remember under the law these people are not entitled

Mr. AUSTIN. Why did the committee in the Jennings case make it $2,500?

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I have not the bill before me, and I do not know the facts-

Mr. AUSTIN. I will get it. Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. If the gentleman has read the evidence in the case he might think we are exactly right even in that matter.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read; "A bill for the relief of Catherine Burns, widow of Patrick Burns."

REIMBURSEMENT FOR CURRENCY DESTROYED BY FIRE.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4626) to reimburse the Farmers' Savings Bank, of Brandon, Iowa, for currency destroyed by fire.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,985 to the Farmers' Savings Bank, of Brandon, Iowa, to reimburse them for the above-named amount of lawful currency of the United States which was destroyed by fire at the time the Farmers' Savings Bank, of Brandon, Iowa, burned and the currency consumed.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Speaker, I would like to know from the author of this bill whether this property was insured and payment was received?

Mr. SWEET. The currency was not insured but the building in which the bank was located was insured, and also the fur-

Mr. CULLOP. There was no insurance against the destruction of the currency by fire?

Mr. SWEET. None whatever. Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question. The currency was in a safe that was guaranteed by the company to withstand fire, was it not?

Mr. SWEET. It was in a safe that was reported to be sufficient for a bank of that kind.

Mr. COX. The safe was bought of the Diebold Safe & Lock They sent their representative, Mr. E. Thompson, of Cedar Rapids, Iowa, to Brandon, who sold to the officers and directors of the bank a manganese-steel safe with automatic locks and all modern appliances, representing to the officers and di-rectors that this safe was absolutely fireproof under conditions that might arise in the frame building in which it was to be placed. Now, does the gentleman know whether or not this corporation or company ever undertook in any way to hold this Diebc'd Safe & Lock Co. responsible for it?

Mr. SWEET. No; not upon the oral representations as

Mr. COX. Was it an oral representation or a written agreement, does the gentleman know?

Mr. SWEET. There was no written agreement. It was merely a statement made by an agent of the company or one representing the company at the time.

Mr. COX. There is no written guaranty to the bank that this safe would withstand fire?

Mr. SWEE" There was not.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

SIMON M. PRESTON.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1288) for the relief of Simon M. Preston.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

MRS. W. E. CRAWFORD.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9335) for the relief of Mrs. W. E. Crawford.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?
Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.
Mr. ALMON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman reserve the right to object?

Mr. MANN. I will reserve the right to object.

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill to pay $140.40 earned by Mrs. Crawford as temporary substitute carrier for the delivery of parcel post at Decatur, Ala.

The Post Office Department admits that the service was rendered and that it has not been paid for. The payment was diclined for the reason, it was said, that there were some eligibles on the civil-service register and that the postmaster was The report of the Committee on Claims was to the effect that the postmaster himself even did not have the notice to discontinue the services of Mrs. Crawford, and there is absolutely no contention that the woman who did the work had any notice that there was an eligible list or that her services were not desired. It was a case where there was simply a quibble over the payment, on account of the civil-service registry.

Mr. Mann. Mr. Speaker, this is a plain violation of the civil-service law and a willful violation, I think, by the postmaster. I do not know that the woman was to blame. I do not think it creates any precedent to amount to anything, and it is only a small amount, and therefore I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, to Mrs. W. E. Crawford the sum of $140.40 in full compensation for services rendered as auxiliary carrier of mails at Decatur, Ala., from February 28, 1914, to June 28, 1914.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

RHODA MENZ, W. W. CHRISTMAS, AND JAMES M. CHRISTMAS.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill H. R. 10624, a bill to appropriate a sum of money to Rhoda Menz, W. W. Christmas, and James M. Christmas, heirs of Myra Clarke Gaines, for certain lands in Louisiana.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? Mr. MANN. I object. It is not a very good time for Christmas presents.

AMENDMENT TO ACTS OF . 1909.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 13674) to amend section 11 of chapter 308 of the acts

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? Mr. MANN. I object.

DUNCAN GRANT RICHART.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7111) to authorize the appointment of Duncan Grant Richart to the grade of lieutenant in the Army.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

CLAIMS OF IOWA TRIBE OF INDIANS.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 4253) conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and report to Congress on claims of the Iowa Tribe of Indians against the United States.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, if I recollect correctly, under the Judicial Code the committee by a simple little committee resolution can send this matter to the Court of Claims. I do not know why they do not. I do not see any cause for the legislation, especially on the terms named in the bill. Therefore, I object.

CLAIMS OF SHAWNEE INDIANS.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1098) to adjust and settle the claims of the loyal Shawnee and loyal Absentee Shawnee Tribe of Indians, and to report the same to Congress.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

CLAIMS OF PONCA TRIBE OF INDIANS.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1094) conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear and determine and report to Congress on claims of the Ponca Tribe of Indians against the United States.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

COWLITZ TRIBE OF INDIANS.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 2458) authorizing the Cowlitz Tribe of Indians residing in the State of Washington to submit claims to the Court of Claims.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? Mr. MANN. I object.

FRANCESCA G. MONTELL.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 14046) for the relief of Mrs. Francesca G. Montell. The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

JOSEPH C. AKIN.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2743) for the relief of the widow of Joseph C. Akin, The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay Mrs. Joseph C. Akin, of Dolores, Montezuma County, Colo., widow of Joseph C. Akin, who, while in the discharge of his duty as a deputy United States marshal, was killed by a band of renegade Ute Indians while he was attempting to arrest one Tse-Ne-Gat, a Ute Indian charged with murder, on the 21st day of February. 1915, the sum of $5,000, on account of the murder of her said husband while in the regular discharge of his duties in the service of the Government of the United States.

Also the following committee amendment was read:

Page 1, line 4, after the word "pay," insert the words "out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, when this bill was called before I objected to it because the report did not show that Joseph C. Akin was, in fact, a deputy marshal or, for that matter, did not show that he was killed, although that is the statement in the bill. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. Taylor] stated to me the other day that he had investigated the matter and had a statement from the Attorney General.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I have very full proof here from the Department of Justice, and also from the United States marshal, and I will place them in the RECORD at this point:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE, Washington, D. C., August 17, 1916.

Hon. EDWARD T. TAYLOR,

House of Representatives,

Washington, D. C.

My Dear Sir: In accordance with your request, the Department wired the United States marshal for Utah in reference to Joseph C. Akin, deceased, and received, August 16, the following telegraphic replacements.

Akin, deceased, and received, August 16, the following telegraphic reply:

"Joseph C. Akin was duly appointed by me as posseman February 16, 1915; was killed while acting in discharge of his duties as such posseman February 21."

In addition, I may state that the files of this department show that Joseph C. Akin was appointed posseman by the United States marshal for Utah upon due authority given by the department, and that Thomas H. Akin, administrator of said Akin's estate, was duly paid for services performed by Akin as posseman, payment being made under Revised Statutes, section 846, and duly approved by the President. There is also on file with the department a certified copy of the appointment of Thomas H. Akin as said administrator by the county court for the county of Montezuma, Colo., reciting that Akin died intestate on or about February 21, 1915.

Respectfully,
For the Attorney General:

Charles Warren,

CHARLES WARREN, Assistant Attorney General.

Mr. AUSTIN. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes.

Mr. AUSTIN. What is the annual salary of the deputy mar-

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. It is $3 a day.

Mr. AUSTIN. That is $900 a year. Why is an exception made in this case?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. It is more than $900 a year. Mr. AUSTIN. I thought the bill read "$5,000."

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. There is a committee amendment reducing it to one year's salary, namely, $1,095.

Mr. AUSTIN. In this connection I wish to state that I hold in my hand a copy of a bill, H. R. 6732, an act for the relief of Joseph A. Jennings, appropriating $2,500. It passed the House of Representatives on March 3, 1916, and passed the Senate last week for the same amount.

Mr. Jennings was a painter in the Government navy yard in Washington and was paid $3.04 a day, which is equivalent to $951.51 per annum.

I heard the statement made the other night in answer to my criticism that if we increased any of these amounts over and above the annual salary of one of these Government employees the Senate would not pass it. I wish to call attention to the fact that the Senate did pass that bill, which carries about $1,500 more than the man's yearly salary.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say, in answer to that, that the Senate has on a number of occasions refused to pass bills carrying more than one year's salary. They have been insistent on holding the amount down to one year's salary.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments. The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Mr. Speaker, I offer a committee amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Delaware offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.
The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MILLER of Delaware: On page 9, strike out all of lines 7, 8, 9, and 19.

Mr. MANN. Why are these items stricken out? Mr. MILLER of Delaware. These two items were stricken out because in adding the amendments the committee made a mistake. They are already included in the bill. The additional three amendments are for bills that were introduced which were not put into this bill when reported by the committee.

Mr. MANN. I have a letter from the Acting Commissioner of Internal Revenue, to whom I wrote asking if this bill covered all the cases of similar character for the relief of building and loan associations. In that letter he says-

I have the honor to inform you that this bill does not cover all building and loan associations barred by the statute of limitations.

Why did not the committee include all of these?

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. I will say to the gentleman that bills were not introduced for all of them.

Mr. MANN. Bills were not introduced for all that are in this bill either.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. The bill as it is carries $30,000. and I submit that is a pretty big amount in an omnibus bill of this character. All the House amendments were covered by bills introduced. I can not answer for the items as they came from the Senate.

Mr. MANN. I submit that when the Government makes a rule in reference to the repayment of small sums of money-$10, $20, $30, $40, or $50-the Government ought to take care of them and not require the claimants to go to the expense of hiring an attorney to see a Member of Congress to have a bill drafted, have it introduced, have somebody appear before the committee, and absorb more than twice the amount in order to get it.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. I agree with the gentleman, but he will not deny that there are thousands of claims that ought to be paid that are treated in the same manner.

Mr. MANN. No; I do not think so. It is not customary to pass bills of this character unless you cover all the cases. eye rests on an item of $3.13. Certainly nobody has introduced a bill to have that paid. If he has he has not had a correct conception of the duties of a Member of Congress, and it seems to me that when the committee have an omnibus bill of this kind and then offer amendments to it they ought to include all the items. They ought to get the items from the Treasury Department and include them all. I do not believe in com-pelling claimants for these small sums of money to hire a lawyer, or agree to pay a contingent fee to some active claim agent in Washington who says he will try to get the claim through for 25 or 30 per cent of the amount involved.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. The department is loath to give this information, because, as the gentleman knows, they have uniformly objected to the passage of all bills of this character refunding money, even though it was just. The department does not initiate claims against itself.

Mr. MANN. I think the gentleman is in error. know that. I do not think that is the attitude of the department. On several occasions we have passed some general legislation for the refund of various amounts that were collected under the income-tax law, and I think if you are dealing with people you ought to deal with them all alike. I will not object to the bill, though I did object once before, just because it did not cover the other claims. I understood my friend from Dela-ware to tell me after that that he thought this included most of the claims.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. I will say to the gentleman that after my conversation with him, to which he refers, I endeavored to get the department to furnish the information that would enable us to clean up all of these, and I hold in my hand a letter, which I am not going to read, but which I will insert in the Record to show the answer I received.

Mr. MANN. Very well. Probably it is a good reason for not passing the bill.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. The letter is as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, Washington, August 4, 1916.

Hon. Thomas W. Miller,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

My Dear Mr. Miller: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 2d instant, inclosing copy of Senate bill 5672, in which you state that about a month ago you had the clerk of the Committee on Claims write to the Treasury Department in order to ascertain whether there were any more claims of this character on file in the department other than those which were included in the bill with amendments. You state that there is no record in the Claims Committee of the letter having been answered, and request this information.

MAION.

I have the honor to refer you to a letter written to the Hon. James R. Mann on July 13, 1916, which is, in part, as follows:

"In reply to your inquiry whether this bill probably covers all the cases of a similar situation relating to tax collected from this character of associations, I have the honor to inform you that this bill does not cover all building and loan associations barred by the statute of limitations."

I also have the honor to refer you to a letter written to the Hon. Edward W. Pou, chairman of the Committee on Claims, under date of July 11, 1916, which I quote in full:

"I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your letter of the 8th instant, addressed to the Secretary of the Treasury, and by him referred to this office for reply. You inclose bill 8. 5672, with House amendments, and request that this office inform you whether the bill in its present form provides for the repayment to all the mutual companies that paid this tax under the excise act of August 5, 1909.

"In reply to this inquiry, this office has no means of definitely ascertaining the number of companies which are not provided for in the inclosed bill, but can state with authority that the present bill does not take care of all the mutual companies that paid this tax under the act of August 5, 1909.

"In reply to your request for an opinion as to the merits of this bill, I have the honor to inform you that a formal investigation in this office discloses that a large number of the companies provided for in the present bill are presented by Washington attorneys, who have secured powers of attorney and are interested in the refundment of this tax, for the purpose of obtaining fees for their work. This office has never yet recommended the abrogation of section 3228, Revised Statutes, the statute of limitations, in favor of any one person or number of persons. General legislation should be had in this matter in order that, if it be the desire of Congress to make a refund of a certain kind of tax, all taxpayers included thereunder would be given a chance to obtain this refund.

"Therefore, in reply to you request for an opinion, this office respectfully suggests that this bill in its present form should not be made a law."

The above two letters are respectfully submitted to you in reply to

The above two letters are respectfully submitted to you in reply to the inquiry contained in your letter of August 2. This office did formally reply to all requests for information in regard to this bill.

Respectfully,

DAVID A. GATES,

DAVID A. GATES, Acting Commissioner.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I should like to ask the gentleman from Delaware, since the associations that are to have relief are not many of them in the eastern section of the country, whether application was made or bills were presented on behalf of any eastern building association?

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. It has only been possible for us to consider bills that were introduced by Members, or that were included in the Senate bill that came over.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Taking up the question raised by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann], I assume that most of these claims originated in the East, where the building associations are strongest. I remember when this matter came before the Committee on Ways and Means there was some reluctance about the passage of a relief measure, although it was apparent that collections had been made that ought not to have been made under the law.

Was the department requested to furnish information as to such associations as had paid that are not included in this bill?

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Mr. Speaker, when the bill came over from the Senate and was given to me to report with sundry House amendments, I wrote to the proper official at the Treasury Department and asked him as plainly as I could to let me know if there were additional claims. He replied that there were, and although my letter asked that we be given some specific information as to the names and amounts, they were not given to me.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. So long as the gentleman does not intend to read the letter I would like to know if he can tell, without reading it, how much the Treasury Department acknowledged it had collected in error.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. That information is not in the letter. I would remind the gentleman that the Treasury Department under the present administration is opposed to the refunding of all sums like this, and has so expressed its opposition to the committee. I do not know what the reasons are, especially if the refunds are just.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the letter indicate that the Treasury Department is reluctant to give the information desired?

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. No. If the gentleman desires ${\bf I}$ shall have the letter read from the Clerk's desk.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is there anything in the letter to indicate that there is any confusion in the department as to the collection of the income tax?

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. I should not think that they would want to admit what is very apparent, but that does not concern us here.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It is very apparent that this bill does not contain the names of all of the building associations that ought to have a refund under the law.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. No; it does not, but it contains relief for all that have applied through bills in the House or Senate.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then the only recourse, according to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] for those who are not included in this particular bill is to employ an attorney and fight it out with the Treasury Department, or take it up with the Committee on Claims.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Or take it up with a Member of Congress and have him introduce a bill.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The department is certainly in possession of evidence showing who is overpaid, and it seems to me the committee ought to have secured that information and that it ought to have dealt fairly and squarely with all those who have overpaid the amount of taxes

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I see that the letter is short, and I am curious to know just what the attitude of the department is upon this matter. The gentleman might have it read.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. I have no objection, but we are trying to make time here to-night, and there is no objection to the bill so far.

Mr. GORDON. I would like to know where the gentleman gets his information that these bills were all correct—these bills that he has included. Do you not verify the amounts claimed in this bill by conferring with the department?

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. The clerk of the committee and the clerk of the Senate committee verified these amounts with the Treasury Department, I will say to the gentleman. great bulk of these bills are contained in the Senate bill. added only the bills of House Members that were introduced after the omnibus bill came over here, and they were most certainly verified.

Mr. GORDON. By whom? Mr. MILLER of Delaware. By the clerks of the respective committees and receipts tendered the committee.

Mr. GORDON. Do the members of the committee know anything about it?

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Certainly; but the members of the committee are not expected to do the clerical work in connection with a big omnibus bill like this.

Mr. GORDON. It is not clerical work to determine whether the Government is indebted to these men.

Mr. MANN. They get the information from the Treasury. Mr. GORDON. Let us have that letter read. I do not know how you get this information.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. If the gentleman wants to discuss this bill, I will be very glad to take some time to do it.

Mr. GORDON. Put the letter in.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. I have endeavored to make it as plain as possible.

Mr. GORDON. Oh, yes; the gentleman is trying to throw mud at the department. Why not put the letter in?

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. I am not trying to throw mud at the department. If the gentleman wants to go at it that way, I will take the time to answer him. I am here trying to do my duty as a member of the Committee on Claims, and get through other people's bills, and I will not have any of the gentleman's mud thrown at me.

Mr. Speaker, I have sent an amendment to the Clerk's desk

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that, without objection, the action with respect to the committee amendments will be set aside and then the gentleman can offer his amendments. Is there objection. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk will report the amendments to the committee amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 9, strike out all of lines 7, 8, 9, and 10.
On page 9, after line —, insert the following:
"To the East End Loan & Savings Association, Baltimore, Md., "To the Millington Page 1.

$354.88.
"To the Millington Building & Loan Association of Baltimore, Md., $15.52.
"To the Northeast Permanent Building Association, of Baltimore, Md., $30.54.
"To the Standard Permanent Building & Savings Association, of Baltimore, Md., $30.59."

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 9, line 17, strike out the figures " $29,794.70 " and insert in lieu thereof the figures " $29,859.93."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. The committee amendments as amended were agreed to.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Will not the gentleman make that motion in the next bill?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes; Mr. Speaker, I shall be very glad to do so for the accommodation of my young friend from Delaware.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. I am not asking the gentleman to do so to accommodate me, but for the accommodation of other Members.

Mr. AUSTIN. Then, if it will please my genial young friend from Delaware, I will do so with pleasure.

The Senate bill as amended was ordered to be read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

MRS. H. O'NEILL.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 14695) for the relief of Mrs. H. O'Neill.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Mrs. H. O'Neili, of Brooklyn, N. Y., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, she being the heir at law of Ambrose O'Neili, late an employee of the Isthmian Canal Commission, the sum of $175, or an amount equal to six weeks' wages of said Ambrose O'Neili, at the rate of pay he was receiving at the time of his death, the same being in lieu of six weeks' vacation with pay to which said Ambrose O'Neili was entitled but had not received at the time of his death.

The committee amendment was read as follows:

On page 1, line 4, after the word "O'Neill," insert the word "widow." The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HASKELL. In reference to the committee amendment there seems to be a misapprehension. Mrs. O'Neill is the mother and not the widow, and I would ask unanimous consent that the word "mother" be inserted in place of the word "widow."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection. The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 5, after the word "of," strike out the words "Brooklyn, N. Y., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, she being the heir at law of."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 8, after the word "commission," insert the words "out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last Mr. Speaker, I think in the Sixty-first or the Sixtysecond Congress I submitted a suggestion to the members of the Committee on Claims. I wish now to renew my suggestion made some seven or eight years ago in the interest of justice. Here are 10 pages on the Private Calendar, and practically all of them private claims against the Government of the United States. Not a single one of them can be considered to-night if there is one solitary objection. It is utterly impossible for a bill to which a single objection is made to be considered and passed upon during this session of Congress. If you will examine these bills, you will find in any number of instances a statement that the bill passed the House in the Sixty-third Congress, in the Sixty-second Congress, in the Sixty-first Congress, and all the way back, but failed to pass the Senate, and hence did not become a law. I picked up a report in one case here of a claim which originated 52 years ago and is still unsettled. There are a number where they have been 18 years, 15 and 14 years, and I have no doubt in a number of instances claims have passed here, so they are without their day in court to settle and determine for all time the question as to whether the Government of the United States should pay an honest obliga-There is no citizen of the 100,000,000 of people who owe the Government of the United States who can shirk or escape the responsibility of payment to the Government-

Mr. GORDON. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. AUSTIN. I will.
Mr. GORDON. Is it not invariably true of all these claims that they are not valid legal claims against the Government at all, but are obligations for the bounty of the Government?

Mr. AUSTIN. Oh, no.
Mr. GORDON. I submit if it is not true in general of these claims?

Mr. AUSTIN. Oh, no; oh, no. You take the members of the Committee on Claims of this House, every one of whom takes an oath before the Speaker here to honorably discharge their duties as Members of this House, to obey the Constitution and laws of the country. Those Members, a majority of them law-yers on the Committee on Claims, take these claims and go through them without prejudice and determine alone whether it is a just obligation against the Government, and after 16 of our colleagues, who stand as well in this House as the gentleman from Ohio or myself, come in here with the report, a written report, in each of these cases I will say to the gentleman from Ohio he does himself a great injustice in stating that these cases are not founded upon justice, but rather charity or gratuity.

Mr. GORDON. If the gentleman will yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes. Mr. GORDON. I did not say anything about the claims being founded on justice. I said they had no legal effect against the Government. Let me call your attention to the sample of a bill that passed for $29,000. I presume it is a legal proposition. There is not a single claim that could be collected in a suit of law. The Government is under no obligation to refund taxes that have been paid.

Mr. AUSTIN. If the Government of the United States improperly collects taxes it is just as much a highwayman if it retains the money as a robber who holds you up at night on the streets of Washington and takes your purse from you. The United States Government has no right to retain a cent from its humblest or greatest citizen if he is entitled to it under the law

Mr. GORDON. It is not a claim aganst the Government; just the same

Mr. AUSTIN. Now, Mr. Speaker, what I wish to do is to ask of and appeal to the members of this committee to formulate in the next Congress a law creating a commission outside of Congress which will have sole jurisdiction to pass upon these cases, dispose of them, and end this everlasting farce of attempting to pass private claims.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for two minutes more.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a

The Chair hears none. pause.

Mr. AUSTIN. We subject the members of the Committee on Claims at every session to spending day in and week in and out going over these claims, neglecting their other official duties, and they report them on the Private Calendar, and if by chance they get through this House they are killed in the Senate, and then we begin with the new Congress this everlasting grind and reintroduction of private bills, which have practically no chance in the world of ever being passed upon or settled.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. AUSTIN. If you will give me some more time.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Then I do not ask the gentleman to yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. Now, I say in all seriousness that you would save a great deal of time if you would create a commission outside of Congress to consider and settle these little claims of from $15 up, over half a century old, and take them out of this everlasting grind, which means nothing except delay and expense and procrastination and disappointment to honest American citizens who are attempting to secure a settlement from the Government. [Applause.]
The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn.

The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

HEIRS OF DAVID H. FISH.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the hill (H. R. 16003) for the relief of the heirs of David H. Fish, deceased.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object. Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Will the gentleman withhold his objection for a moment?
Mr. MANN. Not for the gentleman from Delaware.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Is the gentleman aware that the Auditor for the Post Office Department shows that this man is owed the money?

Mr. MANN. I will reserve the objection for the gentleman to ask a question, and then I will answer him. I have a long report on the subject.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. The Auditor-

Mr. MANN. I am aware of all the facts. We had it up once before.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Does not the gentleman think that the man's heirs are entitled to what is due from the Government, although it is an old claim?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, a lot of these claims date back to from 1861 to 1869. Some time ago we had a report from the auditor, showing that there was $31,055.08 of these claims, all on the same footing. There are many pages in this report. The items are very small.

There are six pages. There must be on one of the full pages 30 or 40 claims. Now, I want to know if the gentleman from Delaware or anybody else thinks that we ought to have 500 separate bills considered by the Committee on Claims of the House and the Committee on Claims of the Senate, and then considered by the House and the Senate, in order to pay these claims, all standing on the same footing and being of equal And if we pass this bill, which is for $106.82, every Member of Congress who has one of these claims in his district will be negligent if he does not introduce a separate bill for the payment of it.

I do not say whether they ought to be paid or not. I do not know. But if the claims ought to be paid at all, then the Committee on Claims ought to report a general bill covering them all.

Take the mail carrier cases in the South, for example. commenced to report those and paid them, one bill at a time, and we had on this calendar a week ago 30 bills of that character. Some time in the last session of Congress I suggested to the gentlemen that they could not pass any more of those bills. I objected to them. I insisted that if they ought to be paid they ought to be paid without forcing a man who had a claim for $40 to hire a lawyer and have the lawyer solicit the attention of a Member of Congress. A bill was introduced, and the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. MILLER] did a great work in reference to that bill. He investigated the subject and helped to prepare the terms of the bill. The bill passed the House, and the other day it passed the Senate with an amendment, and the House agreed to the amendment. We struck all of those bills off the calendar. There were nearly as many of those as there are of these.

. I am not going to sit here and allow one claim out of a thousand to be paid, where the claims are all known, where they are all alike, where they are all old, and all of equal merit, and have one paid out of the lot, simply because a Member of Congress introduces a bill. If they ought to be paid at all they all ought to be paid. If they are not all paid, none of them ought to be paid.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that a bill for the payment of all these claims has been introduced and is now pending before the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads for a report. It is the intention of the committee, as I understand, to report that bill as soon as it has opportunity.

Mr. MANN. If the bill comes before the House, I shall be glad to do my share to investigate it. If I think well of it I shall favor it

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. I will say to the gentleman that a report is now under consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects. The Clerk will report the next one.

CHARLES M. WAY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 14754) for the relief of Charles M. Way.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill. The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasurv be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $82.24 to Charles M. Way, of Fallon, Nev., late private in Company K. Eleventh Regiment United States Volunteer Cavalry, found and held to be due him by the Auditor for the War Department, for travel pay between San Francisco, Cal., and Brookings, S. Dak., a distance of 2,056 miles, at the rate of 4 cents per mile.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next

CHARLES A. CAREY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 13754) for the relief of Charles A. Carey.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Charles A. Carey, of Lowell, Mass., the sum of $132.57, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for loss of pay on account of injury sustained while in the performance of his duty as a letter carrier at Lowell, Mass., on the 11th day of February, in the year 1913.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

FRANCIS PATRICK REGAN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4931) authorizing the President to reinstate Francis Patrick Regan as a second lieutenant in the United States Army.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects. The Clerk will report the next bill.

ANNIE E. WHITE AND HEIRS OF PATRICK WHITE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1579) for the relief of Annie E. White and the heirs of Patrick White, deceased.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? Mr. MANN. I object.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. MANN. I will withhold it for a statement.
Mr. HAYDEN. This bill, Mr. Speaker, was carefully considered by the Committee on Claims in the last Congress and again favorably reported in this Congress. The claim as originally introduced was for $20,000. The committee has reduced it to $3,500. It is for the relief of Annie E. White, a widow, and she is sadly in need of this relief. Having reduced the sum to such a small amount, I hope the gentleman from Illinois will not object, and that the bill will be passed.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, just a word, to show how carefully this bill has been examined by the Committee on Claims. And I do not want to criticize the Committee on Claims, because I believe the present committee has probably done better work as a Committee on Claims than any similar committee since I have been a Member of Congress. That being true, I hope they will not take exception to what I am about to say.

The bill reads

For the relief of Annie E. White and the heirs of Patrick- White, deceased.

And no amendment to the title is recommended. It proposes to pay to Annie E. White, widow of Patrick White, deceased, or her heirs, a sum of money, not to the heirs of Patrick White. That shows that the committee either did not read the title or did not read the bill. But the committee in the last Congress reported on this bill, recommending that $3,500 be paid. In this Congress they recommend that $20,000 be paid, and that shows careful consideration" by the committee.

Mr. HAYDEN. The committee adopted the same report that was made in the last Congress, which recommended $3,500.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I beg the gentleman's pardon. The committee did not report any amendment at all to the bill.

Mr. HAYDEN. They adopted the report of the last Congress, which made it $3,500.

Mr. MANN. That is all right, to print the report, but they did not recommend any amendment to this bill. To tell you the truth, I think in the hurry of the matter the committee did not read the bill.

Mr. HAYDEN. I shall be very glad to move to amend it. Mr. MANN. I think it ought to be carefully considered. I object. I objected before, when the amount was $3,500.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

RICHARD DAELEY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 809) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to accept the application for land entry of Richard Daeley.

The clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc.. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to accept the application of Richard Daeley to enter lot 8, section 31, township 147 north, of range 30 west of the fifth principal meridian, Cass Lake, Minn., land district, containing 1½ acres, more or less, according to the Government survey thereof, as assignee of Evaline Gallagher, widow of Edward S. Gallagher, and to issue patent thereon to said Richard Daeley upon proof of his compliance with the requirements of the law and regulations issued thereunder relative to making soldiers' additional homestead entries.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

GEORGE H. MORROW.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8849) to reimburse George H. Morrow.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. I object.

WRECK OF REVENUE CUTTER "TAHOMA."

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8625) to reimburse the officers and enlisted men of the Revenue-Cutter Service and Public Health Service for losses sustained in the wreck of the revenue cutter Tahoma.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

LIGHTHOUSE TENDER "ARMERIA."

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 16090) for the relief of the officers and crew of the lighthouse tender Armeria.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

JAMES T. PETTY AND OTHERS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9760) for the relief of James T. Petty, Charles W. Church, and others, executors of Charles B. Church, deceased; Jesse B. Wilson and George T. Dearing.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

ELIZABETH DAVIS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 36i7) for the relief of Elizabeth Davis.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? Mr. MANN. Let the bill be read. Mr. MAYS. I object.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. I hope the gentleman from Utah will withhold his objection to this bill. It was reported from our committee unanimously, and it certainly has a great deal of

I will reserve the right to object.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. The gentleman from Illinois has an amendment to offer, which I think will meet the objection of the gentleman from Utah.

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, let the bill be read. It is a very short bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue patent to Elizabeth Davis for the east half of the northwest quarter, northeast quarter of the southwest quarter, and the northwest quarter of the southeast quarter, section 28, township 47 north, range 3 east of the Boise meridian, lying within the Coeur d'Alene National Forest, in the State of Idaho.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, as far as I am concerned I think I will not object to the consideration of the bill if the gentleman will agree to let this amendment remain in the bill when it goes back to the Senate:

Subject, however, to an easement across said land for roadway purposes and for any other purposes which the interests of the United States may require.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, I will accept the amendment offered by the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. And keep it in the bill?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Yes.

Mr. MAYS. The gentleman understands I have reserved the right to object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Utah reserves the right to object.

Mr. MAYS. The gentleman was in errror when he said this bill passed the Public Lands Committee unanimously.

I think the object here is to secure $5,000 instead of 160

I think the report indicates that. If the genacres of land. tleman from Idaho is willing to accept a further amendment that $5,000 now in the Treasury of the United States shall not pass with this title, I will withdraw the objection. If this is a homestead that these people want, I am perfectly willing to withdraw the objection.

Mr. MANN. Four thousand dollars-not $5,000.

Mr. MAYS. In some places it is stated to be $4,000 and in some five

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, the money is not in the Federal Treasury as the gentleman states. It is simply withheld in trust until the question of title to this land is determined. The facts show that this woman went on this land years ago, 3 years before the land was surveyed. After the land was surveyed and she could initiate her entry, she did so within four or five days after the plat was filed. In addition to establishing a residence upon the land, which was burned over on three different occasions, she compiled with the commutation law and lived on the land for a sufficient length of time to be able to purchase it under that law at $2.50 an acre. She did purchase it under the law and paid her $400, so that she has really complied not only with the homestead law, but also with the commutation law. If the timber had not been injured by fire to such an extent that it had to be marketed under the general law, the probabilities are that no objection would have been raised by the department at all. As I say, the forest fire swept over this woman's entry three different times, and on two occasions her home was destroyed, which she immediately rebuilt and endeavored to comply with

Mr. MAYS. Mr. Speaker, the report indicates that she lived on this land in one year for 11 days, and in another year she lived 39 days there. The reports of the Secretary of Agricullived 39 days there. The reports of the Secretary of Agriculture plainly show it is simply a speculation in timber; that 1910 she has not been on the land, but has been living in Chicago with her husband, a traveling salesman.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. That may be true, but she had already complied with the homestead law, and also with the commuta-tion law, and after having complied with the law she is not expected to live on her entry.

Mr. MAYS. Mr. Speaker, I object.

KATE CANNIFF.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 798) for the relief of Kate Canniff.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

CHARLES L. SCHROEDER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 15797) for the relief of Charles L. Schroeder.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

HORACE M. BLUNT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5020) for the reimbursement of Horace M. Blunt for the loss of a horse while hired by the United States Geological Survey.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

ROBERT T. LEGGE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2205) for the relief of Robert T. Legge.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, this claim was heretofore fully considered by the Committee on Claims and passed in the Sixty third Congress by the unanimous consent of the House. The matter has been gone over fully again by the committee, with possibly a third of it composed of new members. made a unanimous report on the bill, and the records show in this case that had it not been for this doctor's assistance, his work, and his medicine and his attention, this man would unquestionably have died. Other claims not exactly upon all fours, but of the same general character, have passed this House. It is conceded that practically none of these claims has a legal status against the Government, for if they had they would have been paid. We are here before the Congress asking equity judgment of the Members of the House, in a case where real, genuine legitimate service has been rendered, for which the man ought to be paid. Mr. GORDON. Service rendered to whom?

Service rendered to a Government official in Mr. RAKER. the discharge of his duties, and if the service had not been rendered, the official would undoubtedly have died.

Mr. GORDON. Does that create any claim against the Government?

It is like all of the other claims here. There are no legal claims against the Government, but here is a Government official, employed just as in the case of many other claims, and not a single one of these claims, and I have been watching them with keen interest, has had any legal status against the Government. My distinguished friend did not rise to his feet when a dozen banks and insurance companies obtained $30,000 out of the Treasury, when there was no legal claim, but here is something to be paid for the saving of a man's life.

Mr. AUSTIN. When did this occur? Mr. RAKER. About five or six years ago. This has been before Congress for some time, has passed the House, and went over to the Senate and was reported favorably, but the Congress adjourned and it could not be paid.

Mr. AUSTIN. How old is the claim? Mr. RAKER. The claim is five years old.

Mr. AUSTIN. Well, the gentleman will perhaps in half a century get it through.

Mr. RAKER. I just wanted to answer the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Gordon]

Mr. AUSTIN. I hope the gentleman will be here to see it pass, but he will have to wait at least 50 years.

Mr. RAKER. Why, no; the same kind and character of claims have passed here to-night. The same kind and character of claims passed here the last time this committee met. The only difference is that this man did not die. If he had died I suppose five years afterwards his widow might have been given something; but here is a man on his job giving care, assistance, and attention, as the testimony shows here, and by virtue of his aid by going out in the snow and taking care of this Government official he saved his life.

Mr. AUSTIN. I suggest the gentleman write him and tell him that he can get it after-

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask that I may proceed for three minutes. In further answer to the remarks, now there seems to be some objection made for this character of work and in the other cases where a man has lost his property or a man has lost his life-

Mr. MANN rose.

Mr. RAKER. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, as I recollect, first, the gentleman says that this bill is reported unanimously by the Committee on Claims. I have noticed a gentleman who makes his report on bills says the committee unanimously reported it. That is not the case. The Committee on Claims probably has not had a meeting with all the members there during this Congress. The committee reports it without any minority views, but that is not reporting it unanimously. This committee reported, and the committee on which the gentleman serves when it says it reported it unanimously is not stating the fact correctly, because the committee has not made a unanimous report at all. Now, as to this bill, here was a man working for the Government who had been drinking though it says he was not drunk. He was riding on top of a wagon with three or four other men and fell off and broke his leg. He says he was not drunk. He says he had been drinking. He was taken to a lumber company's hospital which was the proper place for him to go. Now, the Government is under no obligation to pay the doctor's bill, and therefore I object

Mr. RAKER. Hold on just a minute. Mr. Speaker, my time has not expired.

Mr. MANN. I will reserve the right to object.

Mr. RAKER. Just a moment. I want two minutes more. The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it. Mr. DYER. What time do we adjourn under the order?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. At 10.30.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California that he proceed for two minutes?

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Mr. Speaker, the regular order was demanded. I have asked for the regular order.
Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, on the question of the suggestion made by the gentleman from Illinois: The man here testifies positively, as well as witnesses, that he had not been drinking. Mr. MANN. Oh, no.

It is in the testimony. There is a report from Mr. RAKER. some official that he had made some statement, or heard some statement on the outside, but I do not want that to go in the RECORD and remain here uncontradicted by the testimony of men who knew the facts and the conditions.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

JAMES DIAMOND.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2210) for the relief of James Diamond for horse lost while hired by the United States Forest Service.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

REFERENCE TO COURT OF CLAIMS.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was House resolution 305, as follows:

Resolved, That the bill (H. R. 12204) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to audit and adjust certain claims of the city of New York, with the accompanying papers, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims for the finding of facts and conclusions of law.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

JOHN P. FITZGERALD.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1378) to amend the military record of John P. Fitz-

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I reserve the right to object.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I would ask to have the bill reported.

The bill was reported.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

WILLIAM HAROLD KEHOE.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 6279) for the relief of William Harold Kehoe.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. Conny in the chair). Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. I object.

Mr. FIELDS. Will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. FIELDS. Will the gentleman withhold his objection?
Mr. STAFFORD. I will withhold it.
Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill to place upon the retired list a cadet who served more than two years—in fact, two years and three months—at West Point. While serving there he was thrown from a horse, and during his illness as a result of that injury he contracted tubercular trouble, and is now at Fort Bayard, N. Mex. He is now able to do the work of a draftsman, and the War Department is awaiting the action of Compress. Of course, the does not get able to be returned to Congress. Of course, if he does not get able to be returned to the academy right away he will be dropped from the rolls. It is the ambition of this young man's life to get into the military service. He so informs me, and so does his father, who was a Member of this House in the Fifty-seventh and Fifty-eighth Congresses. And Congress has laid a precedent for this kind of legislation. On March 4, 1909, a bill of similar character was passed, when the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] was a Member of the House, and on March 4, 1913, another bill of similar character was passed. In view of the fact that this young man is anxious to be where he can be restored to military service as soon as he becomes able, I sincerely trust that the gentleman from Wisconsin will withhold his objection. The Government has expended something like $5,000, or probably $6,000 by now, on this man, and it looks to me as if it would be the part of good business, as he is now and has been all the time able to do the work of a draftsman, to place him upon the retired list, where he can be returned, which he desires to be, as he positively stated to me and as his father positively states to me, as soon as he is able.

Mr. MANN. I would like to ask the gentleman a question whether he thinks we ought to pass a general law providing that any boy who goes to West Point or Annapolis and who fails for physical reasons ought to be placed on the retired list?

Mr. FIELDS. Well, this man was thrown from a horse—
Mr. MANN. I know the case. I am an expert on tuberculosis. I have a son—the only son I have—who has had tuberculosis nearly all his life, and who has been down at the same place where Mr. Kehoe has been; and I have studied tuberculosis for 20 years. There is nothing to it as far as being thrown from a horse causing tuberculosis is concerned. But whenever a boy gets injured at West Point or at Annapolis are we to place him on the retired list for life? I would like to put my boy where the Government might support him for the rest of his life if I did not have the means to do it myself, but which, fortunately, I have. But I do not see any reason from the mere fact that somebody gets tuberculosis that that means the Government should place him on the retired list of the Army or the Navy.

It is a sad occurrence. Any such boy has my profound sympathy. He will never get to the Army. Of course, it may not be wise to tell him that, because tuberculosis is one of those hopeful diseases where whoever has it usually thinks he is shortly going to get well, but very rarely does get well. what is the distinction between this kind of a case and any other case? There are hundreds of thousands of young men in this country who have tuberculosis, many of them hoping earnestly for an opportunity to go West and even secure employment, which is not a good thing for tuberculosis, so far as the employment is concerned.

Now, this young man has been given leave to go to the Army sanatorium. I got my boy into the Army sanatorium at one time. He may go there again some time. He has been there several times for short periods. Now, we can do that for other boys. Is the mere fact that we have given this boy a preference by sending him to West Point-a thing that he wanteda reason why we should now give him another preference over all the other boys in the country who happen to have tuberculosis?

Mr. FIELDS. I am basing my contention on the hope that he will be able to return to the service.

Mr. MANN. Of course, there is nothing to that. He will never return to the Army.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. I object.

MR. J. RICARDO DE BORJA.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was House joint resolution 265, authorizing the Secretary of War to receive for instruction at the United States Military Academy at West Point, Mr. J. Ricardo de Borja, a citizen of Ecuador.

Mr. MANN. Has not that been disposed of? Does somebody from the Committee on Military Affairs know? I shall not object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, authorized to permit Mr. J. Ricardo de Borja, a citizen of Ecuador, to receive instruction at the United States Military Academy at West Point: Provided, That no expense shall be caused to the United States thereby, and that the said J. Ricardo de Borja shall agree to comply with all regulations for the police and discipline of the academy, to be studious, and to give his utmost efforts to accomplish the course in the various departments of instruction, and that the said J. Ricardo de Borja shall not be admitted to the academy until he shall have passed the mental and physical examinations prescribed for candidates from the United States, and that he shall be immediately withdrawn if deficient in studies or conduct, and so recommended by the academic board: And provided further, That in the case of the said J. Ricardo de Borja the provisions of sections 1320 and 1321 of the Revised Statutes shall be suspended.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] asked if this resolution had not been considered before. I have before me the Congressional Record of August 11, 1916, which was the last day of the last session on which bills on the Private Calendar were considered. It shows that the gentleman from Illinois asked if this bill had not been taken care of by a Senate amendment on the Army bill, and another gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McKenzie] stated-

That is my recollection of it, that it is taken care of on the military appropriation bill.

Mr. MANN. I am not sure, but I think it was taken care of last year.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Well, we have a member of the Committee on Military Affairs stating that it had been taken care of.

Mr. MANN. It would be an easy matter for the librarian there to look at the RECORD.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that the resolution be passed over for the present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, that will be

There was no objection.

JOHN P. FITZGERALD.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 365. The bill is Senate bill No. 1378, to amend the military record of John P. Fitzgerald.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, that will be done.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill. The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

A bill (S. 1378) to amend the military record of John P. Fitzgerald

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, this is a case to amend a military record, or to issue a discharge to a soldier under his proper name

This man wanted to enlist in the Army before he was 17 years of age and his father opposed it. He walked from his home in Indiana to some point in Michigan, if I remember the testimony correctly, and enlisted under the name of "Porter," and served out his enlistment and received an honorable discharge. He is now drawing a pension under that honorable discharge, and he desires to have this record corrected in order that he may use his correct name.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I objected to the bill a moment ago, first, because there was nothing in the report that indicated a good reason for passing the bill; and, second, because there was no report on it from the War Department as to what the facts were. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. FIELDS] says the only purpose of it is to give the man a discharge under his true name. I have no objection if the man is already drawing a pension.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is the objection withdrawn?

Mr. MANN. I do not object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to amend the military record of John P. Fitzgerald, who enlisted and served under the assumed name of Joshua Porter in Company K, Seventh Regiment, and Company C, First Regiment, Michigan Volunteer Cavalry, from March 9, 1865, to March 10, 1866, and to issue to him an honorable discharge in his true name of John P. Fitzgerald.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

JACOB B. MOORE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 14679) for the relief of Jacob B. Moore.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, is not this in the Indian bill as a Senate amendment?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. No, sir; it is not.

Mr. MANN. There is something like that in the Indian bill as a Senate amendment, I understand,

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. There is nothing for J. B. Moore in the Indian bill.

Mr. MANN. I thought there was.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill. The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $242.60 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the possession of the United States belonging to the Chickasaw Tribe of Indians not otherwise appropriated, to reimburse Jacob B. Moore, of Ardmore, Oklahoma, for probate expenses incurred and paid by him in the performance of his duty as attorney for the Chickasaws under a contract between him and Douglas H. Johnston, governor of the Chickasaw Nation, approved by the President of the United States December 1, 1913.

With a committee amendment, as follows:

Strike out in line 3 "$242.60" and insert in lieu thereof "$392.60."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

ADELAIDE L. GIBBS.

The next business on the private calendar was the bill (H. R. 16116) for the relief of the widow of Robert M. Gibbs. The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of making a brief statement. When this bill was up last summer I objected to it, upon the ground that there was no report from the Treasury Department showing that the Government was in any way liable or responsible for the death of this man, as I construed the report from the Treasury De-I objected further that there was no medical evidence showing that the disease which this man contracted while in the line of duty was the direct and immediate cause of his death. Since then Mr. Patter has asked the Treasury Department for a complete report on this bill. He handed it to me the other day. I tried to get it this evening, but it was in my secretary's desk and I could not get it. This report, in my opinion, fixes the liability upon the Government. I think it is just and meritorious claim, and that it ought to go through. The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill. The bill was read as follows:

The bill was read as follows:

Whereas Robert M. Gibbs, late assistant weigher in the United States customhouse at New York City, contracted anthrax while performing his duty as assistant weigher in the handling of raw hide, wool, and so forth, for examination, and in which work he had been engaged since 1908, and in which work he was engaged when he contracted the disease of anthrax of which he died at the Red Cross Hospital, New York City, on the 29th day of July, 1915: Therefore Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the widow of Robert M. Gibbs, deceased, the sum of $2,880, being the amount of salary for two years.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:
"That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Adelaide L. Gibbs, widow of Robert M. Gibbs, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,440, this amount being the equivalent of one year's salary which was being paid the said Robert M. Gibbs at the time of his death."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed. By unanimous consent the title was amended to read: "A bill for the relief of Adelaide L. Gibbs, widow of Robert M. Gibbs !

FRED E. JACKSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4517) for the relief of Fred E. Jackson.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

J. RICARDO DE BORJA.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Mr. Speaker, in connection with Calendar No. 367 (H. J. Res. 265), authorizing the Secretary of War to receive for instruction at the United States Military Academy at West Point Mr. J. Ricardo de Borja, a citizen of Ecuador, I beg to inform the House that this legislation was included in the last Army appropriation bill, and therefore I move to lay the bill on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, House joint resolution 265 will be laid on the table.

There was no objection.

ANDREW M. DUNLOP.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2204) for the relief of Andrew M. Dunlop.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. Was the bill immediately preceding this one (H. R. 4517) acted on? Mr. LANGLEY. Yes; that was objected to. Mr. LANGLEY. Yes; that was objected to.
Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman from Illinois withhold his objection to the consideration of this bill (H. R. 2204)?

Mr. MANN. I reserve the right to object.

Mr. RAKER. I have just been reading a bill that was just passed here (H. R. 16116). The difference between that claim and this one is that one man was acting as a weigher and contracted a disease and died. The other was acting on the Panama Canal and, from the report of all the officers there, contracted a deadly disease and was sent home to die; but Dr. Chamberlain's brother, a physician in Mississippi, saved his life. All that is asked now is that he be given one year's compensation for the contracting of the disease, which has disabled him from really earning a livelihood for himself and his family

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield-

Mr. RAKER. I will yield.

Mr. MANN. In one case we granted a year's pay on account of the death of a man.

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. MANN. In the other case it is proposed to reimburse the man for the loss of time, his medical, hospital, and other expenses paid out by him. That is not the policy of the Government. Whether it might properly be I do not undertake to say, but it can not be fixed by one or two private bills. It is not the policy of the Government to tell men that the Government will pay their medical, hospital, or other expenses. The Government provides hospitals at Panama and a great many other places, and when men are entitled to it they go into the hospitals

The Government does not undertake to pay the expenses of a man who gets ill while in the Government service. Perhaps we ought to do it, but that is not the policy.

Mr. RAKER. In this case the committee has reduced the amount to one year's pay.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman provided in the bill when he first introduced it that it was to pay for medical, hospital, and other expenses paid out by him while suffering from and as the result of an attack of Chagres fever. There are thousands of men who have gone to Panama who have had Chagres fever, both while down there and after they came back, many of them who went into the Army. Personal experiences amount to nothing, of course; but I have a brother who went into the Spanish War and who never has been well since. I sent him to a hospital, and the Government did not pay the bill, and I did not ask the Government to pay the bill. The Government has refused to pay such things all along. Half of the First Illinois Infantry after they came home went to the hospital and the Government has not paid them.

Mr. RAKER. This man has been incapacitated ever since he left the service.

Mr. MANN. I am not undertaking to pass upon that.

Mr. RAKER. And has been unable to provide for his wife and family.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order. Mr. RAKER. Oh, I have my five minutes, and I do not think the gentleman can take me off the floor. Personally I know that the wife is working to make a livelihood because of this man's sickness contracted in the service of the Government. Had he died, of course there would have been $1,500 paid to him.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from California has expired. The gentleman from Illinois objects, and the Clerk will report the next bill.

J. B. PATTERSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 14345) to reimburse J. B. Patterson, postmaster of Lacon, Morgan County, Ala., for certain postage stamps stolen.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to J. B. Patterson, postmaster of Lacon, Morgan County, Ala., out of any moneys in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $126.16, the same to be in payment of certain postage stamps taken from the post office of Lacon, Morgan County, Ala., February 28, 1915, by unknown persons.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

ALBERT SIDNEY JOHNSTON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 5441) for the relief of the heirs of Albert Sidney Johnston. The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

GEORGE WELTY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was H. Res. 318, referring the bill (H. R. 16951) for the relief of George Welty to the Court of Claims.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

GEORGE F. REID.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2212) to correct the military record of George F. Reid and to pay his widow, Isabella Reid, a pension.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask to amend this bill by striking out all of line 1, after the word "Interior," and lines 2

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, how did the gentleman ever come to introduce a bill which was to pay a pension and refer it to the Committee on Military Affairs? I have a curiosity to know. Mr. RAKER. That just slipped in there in some way by mis-

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is very smart about the way he handles himself in the House. How did he come to introduce the bill?

Mr. RAKER. I am telling the gentleman.
Mr. MANN. And combine what he knew to be the jurisdiction of two committees, and send a pension bill to the Committee on Military Affairs? Was it ignorance or design?
Mr. RAKER. I want to say to the gentleman that it was neither ignorance nor design, and the gentleman, I think, when he stated that, knows that it was not design.

Mr. MANN. I did not use the word "design" in a wicked sense, but I want to know whether he did it intentionally or

Mr. RAKER. It is one of those things that in introducing bills was done by a slip, forgetting to strike it out after it was put on by the typewriter.

Mr. FIELDS. Probably it was the clerk's fault.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman combined in two bills what would be certain to make it subject to a point of order when it was introduced in the House.

Mr. RAKER. The bill was drawn and, undoubtedly through a mistake in some way in dictating, that was left on the bill and was not stricken off.

Mr. MANN. What is the gentleman's amendment?

Mr. RAKER. My amendment is to strike out all after the word "Interior" in line 1 on page 2, and all of lines 2 and 3.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, the question of whether the bill is objected to has not yet been put to the House.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is stating this for information. I would like to have him again state what his amendment is, so that I may follow it.

Mr. RAKER. I want to strike out more than that.

Mr. LANGLEY. Why not let it go over?
Mr. RAKER. But I want to strike out, commencing with the word "and" in line 11, page 1, all the rest of that line and all of lines 1, 2, and 3 on page 2. That would just correct his military record.
Mr. MANN.

All right.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I want to reserve the right to object. I want to know if this is a desertion case.

Mr. FIELDS. Yes. Mr. RAKER. The record has been in a shape showing that it is not a desertion; in fact, from the record, the man was home and sick-

Mr. MANN. He deserted; it is a desertion case. Mr. LANGLEY. I have several cases like that when men were at home sick and were not really deserters.

Mr. MANN. I can assure the gentleman from Kentucky that he has had more passed than any other man in the House, as he is a most diligent man.

Mr. LANGLEY. The gentleman from Illinois is usually very accurate in most instances, but he missed it in this case, because I have not had in 10 years a single one passed.

Mr. MANN. I am surprised, because the gentleman from Kentucky is extremely active on behalf of his constituents.

Mr. LANGLEY. I thank the gentleman for that statement, but I have spent a great deal of time in trying to get some of these desertion cases through this Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. MANN. I will undertake to say the gentleman has not spent half as much time as the gentleman from California, besides

Mr. LANGLEY. The gentleman from California does not do anything else.

Mr. MANN. Oh, he does lots of other things. I want to say to the gentleman from Kentucky it is considered one of the prerogatives of the membership of the Committee on Military Affairs that a member of that committee occasionally introduces a bill to remove the charge of desertion and gets it passed, and when outsiders are given this privilege it is by favor and not by right.

Mr. LANGLEY. I had a suspicion there was something of that kind or something wrong somewhere, and I am glad to have the statement from such an experienced source.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I want to say to the gentleman from Kentucky, first, that I have been a member of the Committee on Military Affairs for six years and a goodly portion of that time as a member of the subcommittee on desertions, and I have secured the passage of only two bills, and they were much more meritorious than the bill of my colleague to which he refers.

Mr. LANGLEY. That is a mere matter of opinion.
Mr. FIELDS. I want to say, Mr. Speaker, in answer to the gentleman from Illinois, the committee does not attempt to play favorites in these matters, but they try to pass upon the merits of each case before them.

Mr. LANGLEY. If my colleague will yield, what I am trying to get at is how he works it to get a bill through at all.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman will not conduct a kindergarten here when other people are waiting to try to get their bills passed.

Mr. LANGLEY. I want to know the length of service of this soldier; I am sincere about this; I want to know how long he served and why you are proposing to remove the charge of desertion from his record.

Mr. FIELDS. This man was only out of the service two days, and during the two days he was out he was charged with desertion. He returned on his own accord and served out his time and received an honorable discharge. But the charge of desertion apparently was against him on the war records, and was not corrected, and therefore it stands as a charge of desertion.

Mr. LANGLEY. He returned voluntarily?
Mr. FIELDS. He returned voluntarily after having been two days out of the service, and then he remained and was mustered out

Mr. LANGLEY. How much time did he serve altogether? He served his entire enlistment, from 1865 Mr. FIELDS.

to July 27, 1866.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right object, does that grant him an entire service from April, 1865, to the close of the war, or after the war was concluded, pensionable status because he served 90 days during the Civil

Mr. FIELDS. Yes; he served 90 days. Mr. STAFFORD. When is it considered that the Civil War ended?

Mr. FIELDS. The gentleman is familiar with that. Mr. LANGLEY. I think it has been officially determined it was July 15, 1865. Anyway, it was in July, 1865, with the exception of certain restricted areas where war conditions still

Mr. FIELDS. This man was mustered out and received an honorable discharge, but because he was away from his com-mand for two days, from December 31 to January 1, he was charged with desertion, and it was only an oversight in not cor-

Mr. LANGLEY. Will the gentleman pardon me? If he received an honorable discharge and was absent only two days, and voluntarily returned, that would not prevent his widow from getting a pension under existing law if he served 90 days during the Civil War.

Mr. FIELDS. I have the report here—
Mr. LANGLEY. There must be something else wrong about it or this legislation would not be needed.

Mr. FIELDS. The records of the War Department show that he was absent only two days and was mustered out with his company and received an honorable discharge. At the Pension Bureau the charge of desertion, I understand, still stands against him on the record, and they refuse to pension him.

Mr. LANGLEY. I am frank to say that I never heard of a case where there was an absence of only two days and where the soldier voluntarily returned and was honorably discharged that the War Department refused to remove the charge of deser-

Mr. FIELDS. I never heard of it, and that is why I think it ought to be corrected.

Mr. LANGLEY. I will not object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill. The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws and the laws governing the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, or any branch thereof, George F, Reid shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a private of Company D, Battalion —, Third Regiment California Volunteer Infantry, and as a private of Company C, Battalion —, Third Regiment California Volunteer Infantry, and that his widow, Isabella Reid, be placed on the pension roll of the Secretary of the Interior, and that she be paid a pension at the rate of $30 per month: Provided, That no pension shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

Mr. RAKER, Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment. The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on page 1, line 11, after the word "Infantry," by striking out the following language:
"And that his widow, Isabella Reid, be placed on the pension roll of the Secretary of the Interior, and that she be paid a pension at the rate of $30 per month."

And strike out the proviso. Mr. MANN.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. Mr. RAKER. I ask that the title be amended accordingly.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That will be done after the bill is passed. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. MANN. It is not to correct a military record. This is a bill for the relief of George F. Reid.

Mr. LANGLEY. The gentleman is entirely correct about that.

You can not change the record of the War Department by an act of Congress. You can change the effect of it.

Mr. MANN. There are a couple of blank places in here. I do not know whether the bill will be any good unless you fill them up here or hereafter.

Mr. RAKER. He served twice.
Mr. MANN. The number of the battalion is not stated in either place. The gentleman better have that put in in the Senate

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the amended bill.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed. The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of George F. Reid."

LEONORE M. SORSBY.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4544) for the relief of Leonore M. Sorsby. The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN and Mr. COX objected.

BENJAMIN R. BUFFINGTON.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5182) requiring the Secretary of War to issue an honorable discharge to Benjamin R. Buffington.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?
Mr. LANGLEY. Reserving the right to object, I would like to have some brief statement of that case. What I am trying to get at, if the gentleman will pardon me, is whether you are passing any cases that are not more meritorious than a number that I am so anxious to get through that committee, and I have been unable to get through.

Mr. FIELDS. I will say to my colleague-

It is a pure matter of favor. What is the use? Mr. FIELDS. There is much more merit in this case than any that I have seen so far.

Mr. LANGLEY. I have been good to the members of that committee individually, I am sure, and I can not understand why they do not want to favor me.

Mr. FIELDS. Does the gentleman want an explanation? Mr. LANGLEY. A brief one.

Mr. FIELDS. This man enlisted in 1861. He was captured and placed in prison. After his release from prison he returned to parole at Camp Parole, Md., and on the motion of his father, inasmuch as he was a minor, he was honorably discharged from the service.

He reenlisted again and was transferred from one place to another, and finally to a point in South Carolina. When he arrived there he found his regiment was in North Carolina. It was not possible for him to reach his regiment, and he returned home when be could get there.

Mr. LANGLEY. Now, Mr. Speaker, let me state to the gen-tleman right there: In the mountains of eastern Kentucky and Tennessee and that section of country generally during the Civil War, in that border territory, we had hundreds of soldiers who were situated just as this soldier was, according to the gentleman's statement. They made repeated attempts, many of them did, according to testimony that I have read in many of these cases, to get back to their commands, but they could not do it. They could not get word to their commanders so that they would know why they were absent. Frequently they were cut off by the enemy, and they were charged with desertion. The conditions existing there during a portion of the war were worse than in any other section of the Union, and you people of the North and West have no conception of it, and that is why you are so hard on these so-called desertion cases

This unjust charge still stands. The case of mine to which the gentleman referred a moment ago was that of an old fellow who went home. He says his commanding officer gave him permission to go. He had served over two and one-half years and reenlisted as a veteran volunteer. He was taken sick after he got home. He could not get back to his command. We have established these facts by a dozen witnesses, and yet I have tried for nine years without success to get action on this case.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I want to say to my colleague and to the membership of the House that there is a good deal of complaint because the Committee on Military Affairs does not report out desertion cases. I know there are many meritorious claims for the correction of military records. But gentlemen must realize how impossible it is for the Committee on Military Affairs to reach all these cases.

At the beginning of this Congress I asked the members of the subcommittee to join me in an effort to clean up these bills, and the subcommittee on desertions has written up about 200 cases. Many of them have been reported unfavorably, while many of them have been reported favorably. But the membership of the House knows that the Committee on Military Affairs has been one of the busiest committees of the House during this Congress. We have had three or four sittings during this Congress on cases of desertion. The committee is busy all the time, and it is not because we do not want to consider claims, but it is because we have not the time to reach them; and I trust that my colleague will not feel that he is discriminated against. There are probably 250 Members of the House who have bills of that kind introduced, many of them being claims of much merit, but it has not been possible for the Committee on Claims to reach all of them.

Mr. LANGLEY. Is it going to be possible for me to get one or two or three of these cases that I have spoken to the gentleman about? I am perfectly sincere in this, and I do not want to delay the work here to-night. But I have several old soldiers in my district who are entitled to relief.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the regular order. The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. Foster). The regular order is demanded.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill. The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue to Benjamin R. Buffington, who enlisted as a private in the Twenty-fifth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, at St. Clairsville, Ohio, October 27, 1863, and was mustered into service December 1, 1863, but who, being absent from the regiment when it was mustered cut, June 18, 1866, has never been regularly discharged from the service, nor marked as a deserter, an honorable discharge from the above service as of the date of the muster out of the regiment, June 18, 1866.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, I wish to indorse what my colleague from Kentucky [Mr. Langley] has said in reference to these so-called desertion cases. East Tennessee furnished 31,000 soldiers to the Union Army. Many of them served in that immediate the served in the serve diate section of the country. When they were sick or wounded or disabled, many of the men in our east Tennessee regiments, which were not thoroughly and well equipped with hospital service, were granted permission to go home, where they could be nursed and cared for. When they got well perhaps the regiments to which they belonged had left the State, or were in Kentucky, and a large number of our very best citizens have been unable for fifty-odd years to get the American Congress to consider and pass upon this question and remove from them and their reputation and their children a cloud and a reflection upon their honor.

Now, I have had some of these bills pending before the Committee on Military Affairs for eight years. I am becoming impatient. Some of these men have actually passed away. Recognizing the statement made by the gentleman here, which was made then to me, that on account of the annual appropriation bill they could not take up these bills, I offered a bill in the Sixty-first Congress to create a commission composed of The Adjutant General, the Surgeon General, and the Secretary of War, to pass upon these cases. Not a thing has been done with that bill. No action has been taken on my cases. I shall be in the next Congress if I live, and I serve notice here and now that I shall object to every one of these bills introduced by a member of the Military Affairs Committee, when absolutely no action has been taken on the bills that I have introduced.

Mr. FIELDS. Very few of these bills are from members of the Military Affairs Committee.

Mr. LANGLEY. One of these old soldiers to whom I referred a moment ago is now blind. According to what his comrades say, he was the sixth man to scale the heights of Lookout Mountain on that memorable morning when our flag was placed upon its summit. Do not tell me that that sort of a soldier is justly charged with desertion. I have furnished 12 or 15 affidavits stating that he was unable to get back to his command, although he tried to do so. He served two years and seven months. I have had that case pending before the Military Affairs Committee of the various Congresses for nine years, and it has been reported two or three times by a subcommittee, but either they could not get a quorum of the full committee or something or other always happened to block my bill.

Mr. FIELDS. Other members have filed claims, too, supported by a great deal of testimony. But I want to say to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Austin] that if he will take the pains to read the reports on these bills, he will see that the charge that the bills are from the Committee on Military Affairs is without foundation. There has not been a bill passed to-night or the preceding night that was from a member of the Military Affairs Committee.

Mr. MANN. The last night we were here we had three of them in succession introduced by members of the Committee on Military Affairs and reported by the gentleman-

Mr. LANGLEY. I did not make that charge. I did not

Mr. AUSTIN. In view of the statement of the gentleman from Illinois I ask the gentleman from Kentucky to take back the statement he made a few minutes ago.

Mr. FIELDS. Who introduced them? Mr. MANN. I do not remember. We were all commenting upon it at the time. They were meritorious bills.

Mr. AUSTIN. I do not question that they were meritorious

As I remember, there was only one bill from a member of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McKenzie], and the bills were objected to.

Mr. MANN. There were three in succession. I am not going What is the use. to name them.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. Foster). Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for one minute to make a statement.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Delaware asks unanimous consent for one minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. I want to state that so far we have considered 108 measures to-night, 14 of which we have passed. Every one of these measures has been considered heretofore at one time or another, when the Private Calendar was up for consideration. I understand that we are going to have one other evening for the Private Calendar. I want to serve notice that I for one am going to object unless we can start considering that calendar at the place where we leave off to-night.

Mr. MANN. And I am going to object unless we proceed

Mr. AUSTIN. I want to submit a request for unanimous consent that we continue this session until midnight.

Mr. MANN. That can not be done.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That can not be done under The SPEAKER pro tempore. That can not be done under the previous order of the House.

Mr. LANGLEY, I wish we could do that. We might consider some of our bills.

CHOCTAW AND CHICKASAW INDIANS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill S. 5427) referring certain claims against the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations of Indians to the Court of Claims.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

CHIEF JUSTICE SETH SHEPARD.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 17331) to permit Seth Shepard, chief justice of the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia, to retire.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

ALFRED REBSAMEN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5690) to correct the military record of Alfred Rebsamen.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws Alfred Rebsamen, late of Company A, Fifty-ninth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of said company and regiment on the 8th day of December, 1865: Provided, That no pension shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 9, after the word "pension," insert the words "pay, bounty, or allowance."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Fields] if this bill was reported from his committee, introduced by a member of his committee?

Mr. FIELDS. No; the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Taggart] introduced the bill. He is not a member of the committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engross-ment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended.

DAVID KIRCH.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 10255) for the relief of David Kirch.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill. The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws and the laws governing the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, or any branch thereof, David Kirch, now a resident of Naperville, Ill., shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a private in Company E, Ninety-eighth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, on the 28th day of January, 1865: Provided, That no pension shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend by inserting, after the word "pension" in line 11, the words "pay, bounty, or other allowance."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "pension" in line 11 insert the words "pay, bounty, or other allowance."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM A. PERSONS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 15233) for the relief of William A. Persons.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.
The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws and the laws governing the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, or any branch thereof, William A. Persons shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a private of Company I, Second Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Cavalry: Provided, That no pension shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend by inserting after the word "pension," in line 9, the words "pay, bounty, or other allowance."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert after the word "pension," in line 9, the words "pay, bounty, or other allowance."

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the members of the committee if that is not the usual form in which the committee has heretofore reported bills?

Mr. FIELDS. Yes, it is. I did not report the bill. This was an oversight on the part of whoever wrote up the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

JAMES S. RISHER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 15644) for the relief of James S. Risher.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc. That in the administration of the pension laws and the laws governing the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, or any branch thereof, James S. Risher, late of Company F. First Battalion, and Company E. Second Battalion, Eighteenth Regiment United States Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as of Company F. First Battalion, and Company E. Second Battalion, Eighteenth Regiment United States Infantry: Provided, That no pension shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I offer the same amendment to this bill, to insert the words "pay, bounty, or other allowance" after the word "pension" in line 12.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "pension," in line 12, insert the words "pay, bounty, or other allowance."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

HAYS GASKILL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5948) for the relief of Hays Gaskill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, or benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, Hays Gaskill, who was a member of Battery A, Fourth Regiment United States Artillery, under General Order No. 154, Adjutant General's Orders, 1862, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of said battery on the muster out of the same.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend by inserting at the end of line 11 the proviso:

Provided, That no pension, pay, bounty, or other allowance shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of line 11, insert:

Provided, That no pension, pay, bounty, or other allowance shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

CLARENCE H. KNIGHT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 17415) to authorize the President to appoint Clarence H. Knight a captain in the line of the Army.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

MARSHALL M. POOL.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5412) to establish the military record of Marshall M.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?
Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois if he expects this man to obtain a pension if this bill passes? Mr. MANN.

Mr. MANN. I really did not hear the gentleman.
Mr. HAYDEN. Does the gentleman from Illinois expect a pension to be granted to Mr. Pool if this bill is passed?

pension to be granted to Mr. Pool if this bill is passed?

Mr. MANN. I do not know—

Mr. HAYDEN. Because I understand a pension can only be granted for an "honorable" discharge, and this provides for an "honorary" discharge.

Mr. MANN. If the matter comes before the House, I shall ask to amend it by inserting—

Mr. HAYDEN. The gentleman from Illinois is usually so accurate about such matters, I was wondering about this.

Mr. MANN. I am so careful that I have a note of it. It is an error in the reported print of the bill. In the original bill it was printed correctly, but this is an error in the print of the reported bill.

reported bill.

Mr. LANGLEY. I see the title reads "A bill to establish the military record of Marshall M. Pool." That would seem to indicate that he has no military record.

Mr. MANN. It is to correct it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause the name of Marshall M. Pool to be entered on the muster roll of the United States Army as capiain of Illinois Volunteers under date of August 25, 1864, and to issue to said Marshall M. Pool an honorary discharge as captain of Illinois Volunteers and as aid-de-camp on the staff of Byt. Maj. Gen. James H. Wilson, under date of April 23, 1865.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend in line 8 by striking out the word "honorary" and inserting the word "honorary"

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 8, page 1, strike out the word "honorary" and insert the word "honorable."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend by adding at the end of line 11 the usual proviso that has been added to these

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of line 11 insert, "Provided, That no back pay, pension, bounty, or other emoluments shall accrue prior to the passage of this act."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

HATCHIE COON HUNTING AND FISHING CLUB.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 241) to relinquish, release, and quitclaim to the trustees of the Hatchie Coon Hunting and Fishing Club title to certain lands in Poinsett County, Ark.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I notice this bill was introduced on December 6, 1915, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands. On August 18, 1916, Mr. Tillman, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported the bill, and that on August 25, 1916, Mr. TILLMAN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, submitted the following supplemental report. I would like to inquire whether the Committee on Military Affairs and the Committee on the Judiciary, both having reported on the bill, it would be advisable for the Committee on Public Lands, to which the bill was referred, to make a report?

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. Speaker, it is very patent to everybody it is an error. The report was made by Mr. TILLMAN from the Commmittee on Public Lands, and it should read that way, because the Committee on Public Lands alone had jurisdiction of the bill, and the bill was reported favorably by the Committee on Public Lands, and I was requested to make the report.

Mr. MANN. Well, I submit the hour of 10.30 has arrived. Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I would ask the gentleman, unless the gentleman is going to object-

Mr. MANN. I really think we should let it go over.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The hour of 10.30 having arrived, under the rule the House will stand adjourned until tomorrow at 11 o'clock a. m.

Accordingly (at 10 o'clock and 30 minutes) the House adjourned, under its previous order, to meet to-morrow, Tuesday, February 13, 1917, at 11 o'clock a. m.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of War, submitting a tentative draft of amendment to section 3744 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (H. Doc. No. 2048); to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of War, submitting a tentative draft of a provision for consideration in connection with the Army appropriation bill (H. Doc. No. 2049); to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

3.
